WE are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

United States Mails Salt Lake City.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, MAY 31, 1856.

PROPOSALS for conveying the mails of the United States from the first day of December, 1856, to the 30th day of November, 1860, on the following route, will be received at the Contract Office of this Department until 9 A. M. of the 15th of October, 1856, to be decided the next day, to wit:

No. 8911 From Independence, (Mo.) via Fort Kearney and Fort Laramie, in Nebraska Territory, to Salt Lake City, in Utah Territory, 1,150 miles and back, once a month.

Leave Independence the first day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Salt Lake City on the last day of the month at 8 a m;

Leave Salt Lake City on the second day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Independence by the last day of the month.

NOTES.

Bidders are required to inform themselves of the actual distance, the weight and bulk of the mails to be carried, the whole mail required to be taken each trip,) and all other points essential to a correct understanding of their liability for the proper performance of the required service, before making their proposals, which must be guarantied by two responsible persons, certified to as such by a postmaster or judge of a court of record; and contract must be entered into by the successful bidder, with surety, before the 1st day of December, 1856.

No pay will be made for trips not performed, and for each of such omissions not satisfactorily explained three times the pay of the trip may be deducted. For arrivals so far behind time as to break connexion with depending mails, and not sufficiently excused, one fourth of the compensation for the trip is subject to forfeiture. Fines will be imposed, unless the delinquency be promptly and satisfactorily explained, for neglecting to take the mail from or into a post office; for suffering it to be injured, destroyed, robbed, or lost; and for refusing, after demand, to convey the mail as frequently as the contractor runs, or is concerned in running, vehicles on the route. The Postmaster-General may annul the contract for repeated failures to run agreeably to contract, or for disobeying the post office laws or instructions of the Department. The Post master-General may alter the schedule; he may also order an increase of service by allowing therefor a pro rata increase on the contract pay; he may also curtail or discontinue the service in whole or in part, of pro rata decrease of pay, allowing one month's extra compensation on the amount of service dispensed with. Bids should be addressed to the "Second Assistant Postmaster General," superscribed "Proposals for Salt Lake City Mails."

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the transgression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers; s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avènement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

TO WESTERN TRAVELLERS!

Every arrangement for the conveyance of travellers has been made by the undersigned, Stage Proprietor, on the route between St. Joseph and Bluff City.
A line of stages leave both of the above places three times per week, passing through Savannah, Oregon, Linden, Tabor, St. Mary's, Glenwood, and all the intermediate post towns.
The route is furnished with new coaches, experienced and careful drivers, and attentive agents at the several stopping places; and he hopes by strict attention to business to secure a liberal share of public patronage. P. S. Frost.
We have tried the above route and find it good.—ED. fe17 tf

Poetry.

This World is not All Cheerless.

BY EMMA GARRISON.

This world is not all cheerless,
Though sometimes dark and drear:
There's a calm for every tempest,
A smile for every tear;
There's a ray of golden sunshine,
To make each desert bright,
A glittering star to gladden
The deepest, darkest night.

This world is not all cheerless—
The heart most lone and sad,
Has sometimes pleasant memories
To cheer and make it glad:
For love is ever twining
Its roses o'er our way,
And friendship's light is shining
With pure, unchanging ray.

This world is not all cheerless,
Though hope may pass away,
And the things we cherish dearest,
'Neath time's cold hand decay;
For every grief that wrings the heart,
And every tie that's riven,
But bring our footsteps nearer
To happiness and Heaven.

This world is not all cheerless;
Then as we journey on,
Let every heart be breathing
A grateful, gladsome song,
For the rich and countless blessing
Around our pathway shed—
For the hope of bliss in Heaven,
When life's short dream has fled.

The English Small Arms Factory at Enfield.

For many years past the Government has had a small establishment at Enfield. About three years since Mr. Anderson, who had some opportunities of inspecting the manufactory of small arms conducted by the United States Government at Springfield, submitted a detailed report of the working of that establishment to the Government, and strongly recommended the adoption of a similar factory in this country. After very mature deliberation, the suggestion was adopted, and proposed to Parliament for carrying out the plan at the Government buildings at Enfield. Last week the first rifle, complete in every respect, and made entirely by machinery, was produced at the new factory, which is arranged for the manufacture of 250 rifles per day. To those who have not considered the enormous wants of an army and navy it may appear preposterous to require a daily supply of 250 new weapons, but from the report of the Committee it appears that we then required the enormous number of 947,000 staud of rifle muskets. Not less than 347,000 were required to arm the infantry of the line, the militia, the pensioners, the coastguard, the marines, the navy, the Channel Islands militia and the various Colonial corps. These were required for immediate use. It was then considered necessary to keep in store 450,000 stand for home service, and 150,000 for the Colonies, making together a grand total of 947,000 rifle muskets. But beyond this enormous number an annual supply of 30,000 muskets was required to replace those worn out in the service, while at the end of 12 years the whole of this armament would be condemned as unfit for service; so that the production of 78,000 rifles each year, as proposed, at the Enfield factory, will still leave a considerable quantity to be supplied by the contractors.

We have spoken of the first rifle being made complete in all its points by machinery. For several years past fire arms have been made by machinery in the United States; it is only now for the first time that a rifle has been constructed independently of manual labor in this country. The machinery at Enfield, for which we are exclusively indebted to the United States Government, is that portion devoted to the turning and finishing of the "stocks" of the rifles. The other machines employed in working in metal, the turning of the barrels, the punching and polishing of the locks and plates, are, to a great extent, English machines, and are adaptations of the various planing, drilling, and boring machines of Messrs. Whitworth & Fairbairn, and other engineers. The "stocking" machines are 18 in number, and the stock, before it arrives at its finished state, has to pass in succession, through each of these machines. Such, however, is the perfection of the machinery employed, that a rude block of walnut wood, the length of the rifle, and about 2 1-2 inches in thickness, is converted in 20 minutes into a completely finished stock, with grooves for the barrel and the ramrod, screw holes for the lock plates, a recess for the reception of the lock and all its machinery, everything in short which is required to be done for the fitter. No description of the machinery without the assistance of engravings would suffice to convey an adequate idea of its nature. The whole of these machines were manufactured by a firm in Massachusetts, and their cost was $35,000.

Mr. Clark, who was formerly superintendent of the Government works at Springfield, has the charge of this department. The next series of machines is that devoted to the making and finishing of the lock plates. The plate, after having been struck out in its rough form by a steam hammer, passes through not less than 25 different machines before it is ready for fixing to the separate portions of the lock. Each of these machines is attended to by a boy, and an outlay of £2. 3s. 6d. is sufficient to complete 250 of these lock plates. The other portions of the lock, such as the "tumbler," the "bridles," "main springs," "swivels," "sears," "sear springs," and "hammers," require each of them to go through about the same number of processes as the lock plate. The whole of these machines are in one spacious, well ventilated room of about 250 feet square; they are all worked by steam power, and when fully employed, will present one of the most curious and interesting spectacles of machinery in motion to be met with in this country.

At the lower end of the room are a number of machines, constructed for finishing off bayonets. This portion of the factory is not less interesting than that which we have already noticed. The number of processes through which the bayonet is required to pass before it is fitted to gleam and glitter in the sunlight on parade, or to do its murderous mission in the field, is thirty. In the forge-room it is squeezed while in a state of red heat into a bar of triangularly shaped iron; again it is heated, rolled, grooved, and tapered. Passing from the fire, the metal is "pickled" in a strong solution of sulphuric acid, then it is tortured in a reverberating furnace until the metal has become so soft and so doctile as to be easily bent like a bow by the hand. But it is not sufficient that the metal should be put into one furnace to be softened, it must pass directly after into an annealing fire to be hardened. Thus hammered, and rolled, and grooved, and tapered, and pickled, and softened, and hardened, the bayonet is handed over to the tender mercies of planing and grinding machines, which take off the most minute inequality in its surface, give sharpness to the edges of the blades, cut out the grooves more truly, and give the ripping point to the queen of weapons.

It is not done with yet; the polisher has yet to put upon the murderous blade a lustre and polish equal to that of the brightest silver, and the stainer has to give to the hilt of the weapon that dark, rich brown color which will make it correspond with the barrel of the rifle to which it is to be attached. In all these processes, however, we have spoken only of the actual blades of the bayonet; there are slots and notches and grooves to be formed in the part where it attaches to the rifle, which require an amount of care and nicety in manufacture by various machines equally as great as the more destructive portion, and which can only be understood and appreciated by a careful inspection of the different machines. Formerly the Government used to pay from seven to nine shillings for each bayonet. They can be produced at the Enfield factory at a cost of two thirds less than the prices previously paid to the trade.

The "rinsheries" and furnace rooms are unrivalled by any in the country, on account of the completeness of the arrangements, and the appliances which they possess for economizing labor. Each of the forges is supplied with air from a blast pipe, which may be turned on and regulated with the utmost nicety; it may be made to roar like the hurricane in the glowing furnaces, or breathe like zephyr upon the smouldering embers of the forge. The engine room is in every respect a model room of the kind. The engine room is of 80 horses' power, and "fitted" as George Robbins would have said, "with all the latest improvements of mechanical and engineering science."

At another end of the building Vulcans of the blackest dye are constantly at work in boring the barrels of the rifles. The machinery for this is worked by a huge overshot waterwheel of 25 horse power. No site could be better adapted for a manufactory than that occupied by these works. It stands upon an island formed by a small stream, which leaving the River Lea, makes a short circuit around the Government ground and again joins the river. There is therefore a large amount of available water power. Another water-wheel is in course of erection of 25 horse power, and also another auxiliary steam engine of 25 horse power, thus giving an aggregate power of 155 horses for driving the whole of the machinery. Near the building where the barrels are rolled is a small temporary structure, where an individual labors as a maker of sword blades. A strange interest attaches to this person; he is one of the four men who alone are employed to make the sword-blades for the Government, and of these four, three, including the one now at Enfield, are brothers. There would appear to be some peculiar mystery in this art, which is a secret except to this small number, and they guard with jealous care any attempted inovation upon their monopoly, and will have no man to work with them as an assistant whom they do not themselves approve.

The blade maker at Enfield earns on an average £10 a week; he receives 2s. 3d. for each sword blade, and he informed us that he could make 18 blades a day. The works already completed, or in progress, consist of a large stock store on the south front—a room upward of 100 feet in length, and about 30 feet in width. Then there is a large metal store, 240 feet in length, on the east front; and another at the return end, 120 by 40 feet. There is another storehouse, 220 by 30 feet, which is in course of alteration and enlargement, and a building of corrugated iron for the barrel boring and turning mill, about 80 by 60 feet. Then there are two new grinding-rooms on the south front, an engine and boiler house, with a chimney shaft of 100 feet in height, already completed; and on the north side, fronting the river, two new grinding-rooms are to be built.—[Times.

A Lake Steamboat.

The Buffalo Republican contains a minute description of the steamer Plymouth Rock, of the Michigan Central Line, one of the finest boats on the Northern Lakes. We extract the following:

The Plymouth Rock is three hundred and sixty feet in length, and has a tonnage of twenty-five hundred tons. Her grand cabin extends almost the whole length of the boat, and is furnished without regard to expense, with marbled topped rosewood furniture, brocatelle, satin, plush, silk and embroidered easy chairs, ottomans, tete-a-tetes and divans; the floors are carpeted with rich tapestry; the painting, wood-work, moulding and gilding are all that art can furnish or admire. The state-rooms are not berths, but actual rooms fifteen feet deep, thoroughly lighted and ventilated, with rich carpets, marble-topped washboards and boilers, with water cold or hot, supplied from the engines, and rosewood French bedsteads. On this deck also are the bathing departments, where warm or cold, or shower baths can be procured at a moments notice. At the head of the grand cabin is the silver room, where some eight thousand dollars worth of magnificently designed silver ware may be seen, which, however, is but a small portion of what is used for the boat. On the deck below is the ladies' cabin, with reception rooms, etc., connecting also, by a stairway, with the dining room, which is on the lower deck. The cabin is also fitted up with double rooms, and is marked with the same magnificence of furniture and adornment that distinguishes the immense cabin above. The steward's department exhibits a scientific arrangement for convenience, and with its steam apparatus for heating, its pastry, glass, china and silver, its cleanliness, perfection and magnitude, repays examination. In every sleeping room there are life preservers for each inmate, and the precautions against accident are so complete, as to do away forever with the fear of accident in any shape. Seven fire engines, of great power, with hose attached, are constantly on hand, and can be worked either by steam or hand within one minute from the moment of alarm. The usual number of life-boats are also attached. The boat is but one of three of the same size, the same tonnage, the same furnishing, and the same perfection throughout, belonging to this line.

Burning of the Northern Indiana.

The Detroit Advertiser gives us some additional incidents connected with the disaster. That paper says: Mrs. Bridget Glynn, with three small children, was saved. She rushed to the after part of the boat, intending to get out upon the guards and remain there as long as possible. On looking over, she discovered a man hanging on at the point where she desired to get down, and by many a lusty cuff and threat she tried to drive him away from his post, but he hung on, and she went to another part, placed two of her children upon her back, bade them cling fast, threw the third overboard, and leaped after it. The two on her back maintained their grasp; she caught the third, and they were buoyed up by clothes until a boat came along and rescued them, and took her enemy from the guard of the burning boat.

One passenger, who had his wife and a son four years of age on board was unable to get the cork from his life preserver so that he might inflate it. He procured a life preserver for his wife, it was rendered worthless by leaking. He then let his wife down into the water by a rope, and, with his boy in his arms, leaped overboard himself. His boy grasped him tightly around the throat, choaking him and pulling him under water. Feeling that he could not save both, by a violent effort he loosed his son's arms from his neck, and the little fellow sank, probably to rise no more. The mother and father were saved, but with saddened hearts.

A woman jumped into the water with a child in her arms, and clung to the steamer, although the heat was so great, till taken off by the boats—saving herself and little one. Several of the passengers and crew were burned more or less. The third engineer of the steamer was asleep when the fire broke out. He was somewhat burned in getting out of his room; he jumped into the water, dived under the wheel, and swam about till picked up.

The Rochester Democrat of the 21st inst. says: Among the passengers on board the ill-fated Northern Indiana were Mr. Dawson, wife and child, of Brockport, in this county. They were removing to Chicago. Mr. Dawson was among those lost. Mrs. Dawson got a life preserver, and inflating it, put it upon her daughter, a child of about seven years. The mother then threw her child into the water, and afterward jumped overboard herself. After floating about awhile she got hold of the wheel of the boat, and was soon afterwards rescued by some means that she could not explain, and taken on board of the steamer Mississippi. She saved nothing of her baggage, and was destitute of everything. The loss of her husband, however, was the greatest of her sudden calamities. The passengers on the boat, pitying her misfortunes and her destitution, contributed $50 for her relief. She returned home in the cars, and arrived this morning—a forlorn, heart-broken woman. She is without relatives in this country, and returns to Brockport, where are her only acquaintances in America. We are sure that she will meet with proper sympathy and relief at the hands of the good people of that village. Mr. Dawson was an industrious, respectable man, an iron moulder by trade.

Mr. Curtis H. Warner, of Greece, brother of Daniel Warner, was on board the N. I. He lost his baggage and $1,250 in money, with which he intended to purchase cattle at the West.

Effects of Cleanliness.

Count Rumford, the celebrated philosopher, whose writings have been of greater value to mankind than the abstruse speculations of a host of metaphysicians, thus described the advantages of cleanliness: "With what care and attention do the feathered race wash themselves, and put their plumage in order; and how perfectly neat, clean, and elegant do they appear. Among the beasts of the field, we find that those which are the most cleanly are generally the most gay and cheerful, or are distinguished by a certain air of tranquillity and contentment, and singing birds are always remarkable for the neatness of their plumage, so great is the effect of cleanliness upon man, that it extends even to his moral character. Virtue never dwelt long with filth; nor do I believe there ever was a person scrupulously attentive to cleanliness who was a consumate villain."

The Life of an Actress.

BY REV. HENRY GILES.

The follies or the vices of the poor call for our pity or our grief, but not for our scorn or our smiles. In his poem of "The Borough," Crabbe is tremendously severe on players, and in his lacerating description of the poor strollers whom he satires, there is unquestionable power; but when power is turned against the weak and the helpless, every generous and pitying nature rebels against tyrannic genius. The most prosperous in the theatrical profession illustrate so strikingly the vicissitude and transciency of our human state, that I can connect them with only sober associations; the unsuccessful, whose work is hard, and whose pay is as uncertain as it is scanty, I can regard only with sadness and compassion. There is so much of the glare of life connected with the stage, that it fills me with most solemn thoughts. To-day the god and goddess of the scene, stifled with crowds, inflated with applause, tread with ecstasy a giddy and an airy height; that height has been attained, often through years of labor, trials, fear, want and suffering; now wealth flows in upon them with most ample measures; plaudits hail their triumphs and intoxicated joys is theirs to suffocation. All these will soon be gone and silent; a brief enthusiasm will give them to the tomb.

I heard the wonderful Malibran in her latest concert. I listened to her dying song. She poured fourth her impassioned soul, "in linked sweetness long drawn out," through all the mazes of music. A glorious crowd was before her of jeweled and joyous beauty; light and gladness gave enchantment to the hour, and thousands of excited hearts were raised to the delirium of delight. At this moment, life in her who caused the pleasure was throbbing to its close. Encore upon encore echoed in shouts that seemed to rend the ceiling. The poor singer came on, elated by the cheers; sustained by wonted fervor, her sinking form arose living and elastic; her transcendent eye kindled with even unusual fire; her magical tones swelled and sank, and floated into wilder ecstasy; again the building rang with plaudits—they were her triumph and her knell. I might have gone from this place to the stage door of the next theatre; and there I might have seen a weary creature, coming out from her night's unnoticed labor, and she was also going home to die. No praise cheered her spirit; no echoes, growing fainter, lingered on her ear; no soul the next evening would care for her return.

I might have seen a trembling girl, such as Crabbe, in the section I have mentioned, describes with a pathos that compensates for his severity towards the other members of her company. I might have seen this trembling girl, who, a moment before, was blazing in tinsel, amidst gas and guilding, stealing to her cold and shabby lodging; the paint washed from her cheek, and leaving the palor of consumption in its stead; the mimic smile of gladness passed away, to be succeeded by real tears of nature; tears that now may flow in freedom, and flow in silence. Shame upon the soul, that could give her afflicted lot only a hard thought and a hard word; shame upon the pharisaical, that could discern no motive in her career but vanity, when charity, that "thinketh no evil," might suggest impulses more worthy, the necessities, perhaps, of a widowed mother, or a sickly father, or of helpless and orphaned brothers and sisters. Shame upon the unmanly insolence that impeded her way; shame upon the unmanly insult that crimsons her cheek; shame upon the dastardly suspicion, native to the meanness of a small soul, and to the filth of a corrupted heart, that supposes the unprotected always to be vicious, the poor to be without honor, and the weak to be proper objects of foul intentions.

Washing fine Woolen Articles.

The gall of oxen and cows has been used from time immemorial for removing grease and dirt, from the woolen goods of delicate colors. Its action is the same as soap in removing the grease, while it is almost inert regarding the colors. In the hands of skillful persons, however, soap is just as safe, and is more pleasant to use because the gall has an offensive odor. To use the gall, it should be mixed with just as much rain-water as will allow the woolen articles to be squeezed and handled freely. It requires considerable handling of the article in the liquor before the gall acts thoroughly. After the dirt and grease are removed, the dress, shawl, or whatever it may be that is washed in it, should be thoroughly rinsed in clean soft water. It will take three or four fresh supplies of water to remove all traces of the gall, from the goods, and none must be left in on account of its offensive smell. This is a very safe process of washing fine woolen articles of light green, blue, and various other delicate colors. Children's dresses of fine merino cloth may be safely washed in this manner. One gall will suffice for a small dress.

Another plan, and a better one for washing fine articles of dress is to dissolve some fine soap in hot water, and allow it to become quite cold, then wash the article in this, taking care not to rub it violently. The soapsuds should be quite strong, or the soap will be decomposed by the grease in the article to be washed. The suds must be thoroughly rinsed out of the articles in cold soft water. Scented soap is the best to use for such delicate operations, because it imparts an agreeable perfume to the article of dress washed.

Another process for washing fine muslins of delicate colors, is to take some wheat bran—about two quarts for a lady's dress—and boil it for half an hour in some soft water, then allow it to cool, strain the liquor, and use it as a substitute for soap suds. It removes dirt like soap, is inert regarding the colors, and requires to be rinsed out in only one clean water, and starching is unnecessary. This is the best method of washing fine muslins and calicoes. A great number of beautiful dresses are often spoiled in washing by the discharge of their colors, from the use of warm suds. In all cases, the suds and rinsing water for colored articles of dress should be used as cold as possible.—[Scientific American.

An Exquisite Story by Lamartine.

In the tribe of Neggdeh there was a horse whose fame was spread far and near; and a Bedouin of another tribe, by name Daher, desired extremely to possess it. Having offered in vain for it his camels and his whole wealth, he hit at length upon the following device, by which he hoped to gain the object of his desire.

He resolved to stain his face with the juice of an herb, to clothe himself in rags, to tie his legs and neck together so as to appear like a lame beggar. Thus equipped, he went to wait for Naber, the owner of the horse, who, he knew, was to pass that way. When he saw Naber approaching on his beautiful steed, he cried out in a weak voice:

"I am a poor stranger; for three days I have been unable to move from this point to seek for food. I am dying—help, and Heaven will reward you!"

The Bedouin kindly offered to take him upon his horse and carry him home; but the rogue replied: "I cannot rise: I have no strength left."

Naber, touched with pity, dismounted, led his horse to the spot, and with great difficulty set the seeming beggar upon his back. But no sooner did Daher feel himself in the saddle than he set spurs to the horse and galloped off, calling out as he did so: "It is I, Daher: I have got the horse, and I am off with it!"

Naber called out to him to stop and listen. Certain of not being pursued, he halted at a short distance from Naber, who was armed with a spear.

"You have taken my horse," said Naber. "Since Heaven has willed it, I wish you joy with it; but I do conjure you never to tell how you obtained it."

"And why not?" said Daher.

"Because," said the noble Arab, "another man might be really ill, and men would fear to help him. You would be the cause of many refusing to perform an act of charity, for fear of being duped as I have been."

Struck with shame at these words, Daher, was silent for a moment; then springing from the horse, returned it to its owner, embracing him. Naber made him accompany him to his tent, where they spent a few days together and became friends for life.

Late from Salt Lake.

Mr. Gilbert, of the firm of Gilbert & Gerrish, arrived in Atchison on Tuesday last, direct from the Salt Lake. He left Salt Lake City on the 5th of June. He represents every thing in the valley to be in a flourishing condition, and the prospects for an abundant harvest is better than ever before known. In view of the large crops, business has much improved and the merchants are all doing well. Livingston & Kinkade's train which left Atchison this season, was met at Fremont's Spring, getting along finely. The Indians on the route are now very friendly and made no attempts whatever to interfere with Mr. Gilbert or any of his party. Mr. Gilbert left his wagons beyond the Big Blue, and rode in from that stream to Atchison in 19 hours, on a mule. He started a train of goods from this place for the Lake last week and will probably send out more before the close of the Season.

Fearful Railroad Accident in Georgia.

The mail train from Savannah and Macon, due in this city at 3 o'clock yesterday morning, did not arrive until 4 o'clock in the afternoon, in consequence of an accident which occurred to the train on the Central road. It appears that as the train was proceeding at a brisk pace on Wednesday night, soon after 10 o'clock, and when within a short distance of the 130 mile post, the engine McAlpin and two passenger cars, containing about thirty persons, were thrown into the culvert, a distance of fifteen feet. The accident was caused through the rains having made the earth give way in this place. A scene of great confusion ensued, and it was a considerable time before the amount of damage could be fully ascertained. A young man named Baker, who acted as fireman, and whose parents reside in Macon, was killed on the spot; and Mr. Hall, the engineer, and a fireman from North Carolina, whose name we could not learn, were found to be very severely, if not dangerously, injured. All the passengers fortunately escaped with a few bruises.—[Augusta Sentinel, July 18.

Mutual Forbearance.

That house will be kept in a turmoil where there is no toleration of each other's errors, no lenity shown to failings, no meek submission to injuries, no soft answer to turn away wrath. If you lay a single stick of wood in the grate and apply fire to it, it will go out; put on another and they will burn; and half a dozen, and you will have a blaze. There are other fires subject to the same conditions. If one member of a family gets into a passion, and is left alone, he will cool down, and possibly be ashamed and repent. But oppose temper to temper; pile on the fuel on the fuel; draw in others of the group, and let one harsh answer be followed by another, and there will soon be a blaze which will enwrap them in all its burning heat.

Etching on Ivory.

In order to this process, the ivory is covered with wax, and the design traced with a style, and then eaten in by a strong solution of nitrate of silver made by dissolving silver in nitric acid and water. Exposure to light, after the removal of the wax by hot distilled water, will blacken the color of the traces. By substituting gold, platinum or copper nitrates, other colors may be obtained.

Sir J. Franklin's Expedition.—A memorial, signed by a number of the most eminent men of science in England, has been presented to the Admiralty praying for a "final and limited" search after the relics of the Erebus and Terror.

The Ontario Reporter says that the cars on the Grand Trunk Railroad will commence running between Whitby and Toronto on the 1st of August next.

"Hans, what is the matter?" "De sorrel wagon has run away mit de green horse and broke de axle-tree of de brick house what stands by de corner-lamp-post across the telegraph."

The latest case of indolence is that related by an exchange, of a man named John Hole who was so lazy that in writing his name, he simply used the letter J., and then punched a hole through the paper.

Principles—On These We Build.

THE mass of mankind have been so often deceived by individuals of great pretention, that they have wisely come to the conclusion that it is better far to seek after correct principles, and build upon them, than to hunt up some great somebody and trust to whatever promises he might think proper to make. Political aspirants have found out this disposition in the people and take care to keep before their minds, in electioneering seasons, that they seek suffrages not for any personal superiority or family claim they possess over the opposition candidate, but from the superiority of the principles they advocate and the advantages to be reaped from their practical adoption by the world. This is the understanding of honest, intelligent politicians and the motive of their action under different banners. The noise and hallooing in favor of one candidate, and opposite demonstrations against another, may be, and undoubtedly is, in many cases, the honest expression of conscientious convictions; but such arises more frequently from the hopes that some have of sharing the patronage and pickings with one more than with the other. Honest, upright conviction does not often display itself in that burning zeal that some have for calumniating character.

What is true in the sphere of politics is equally true in the history of all religions. With sober-minded, intelligent and reflecting religious persons, it is principles and not men; and however much we may blush for humanity's sake to acknowledge it, it is nevertheless true that many persons range themselves under one religious banner or another, according to the prospects of pickings; and another class can be found listening to the "Rev." B. or P., from no other reason than that their ears are tickled with the popular gentleman's eloquence.

Connected with religious denominations and political parties there is, consequently, a class of persons whose adherence to their profession depends entirely upon their facility of accomplishing their selfish aims. When they fail in their object the public is not unfrequently bored to death by awful revelations clothed in eloquence strong and fierce. We have often been treated to something rich and racy from folks who have by some means or another got connected with Mormonism, but ultimately gave up and made awful disclosures. We have always thought ourself well posted on matters and things, but they have enlightened our darkness frequently by the brightness of their revelations.

A correspondent of the St. Louis Republican, writing from Fort Laramie on the 14th of June, intimates that there has been a winnowing time in Utah. He says:

"We have met with several parties of the Saints returning from Salt Lake to the States. All we met gave a terrible picture of the state of affairs there now. The poorer classes had to subsist for months on roots—such as thistle, seco, &c.—which the Indians gather and sell to them for one dollar per bushel. The grasshoppers, which caused the famine last year, have commenced again this season and bid fair to destroy the present crop of wheat and vegetables. Many of them appeared very much dissatisfied with the Mormon faith and said that they had been deceived—that the poor had everything taken from them, in the shape of tithes and taxes, to support a few leaders in the church. Be this as it may, many of those we met were real objects of pity and gave evidence, in their utter destitution, that Mormonism affords but little food for the body; at least, let it be as it will with the soul."

What we have said of other parties is applicable to ourselves as a people. There are thousands of men and women that nothing but a deep conscientious conviction that Mormonism was the work of the God of Abraham could have ever drawn them to cast in their lot with the Church, and nothing but the same abiding conviction could retain their connection with it. An ancient prophet says, "God is a consuming fire," and for certain we and thousands of others have found that Mormonism will burn up and consume a man's calculations of "gold, hay or stubble" if he build upon them. We know some have embraced Mormonism from unworthy motives, others, good and pious persons, from their conviction of its divinity, but without having counted the cost of adherence to an unpopular movement. Such persons, before they became associated with Mormonism, moved in but one sphere, lived in but one influence, and were preached to and pampered till they have formed all sorts of notions. When they cursorily glanced at the Bible, they fancied, because they were simple believers, that all the blessings sealed upon faithful partriarchs, and the rich promises made to the faithful, diligent believer in God's kingdom, throughout multiplied generations, from Adam to John, were all theirs, and so they dreamed of nothing less than being heirs to every good thing, without remembering the straight and narrow way in which those persons had walked to obtain those blessings and promises.

So long as the atmosphere is tranquil and every thing goes on smoothly, such persons jostle along without a great deal of trouble; but when the clouds lower, persecution threatens, and grasshoppers and crickets eat up their crops, then Mormonism turns out to be everything but what it really is, and they have been awfully deceived. The clipping from the Republican is about a fair telegraphic sample of what passes from peper to paper throughout the States from time to time. We don't write now to find fault with the statements; we think it quite likely that some folks are on their way from Utah, and think it not improbable that the correspondent faithfully represents their appearance and language; but what astonishes us is, that intelligent folks should be so ready to grasp such things and hold them forth as so much to tell against Mormonism. It may be that we are sadly deficient in the quality of judgment, but what seems to others an argument against Mormonism and Utah is precisely to us a stronger circumstantial evidence in their favor.

The ancient Apostle after delivering his testimony in favor of the divine mission of Jesus warned his hearers to save themselves from that untoward generation, another of the same qurom told his brethren that salvation was not to those who merely wished it but to those who would work it out with fear and trembling. The Mormons have realized all the difficulties, and had to overcome all the obstacles that the people of God anciently had to contend with, and many times in their history if they have not subsisted on faith it has at least buoyed their hopes and enabled them to pass through very straight places.

No one need be deceived on Mormonism—the bright side of the picture has not been presented to the public, and the dark side kept from them. We venture to say that no class of people with the same limited means and under the same circumstances have used the Press so extensively as the Mormons to publish not only their principles, but also a full and correct history of the Church since its organization. What is kept back? Of the past there is a faithful record before the public, published both in this country and in England, and no man is spared. If any one, big or little, has taken a step that other societies would cover over, there it stands recorded just as plain as patriarchal history, showing that it has been principles and not men that have guided the Church, and have been the foundation of all its movements. No one need cry out they have been deceived with regard to the present state of things in Utah. There is a paper published in G. S. L. City that contains, epistles, proclamations, teachings, exhortations and verbatum reports of discourses delivered by the leading men of the Church, which no one can read without understanding the true state of things in Utah. Not long since an intimate friend from whom we expected a long letter wrote us a very short one, remarking it was unnecessary for him to add more as the Deseret News was a mirror of the state of things at home. Let the folks there be diligent in keeping the commandments of God and carrying out the instructions of their leaders and President Young, or somebody else will readily acknowledge it to their honor, but let them forget God and His commandments and the vials of wrath are as freely poured out and their backsliding and unworthy conduct as freely depicted; even plainer than some of our cotemporaries like to read it. The state of things there is not unknown to any but to those who are too lazy to read, or when they have read it, too lazy to take the labor of thinking and reflecting over it. We embraced Mormonism not from any love for Joseph Smith, or the hopes of temporal advantages. Joseph's name had been only sounded in our ears associated with false Prophet and wicked man, and our acceptance of his faith was made with the assurance of the loss of all things, and our name cast out as evil, but it was principle we were after and not men, nor wordly agrandizement. If any persons here or elsewhere have embraced Mormonism with the hope solely of bettering their condition, in a temporal point of view, and sliding down the stream of time in ease and comfort they have made a wrong calculation and we, or any other in authority, are not responsible for their blunder. We have spoken plainly and written plainly on these matters time and again, and if some fancy to themselves that flowery beds of ease are awaiting their wearied limbs at the termination of their journey, over the plains they have themselves to thank for the illusion. In Utah are located some of the finest and noblest men and women with whom we ever associated and never hope or wish to meet with their superior, men and women who are ever willing to assist the willing heart, but when we have said so we do not forget they are but human, and only attempt to carry out what they profess, and for certain carrying every lazy loafer that might come to their arms from the ends of the earth, has never been a part of that profession. The purest of men when he gave a strong hit at something opposed to the expectations of his followers, scared them by shoals so much so that he had to question his first man and ask him dost thou also leave me Peter. In fact, it may do all very well for some persons to be Shaker, Quaker, or anything that suits their notions and whims, but Mormonism can't be dodged, it is the corner stone that tries all men. It shows up the best of a good man, and the worst of a bad one. "All who run don't obtain the prize."

A Friendly Notice

THE American Celt of the 19th, devotes a liberal share of its space to Mormonism. About two columns is extracted from that portion of Col. Stansbury's "report" that treats of polygamy in Utah, and three more of editorial on "the Mormons at the door of the Union."

When the paper was handed to us we gave a cursory glance at the editorial, and had some thoughts of noticing it at length; but after a moment's reflection our self-respect would not permit us to break a lance with such a contemptable foeman. A recommendation to government to "relinquish toleration" becomes an admirer of the Spanish Inquisition, Bartholomew massacre and the long black list of bretish murders and base infamy associated with the history of the "woman on the scarlet-colored beast with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornications; but ill becomes a Jesuitical American Celt, whose very existence on our shores is considered by many too liberal an act of toleration. Well does the writer of that article know that Jesuitism and all that smells Rome is as deeply hated by hundreds of thousands in the United States, as is Mormonism by the American Celt. But we must stop, the article is unworthy of the space we have already given to it, and summed up is,—Impudence, Ignorance, and Bigotry, redolent with—oh, what I would do if I could.

California.

WE have this week exciting news from the Golden State. The Vigilants have been once more in arms, and made quite an inroad upon the government forces in San Francisco.

The Vigilance Committee on the 21st ult., issued an order for the apprehension of one James R. Maloney better known as Ruben Maloney, whose antecedents had drawn upon him their particular attention. The order was placed in the hands of their Marshall, Sterling A. Hopkins. Mr. H. accompanied by some others found Maloney in the office of Dr. Ashe, Naval Agent, corner of Kearney and Washington streets. Several persons were with Maloney among whom Mr. David S. Terry, one of the Judges of the Supreme Court. Being armed and not recoguizing Mr. Hopkin's authority they repulsed him; he therefore returned to the Committee rooms for assistance leaving his associates to watch the office and see that the parties did not escape. On the promise of a reinforcement Mr. H. returned immediately and saw Maloney and the others well armed on their way to the armory of the "Law and Order" companies corner of Dupont and Jackson streets. In the effort to take Maloney Judge Terry enterposed his gun, Hopkins seized it and endeavored to wrest it from him: during the scuffle Terry gave Hopkins a frightful cut with a large broad bladed knife in the neck. The wounded man was taken by his friends to the Pennsylvania Engine House and immediately attended to by several physicians: Terry in the meantime with his associates took refuge in the armory. The Vigilant bell gave the alarm and the streets were immediately filled with armed men. The Western Standard gives the following detailed account of the affair:

"No sooner was the blow struck than a swift courier conveyed the intelligence to the Committee rooms, and the alarm bell was sounded. Thousands at once obeyed the summons, and the wildest enthusiasm prevailed throughout the city. Several draymen on Front street were loading up goods to be shipped by the up-river boats, and on the alarm being given they stripped off their harness, leaving their drays half loaded, mounted their steeds and took their places in the ranks of the cavalry. The streets in every direction glistened with bright bayonets, or flying horsemen who were hurrying to the scene of action.

In less than fifteen minutes after the first stroke of the bell, the Committee had detailed armed men and completely surrounded the four buildings where the "Law and Order" party were supposed to have arms deposited. The most extraordinary feature of the whole operation was the astonishing rapidity with which the forces of the Committee were under arms and on their march in the different directions designated. Every man wore a white ribbon on his left breast to designate him as a member of the Committee. In about thirty minutes after the alarm, the military had possession and control of the entire grounds about that corner, and armed men were stationed upon the roof of the building and every approach was securely guarded, so as to prevent any possibility of escape. Dr. Ashe came to one of the windows, and stated that they wished to see some of the members of the Executive Committee, to confer upon the terms of surrender. Five of that body soon arrived, and after some negotiations, Judge Terry and Molony were surrendered, with all the arms in the building—numbering about 300, into the hands of the Committee, and by them escorted to their rooms on Sacramento street. The streets were most densely crowded, and considerable curiosity was manifested by the citizens to get a glimpse of the Judge of the highest Court of Judicature in the State, as he passed in the carriage to the rooms. They were escorted by about 200 men well armed, accompanied with several pieces of artillery.

After these men were secured, the Committee turned their attention to the recovery of the arms from the other arsenals of the "Law and Order" party. The armory on the corner of Clay and Kearney streets was invested by a large force of the Committee's army. In front of the building two cannon were placed. Inside of the buildings there were portions of several companies, amounting to upwards of a hundred men, under the command of C. I. West. A demand was made upon him, but he delayed for some time coming to terms. Resistance, however, was hopeless, and he finally ordered his men to march up to the door, and hand over their arms and equipments to the Committee. The latter obtained from this armory, it is said, about 250 stand of excellent rifles and muskets. Afterwards the building was thoroughly searched for ammunition. This course was taken with the different armories throughout the city, and the "Law and Order" party were thus left without a weapon. Those in the armories at the time they were surrounded were kept there until about 10 P. M., when they were all marched down, escorted by large battalions of armed men, cavalry and infantry, to the rooms of the Committee, and many of them were handcuffed and kept throughout the night. Some of the officers were liberated on their parole of honor.

On Friday afternoon the Committee having received information that a quantity of arms were at the State Prison, and that it was the intention of the officers of government to have them brought down here, sent of a posse of men on board a schooner to overhaul the vessel on which the arms had been placed. The schooner bore down on her and ordered her to heave to. The other party, seeing that it was useless to resist, consented to be boarded. After considerable search they found several cases of arms and a large number of swords and sabres concealed under the brick with which she was loaded. They were transferred to the other vessel, and conveyed to the Committee Rooms."

The Vigilance Executive Committee have been busily engaged in collecting the evidence in the affair and promise a fair investigation. Mr. Hopkins has had every attention and the best medical skill, but remains in a very precarious state. The public sentiment was almost universally unfavorable to Terry, and considerable talk of life for life should the wounded man die, but this feeling has been in a measure modified by the efforts of the judge's friends, who have endeavored to show that he was acting as an officer of the government of the State. Mrs. Terry, being denied the privilege of visiting her husband after the first few days of his incarceration, has been in the receipt of letters from him, one of which she has published in the papers. In this he admits that the country would lose little by the application of the law on Maloney, but opposition to his apprehension was purely from his sense of duty as an officer of government to protect the meanest citizen from violence. It is very evident from his letter that his hopes are small of being liberated. He seems to have been a marked man before this unfortunate circumstance placed him in the hands of the Committee, which cannot in any way favor him now. There have likewise been several murders and robberies in the city, but they attract little attention, as the Vigilance is on the alert.

The San Francisco Alta says:

In order to keep our eastern friends advised of all the shipments by the Committee, we again give the black list, with all the improvements and additions, up to the latest moment.

The following will show the result of the labors of the Committee to date, so far as expulsion of notorious persons is concerned:

James P. Casey, executed.

John Lawler, "
T. B. Cunningham, " brought to New York in the Illinois.
Alexander Purple, shipped on the Sierra Nevada.
James Hennessey, "
Tom Mulloy, " Frank Murray, " Jack McGuire, "
Wm. Hamilton, "
Philander Brace, "
Jas. Cusick, ordered to leave, but refused to go.
J. W. Bagley, " "
J. R. Maloney, left in John L. Stevens; brought to New York.

Brooks and Burlingame.

The Brooks and Sumner excitement of the last few months has about died out and made room for the Brooks and Burlingame tragedy—that was to be, and which, by the bye, has created with the exception of "Indignation Meetings," quite as much excitement as the former. Those who have noticed the proceedings in Congress will have observed that Mr. Brooks's canning of Senator Sumner inspired honorable members with, if not dread, some idea that free speech in Congress was dangerous. While the subject of expulsion of the offender was before the House each party had its say and not unfrequently the excitement of debate created sentiments that might have been better unexpressed. Mr. Brooks seemed jealous of his reputation and exceeding watchful lest anything reflecting on him as a gentleman should go to the world. His first attention was consecrated to watching Col. Webb to see what he would send to The Courier and Inquirer on the affray. If we mistake not, he sent to the Col. to enquire what he had written or if he had written something he supposed was from his pen in the paper. The Col. had not then done so, but informed him that on such a day in the Courier and Enquirer there would be an article on the subject over his signature. Mr. Brooks was fortunately satisfied with the article and expressed himself satisfied—coffee and pistols for two was therefore reserved for another occasion. Mr. Woodruff from Connecticut spoke disparagingly of Mr. Brooks course, on which the latter immediately dispatched his friend Mr. Savage to enquire if Mr. W. recognised the Code of Honor, fortunately he did not and was in no hurry to take lessons or we might have had to record the loss of a lawmaker. Mr. Bingham the following day, if we mistake not, took the liberty of speaking freely on the affray on which Mr. Brooks rose in the House and enquired if he meant so and so, but on disclaiming such an application of his words Mr. Brooks said he was satisfied and sat down. On the 21st June Mr. Burlingame made his speech on the affray and gave umbrage to Mr. Brooks and his friends. Some time after, as we noticed last week, officious persons on both sides have done the best crowing they could, and represented the South and North triumphant according to the amount of steam they could raise and a certain class of folks to hear them, till the two honorable gentlemen found it necessary to have "an arrangement." Mr. Burlingame by the advice of his infinite friend the Hon. Lewis D. Campbell set the Canada side of Niagara Falls for their meeting and left Washington to avoid being apprehended. Mr. Brooks would'nt go it, and was apprehended, gave bail he would not fight in the District of Columbia and published his version of the whole affair, declaring he would have no more to do with Mr. Burlingame unless he invited him to a meeting and in that case he was ready at any time. Mr. Burlingame who had got to New York awaiting further information read this in the papers, returned to Washington, was apprehended, promised not to fight there or elsewhere, published his version of the affair, dismissed Mr. Brooks altogether from his acquaintance and informed the public that his self-respect required him henceforth never to recognize Preston S. Brooks, "save to do him a kindness" if that should ever be in his power. Here rests the matter for the present.

The Mormon Camp near Iowa City.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Evening Post gives the following sketch of a recent visit to the Mormon camp:

The camp, as viewed from the brow of a neighboring hill, which commands a wide sweep of country, presents a fine spectacle. Over one hundred tents, and perhaps as many covered wagons, with their spires and arches of dazzling white—contrast well with the green sward of the prairie and the sparkling ripples of the river running close beside.

The camp is reached by a side road, diverging from the great highway which leads to Fort Desmoines and Council bluffs. In all about three thousand have rendezvoused in this spot, of whom some eighteen hundred still remain in expectation, however, of soon striking their tents for their long march. Three separate divisions have already gone forward. The remainder will start, it is supposed, in about a fortnight, and the leaders are now laying in supplies for the journey.

The tents are arranged in rows, with wide streets between them—the wagons generally in rings, with an entrance at one side, and sleeping tents on the outside. The party is divided into two companies; one under the control of the "Perpetual Emigration Fund Company," the other and most numerous company is composed of the poor of the flock.* The former have secured their passage from Europe through to "the valley," by a prepayment of £75 ($375.) This amount also insures to them a team from this city to the end of their journey—no mean advantage by the way.

The latter mentioned party are a sort of "second cabin" set; travelling along on small capital, and all being fed from the public crib; and having invested all their funds before starting, they indulge in few luxuries outside of the bill of fare furnished by their leaders. On the journey these "Lord's poor" are provided with hand carts (five men to each) on which they are expected to carry their luggage, through fourteen hundred miles of weary wayfaring.

The present stock of cattle in camp is numerous and valuable. There are in all four hundred-and-forty-five oxen, twenty mules and a few horses. Really when in motion, such a train must make a display of no ordinary character.

There is seen, as you enter the camp, a smithery, a workshop and a store, all full of business and industry. There seems to be no disposition to shirk duty, however laborious. Women and children appear alike interested in getting all things ready for a start.

Speaking of the fair sex reminds me that I saw one really handsome female, and many good-looking ones, during many visits to the camp. I learned that a few of them were of highly cultivated minds, and one (the prettiest too, by a curious anomaly) was pointed out to me as an accomplished poetess. All their beauty and talent, however, are consecrated to the interests of "the church," and the whilom lady will pull the hand-cart cheerfully with a woman of no education or refinement. No distinctions seem to be made among them, except so far as money can make them. Children absolutely swarm in and around the encampment' and I have often come near trampling on the small fry as I rode through camp on my Indian pony.

I would have been glad to write more fully respecting the organization and government of these religionists. I have made the acquaintance of their leaders, and have found them courteous, cultivated, and, in business transactions, uncommonly "sharp." They converse freely with those in whom they have confidence, respecting their plans and prospects; and strangers sometimes can learn news of Mormon movements while the people in the camp itself are in blissful ignorance of their fate.

* The "correspondent" has made a slight error here. The "Lord's poor" go by the "P. E. F. Company;" the "$375" passengers compose the Independent Company.—[ED. MORMON.

Arrivals and Departures.

ELDER JOHN A. RAE, of Fillmore City, and Elder Jacob Gibson, of Great Salt Lake City, U. T., arrived here on Saturday evening last. The former in very delicate health. With a few days rest, Eld. R. recovered so as to undertake the continuation of his journey without any apprehension of danger. They took passage and went on board the Wm. Tapscott, on Wednesday for Liverpool. These brethren are we believe, the last of the missionaries for Europe this season. We omitted to mention Elder Doremus in the company that went by the New World.

LORD BROUGHAM once facetiously defined a lawyer thus—"A learned gentleman, who rescues your estate from your enemies and keeps it himself.

Letters from Elders Gibson and Ray.

NEW YORK, July 28, 1856.

In passing through this great city en route to Europe on a mission, I want to say a few words through your valuable paper. I crossed the plains this Spring with the other missionaries, for Europe and the States. We had pleasant and equally weather, arriving in St. Louis in about fifty days from Salt Lake City, all alive and kicking. From there I went to Philadelphia, my old stamping ground, where I staid some four weeks, visiting my old friends and enemies; hoping to learn something if possible, (after a six years' residence in the mountains, where the mails are few and far between,) of Brother Jonathan, before visiting Jonny Bull; also about politics, Fillmore, Fremont, and Buchanan-ology. Having now satisfied myself, I am here, started again, and feel somewhat posted up on some of these matters, and am desirous of changing my diet, and being about other business; I have seen various stories in the papers about Utah knocking at the door of the Union for admission, and am led to the conclusion that even great men differ in opinion, and while differing Utah and her bees are minding their own business. I have read a report from a correspondent at Fort Laramie, about Saints returning from Salt Lake. That is a mistake, as no Saints leave that country, unless sent; but many of the rest of mankind do, and will continue to do so, until Zion is thoroughly purged. There were a few persons who left this Spring, and are now probably at the frontier, who could not pulverize out of the people, a living in that country. and have left for the States, telling great yarns about oppression, deception, taxes, tithing, &c. If any were deceived, it was surely those who thought such persons were men; but they will know them better when they become more acquainted with them. Great stories are told about starving to death, now I would say I was Undertaker and Sexton for the last five years at Great Salt Lake City, and no one could die without my knowledge, I am therefore certain no one has ever starved to death there during my administration, and they have been dared to try it, and could not die: their existence is therefore a testimony that men can live in that land if they are so disposed; the grasshoppers did considerable damage last year; but all Saints feel thankful for what they have passed through, and the sharks are leaving the Territory, much to the gratification of the faithful. The prospects up to June first, are very good for an abundent harvest. Some say that Mormonism affords but little food for the body, now I have tried it for some fifteen years, and the last six of them at Salt Lake City, and am perfectly satisfied with Utah, country, the people that inhabit it, tithing, taxes, and also the leaders of the Church and all other men that mind their own business and keep the golden rule of doing as they wish to be done by.

Your Friend in Truth,
JACOB GIBSON.

NEW YORK, July 30th, 1856.

To the Editor of the MORMON:—

DEAR SIR: As some friends may wish to learn my whereabouts, I think it not amiss to make a short communication through your valuable paper.

I am a resident of Fillmore City, Utah Territory, and at the Conference last April was appointed a missionary to Europe, in company with some twenty-five or thirty others, under the presidency of Orson Pratt, one of the Twelve Apostles. We crossed the Plains in peace, harmony and good health, leaving Great Salt Lake City on the 22d of April, and arriving at Mormon Grove, on the Missouri River, the 8th of June. At that place we dispersed for the purpose of disposing of our travelling equipage.

By permission of Pres. Pratt I travelled as far south as Carroll county, Miss., on a visit to my relations and acquaintances, among whom I was reared. On my way south, in passing through Kansas, Missouri, Tennessee and Mississippi, I found the people so intensely excited about the slave question, which gives rise to the Kansas difficulties, that they have no time to think of religious matters, except a few here and there.

To give you some idea of the state and depth of enmity existing in the hearts of the people at the South against their northern brethren, I will state what I heard at the house of a wealthy planter. There were about a dozen substantial citizens present, when a leading spirit amongst them remarked that he had offered a man one hundred dollars to bring him Gov. Shannon's scalp, and that the man had promised to bring it and had only failed by Gov. Shannon being out of the Territory while he was in Kansas on that mission. Another remarked that a company of men ought to go to Washington and take the President's scalp for aiding and comforting the abolitionists.

I left Mississippi for Philadelphia to join Bro. Jacob Gibson, who had agreed to wait at Philadelphia for me until the 20th of July, and reached there on the 18th; found my health declining, and was feeble and much debilitated from traveling in a warm, damp atmosphere. At Philadelphia I met with quite a number of good Saints under the presidency of Bros. Harrison and Angus Cannon, the latter of whom is the Presiding Elder of the Conference; here I rested five days. From thence we visited Tom's River Branch, and rested three or four days with them. At these two Branches Bro. Gibson and myself procured means to pay our way to Europe. On the 26th we reached New York, and were glad to find you and associate editors cheerful and prosperous and doing a good work. To-day we sail on board the William Tapscott for Liverpool.

Yours, &c. JOHN A. RAY.

"BOBBY, what does your father do for a living?" "He's a philanthropist, sir." "A what?" "A philanthropist. He collects money for Central Africa, and builds houses out of the proceeds."

FOR THE MORMON.

Acoustics.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

ACOUSTICS, being derived from the Greek, signifies sound, and forms a very important and interesting branch of natural philosophy. This science treats upon the laws and principles of sound, as it is caused by the vibration of air.

The student of physics, while studying the phenomena represented to him by material substances, discovers the great importance of the globe being surrounded with an ocean of air; he knows that sound is merely a sensation perceived by the auricular nerve through the concussion or motion of bodies, and conveyed through the medium of vibrating aerial particles to the ear. It is evident from constant observation that there is a variety of sounds, the differences of which are so sensible, that they can be compared with each other, and their ratios of intensity determined. The nature of sound depends upon the medium by which it is caused. There are media whose vibrations of air produce distant sounds, that are of some duration; they are called sonorous; such as copper, gold, brass, glass, iron, silver. The phenomenon of those bodies producing sounds, arises from their density and elasticity: the softer the medium is, the less it is capable of vibrating motion; hence the sound caused by the same is imperfect and confused. The nature of sound partakes of a certain musical harmony and is pleasing to the ear; but a concussion of the air, caused by the roaring of artillery or rolling of thunder, produces a short, confused, discordant sound. Sometimes it is rather difficult to appreciate the value of some vibrating media, as it depends, to a great extent, upon the peculiar organization of the ear. There are some whose auricular nerves are so finely organized, that they can tell the musical value of vibrating bodies that sound to others quite discordant. Sound arises from a disturbance of the equilibrium of elastic particles, caused by rapid oscillation through the medium of a blow or friction. Those particles, when under the impression of enforced vibrations, tend to regain their former position, but they cannot do it at once, as they oscillate on each side of the position by vibrating or going and coming motions, which are very rapid, but at the same time fast decreasing.

The natural philosopher distinguishes sound from noise. Sound, as remarked above, is a harmonious, and to a certain extent musical vibration of the air; but noise is merely a confused mixture of several discordant sounds; as for instance the dashing of the waves of the sea. A single oscillation or vibration is the going and coming motion of the particles of the sonorous body, or the act of moving or being moved with reciprocations, or the act of moving backward and forward like a pendulum. A double or complete vibration embraces a going and coming motion. The reader can easily test the oscillations by throwing a light powder on a sonorous body. This powder will assume a rapid motion, and thus the oscillations of the body will be made visible to the eye. Sound is commonly transmitted by the air; but independent of that medium, it is also propagated by vapor, gases, liquids, and solids. The reader will now understand that the oscillations of elastic bodies will only be productive of sound by having a material medium placed between the ear and the sonorous body, and this medium is the atmosphere, as mentioned above. In order to prove that sound cannot be propagated in a vacuum (space unoccupied by aerial matter), I refer to experiments made by aeronauts in high altitudes, where the report of a pistol, or the sound of the voice, is hardly audible, owing to the extremely rarefied air. To make this matter plainer, I will give here the account of an experiment I witnessed myself while attending lectures on natural philosophy by the celebrated Professor Braniss, at the University of Berlin, in Prussia. A bell was placed under the receiver of the air-pump, and struck incessantly by a small hammer put in motion by clock-work. As long as the receiver was full of atmospheric air, the sound of the bell under the strokes of the hammer was distinctly heard, but the more the air became rarefied, the more the sound lost its force, till it died off, when the receiver was exhausted.

Supposing we fill the receiver as soon as the atmospheric air is gone, with gas or vapor, the sound of the bell is again perceptible; from which we conclude that sound is transmitted by gases and vapors as by common air. Liquids have the same property, viz. of propagating sound. A diver at the bottom of a river can hear what is said on the bank. Put two elastic bodies in water, strike them against each other, and the sound is heard. In relation to solids, I have to remark, that they are such excellent conductors, that the slightest noise is heard at some distance. It appears, however, from experiments made by scientific men, that ground has the greatest conducting power. In the revolution of 1848 in Germany, I heard, by applying the ear to the ground at night, the cannon's roar of the contending parties at a distance of some 40 miles, as distinctly as possible; yes, often the footsteps of horses or men were heard at a great distance. According to historical accounts, the bombardment of Antwerpen in Holland, by the French, in 1830, was heard more than 300 miles.

The natural philosopher speaks of waves of sound, caused by the vibration of a sonorous body, giving a great motion to the surrounding air. The waves of air affording sound, differ from the undulations of water; as the air is elastic, its motion is not constituted of regular waves, but of vibrations, or going and coming motions, similar to those caused by sonorous bodies. Amplitude is the time intervening between every oscillation or motion. An undulation is constituted of two waves together; the length of the undulation is the space described by the sound during the time of a complete oscillation of the body producing it. The more rapid the oscillations are, the more the length of the sound is decreasing. In relation to the motion of sonorous waves in a médium indefinite in extent, in all directions, I will give the following explanation. Suppose a centre of disturbance to be surrounded with a series of spherical waves alternately condensed and rarefied and caused by particles of vibrating bodies; these waves are contained between two concentric (concentric signifies having one common centre) surfaces, the radii (radius is the semi-diameter of a circle) of which will gradually increase; the waves, however, maintain the same breadth, and their mass is increasing in proportion to their receding from the centre of disturbance; hence the velocity of oscillation or vibration of the particles will gradually decrease, and the sound be less audible in the same proportion. Hence the alternately condensed and rarefied spherical waves will spread themselves through space, and become the medium of propagating sound. Supposing that at several points of space, the equilibrium of elastic bodies be disturbed at the same time, then each point will be surrounded with a system of waves analogous to the preceding. As soon as this phenomenon has taken place, all these waves are spreading themselves across each other, their length and velocity remain, however, in the same status quo. The existence of waves can be seen by disturbing smooth water at different points of its surface.

The intensity of sound is modified by various causes, so that the conducting power of an elastic body or solid is much diminished, so for instance by the density of the air in the place where the sound is produced, the direction of the current of the air, the vicinity of other sonorons bodies, the amplitude of vibrations, the distance of the sonorous body. 1. The force of sound depends on the density of the air in the place where it is produced. In high altitudes the human voice is scarcely audible, the report of a pistol quite faint. In atmospheric space full of hydrogen which is about fourteen times rarer than air, a sound is less heard, although the pressure may be the same. 2. The force of sound depends upon the direction of the current of the air. It is a well known fact, that the intensity of sound modified is by winds, by a change of the weather. When the air is calm, sound is much better transmitted from one point to another, than when windy. Is the air much agitated, then the sound is more heard in the direction of the wind, than in the opposite direction. 3. The force of sound depends upon the vicinity of other sonorous bodies. A string or chord of an instrument when stretched in free air, has but a very feeble sound when made to vibrate at a distance from any sonorous body, but if stretched above a sonorous case, as in the violin, guitar, it produces a full sound, on account of the case and the air vibrating in union with the string. 4. The force of sound depends upon the amplitudes of the oscillations of sonorous bodies. The greater the amplitudes, the more the sound is getting stronger and fuller. The connection existing between the force of sound and the amplitude of the vibrations is decreasing with the force of sound. 5. The intensity of sound is in the ratio of the square of the distance of the sonorous body from the ear viz at 4 rods distant, the sound is 16 times weaker than at one rod distant, at 6 rods distant, it is 36 times weaker and so on. This law is arising from the peculiar mode of the propagation of sonorous waves. As the force of the oscillations of the air, in every spherical wave, is in the inverse ratio of the radius of the sphere, so it is in regard to the force of sound.

The law, that the force of sound is in the inverse of the square of the distance, is not to be applied to sounds conveyed through tubes, especially cylindrical and straight ones. The sonorous waves when transmitted do not assume the form of increasing, concentric spheres, hence the sound may be transmitted to a great distance without having its force materially altered. The speaking tubes are well known, they are made of caoutchouc, and of small diameter, they run from one room to another through the walls of a house. The speaker at one end of the extremities of such a tube, is very distinctly heard at the other extremity. As sound travels over about 1,100 feet in a second, a distance of about 100 miles will be traveled over in 8 minutes. From scientific observations, it has been ascertained, that the velocity of sound in liquids is greater than in air, the velocity of sound in water being about 4,708 feet a second, so that its velocity is more than four times greater. By means of the longitudinal vibrations, Chladni has discovered, that wood has a velocity that is from 10 to 16 times greater than its velocity in air. As long as the developement of sonorous waves is not delayed, they are transmitted under the form of concentric spheres; but on meeting an obstacle, they come under the general laws of elastic bodies, viz. being thrown back upon themselves, they form concentric waves, which emanate as it were from a second centre on the other side of the obstacle, and this phenomenon is the so-callad reflection of waves.

The reflection of sound owa its existence to the two following laws:

1st. The angle of reflection is equal to the angle of incidence.

2d. The angle of reflection and the angle of incidence are situated in the same plane, which is perpendicular to the reflecting surface.

TO BE CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.

Honor to whom Honor is Due.

Elder G. F. A. Spiller writes us from St. Louis, July 18th, concerning the death of Elder George Baker, on board the Horizon. He speaks of him in kindly and becoming terms, and bears testimony to his faithfulness and dilligence in the Kingdom of God. He writes:

"He was indefatigable in the execution of the duties of his office, and strove with all the energy of his soul to extend the Kingdom of God. He was undaunted and unwearied in zeal to advocate and defend the principles of Heaven. He endured many privations by hunger, and suffered much from night exposure. To redicule and mobbing he was full proof, in fact every trial appeared to make him more earnest and devoted to the cause, justifying his oft repeated remark—"I live solely for the cause of God."

It was his principle to visit every house within the precincts of his mission, and hence he was the means of bringing a good number of people to the knowledge of the truth, and baptizing them into the Kingdom of God.

As a President he was affectionate and kind. He taught pure principles by precept and example, and never shunned to declare unto the Saints the councils of God, nor feared to deal with lovers of iniquity. The Saints under his charge spoke with pleasure of his excellent and instructive teachings combined with his commendable conduct. He always enjoyed the confidence of his President, lived a good man, and I am confident that he died a good man. His course was marked by truth and virtue."

Elder Angus M. Cannon writes us from Philadelphia, July 20, of the death of Bro. John Ritson. He says:

"I am sorry to inform you of the death of Bro. John Ritson, who departed this life on the 15th inst., at the age of 43 years and one month, after an illness of five days. He was a native of Kendall, Westmoreland, England, and joined the Church in the year 1846. He was ordained to the office of a Priest shortly after, and magnified his calling to the last.

"He emigrated to this place January 1855, where he tarried to procure means to prosecute his journey to the land of Zion, and held an honorable position in the Philadelphia branch.

"Bro. Ritson leaves a wife and four children to moura his loss, and having proved himself a true Saint, devoted husband, and affectionate father, he is not only missed by his bereived family, but by all Saints who knew him.

"It truly is a severe trial to have to part with a friend most kind and dear to us, through the power of death, but when we recollect that it is only for a short time, and know that he claims the promise of God to a part in the first resurrection—all is well."

It is very pleasing for us to record the virtues and faithfulness of our brethren. We trust in God, and look forward to a day of recompense, when those who have turned many from unrighteousness shall shine in the Kingdom of Heaven like the stars in the firmament above. Brethren, do well; be pure, be kind, and some will yet speak of you as the blessed of the Lord.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

Last Wednesday evening (23) the friends of Mr. Fillmore held a "Tremendous Demonstration" of "Unequalled Enthusiasm" at the Academy of Music, Fourteenth street. The speakers were loud in their laudations of their candidates and sanguine of ultimate success. On Thursday evening there was another Enthusiastic Demonstration in Brooklyn, "three stands" for the speakers, "whole acres of people" addressed and a torch light procession. Everything went on very lively.

George Wilson, the negro, who was lately condemned for the murder of Capt. Palmer, of the Eudora Imogene, was executed on Friday the 25th, at White Plains, L. I. He maintained his innocence to the last. The crowd gathered on the occasion were loud in their denunciation of the condemned and conducted themselves like a rowdy crowd.

Walker was inaugurated President of Nicaragua on the 12th inst. The whole vote for President was 21,000. He received 14,000, and the remainder was scattered between Rivas, Ferry, Jerez, and Salizar. Rivas still holds possession of the town of Leon, and many natives considering the inauguration of Gen. Walker an act of usurpation, have declared against him. Among the deserters are Col. Mender and Gen. Chillon. Much sickness prevailed among Walker's troops, and frequent desertions were taking place.

In Oregon Indian skirmishes continue. Col. Wright was not killed, as was previously reported. Col. Buchanan has had a battle with the Indians on the Big Meadows, in which forty Indians and ten whites were killed.

The Yreka Union states that full one-third of the crops and vegetation of Willamette valley was destroyed by grasshoppers, and that there was no prospect of an abatement of their ravages. Considerable districts of country were entirely bare of vegetation.

The starboard boiler of the Empire State burst on Saturday evening, while on her way from Fall River to this city. A number of persons were injured by inhaling the steam, six of whom subsequently died. Up to Tuesday in all fourteen persons had died through the accident.

On Friday last a train of six cars, on the Welden and Wilmington (N. C.) Railroad, was thrown from the track and turned bottom up. A number of passengers were more or less injured, but none fatally.

A large fire broke out in North street, Boston, destroying completely several dwellings. Estimated loss $75,000. It is rumored several lives were lost. A severe thunder shower passed over the town and vicinity on Monday. Several buildings were struck by lightning and the engine house of the Worcester Railroad Co. set on fire by it, at Watertown the steeple of the Othodox Church was blown down.

The steamer J. H. Larkin was destroyed by fire about ninety miles below St. Louis, on Monday morning. The boat and cargo are a total loss. The boat was valued at $100,000, and is insured in St. Louis offices for $50,000. Value of the cargo unknown.

Several persons died on Monday in this city from the exposure to excessive heat of that day.

Mr. Herbert has been acquitted of the murder of Keating at Washington.

The Districts of South Carolina represented by Messrs. Keitt and Brooks, have re-elected both gentlemen.

A young man named Jarbo was tried on Tuesday in the Criminal Court of Washington for the murder of one Nalley, by shooting him for the seduction of his sister, and was acquitted. The jury were only out about fifteen minutes, and on the announcement of the verdict the crowd expressed their joy by excessive applause and eagerly pressed forward to congratulate the avenger of his sister's wrongs. The result has produced general rejoicing.

There have been several fires in New York and Williamsburgh of considerable magnitude.

Gambling at Washington.

A correspondent of the Pennsylvania Inquirer makes some startling disclosures in regard to the prevalence of gambling at our national capital, particularly during the sessions of Congress, when there is a great influx of strangers. The writer says:

A stranger passing through Pennsylvania Avenue, at any hour between that when honest people go to bed, and that when the rosy tints on the eastern horizon betoken the coming dawn, will not fail to notice that the upper stories of almost every second house are brilliantly lighted, and he will either imagine that it is the custom of the people here, or else abandon speculation on the subject in despair. He must be a stranger in Washington indeed, if he arrive at any such conclusion. If he remain in the capital three days, he will most certainly be enlightened, and possibly to his own after regret.

"These brilliant lights, the existence of which almost do away with the necessity of street lamps, are evidences of one of the institutions of the federal city. In the march of improvement and the progress of civilization, the inhabitants of the District have demolished the slave pen, and to a great extent, abolished the lottery traffick, but the gambling rooms, from the dirtiest den to the most gorgeous saloon, are in full blast, and at least winked at if not legally authorized by the municipal government. The Avenue, from Willard's Hotel to the Capital gate, is literally lined with them, and it is estimated that there are at least five hundred resident gamblers, who live like princes upon the unwary novice or the more reckless habitu of these infamous resorts. It is often difficult to recognize this portion of the Washington gentry, except when engaged in the exercise of their professional talents, for their disguises are as numerous as those of a masquerade.

The rooms, that is the more aristocratic ones, are furnished in a style of almost Eastern magnificence—attentive servants await on your every step—your appetite is tempted by a profusion of the rarest delicacies, and your palate by the most delicious wines. Everything that appeals to the external senses is calculated to 'lap one in Elysium,' but through and beyond all this, the sensitive heart experiences a sickening oppression, and before the mental vision appears, not only one, but an hundred ghastly skeletons at the feast.

There is no difficulty in obtaining access to most of the gaming houses in Washington. Into the more aristocratic ones you must be introducad by one who already has the entree. The playing rooms are chiefly up stairs, and you enter through a hall on the first floor, If you appear respectable, though an entire stranger, the porter admits you at once. A servant in waiting takes charge of your hat and cane, and then you are received courteously by the proprietor or his deputy, who chats familiarly with you on any subject except the business of his house, and you are immediately welcomed to the freedom of the establishment. You wander where you please, except into an occasional private room where is engaged a party who have not lost all sense of shame. No one interferes with you, nor are you urged to participate in the games constantly going on at the numerous tables. Take your stand where you please, you cannot fail to witness, in a few moments, the exhibition of all the passions engendered in these places, which have been so appropriately denominated "hells." That is the only word in our vocabulary which conveys an adequate idea of their character.

Yon will be surprised to recognize among the players men whom you have regarded as free at least from this peculiar vice, Professional men in high standing, government officials, merchants whose word in the business world is as good as their bond, Senators and Representatives—are all on a common level—but what a level!

* * * * * *

Later in the evening a magnificent supper is laid, to which all visitors have free access and then the players return to the tables, and keep up their games till the light of the new day eclipses that from the gaudy burners, when the gambling merchant, physician, lawyer, congressman, and the gambler per se (for they are all brothers and must be classed together,) retire to their respective abodes, some to congratulate themselves on their good fortune during the night, and others to gnash their teeth together in despair over their frightful losses."

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

There are no news of special interest from Europe save from Spain. In England Lord Palmerston and Mr. Dallas are likely to arrange matters—so it is rumored. The Queen reviewed 16,000 of her Crimean troops at Aldershott camp on the 16th, with the usual eclat. An explosion occurred at Cymmer coal mine, near Cardiff, and 110 men killed. Another case of poisoning by strychnine was creating great excitement at York. John Frost, the Chartist exile, had rejoined his family, residing near Bristol. No news from France.

A fearful riot had taken place at Newcastle upon Tyne, between the societies called Orangemen and Ribbonmen. The Orangemen had been commemorating the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne by a dinner, and afterwards had a procession, when they were brutally attacked by the Ribbonmen, who were armed with swords, knives, pistols, bludgeons, &c. Several Orangemen were seriously wounded. It was estimated that from sixteen to twenty men had been more or less greatly injured.

Espartero tendered his resignation as President of the Council on the 14th. Another version, and the most likely, is that Queen Christina had got up some accusations against him in Paris, and through her influence Queen Isabella had ignominiously dismissed him. He got twenty-four hours to leave Madrid. Marshal O'Donnell has succeeded Espartero and remodeled the cabinet. Immediately on the new appointment insurrection broke out in Madrid, and the National Guards assisted the citizens in erecting barricades, and being attacked by the troops, fighting ensued in the streets for twenty-four hours, with much loss on both sides. On Tuesday, the 15th, at four o'clock, P.M, a suspension of hostilities was agreed to until five o'clock, to allow the insurgents to make their submission. At the expiration of this time fighting seems to have been resumed. The Queen presented herself to the combatants and a government despatch says she was respectfully received, but other statements say the Queen appeared on the Plaza in tears, and besought the combatants to cease, and that it was owing to her intercession the armistice of one hour was agreed to. Gen. Infante, President of the Cortes, commanded the insurrection. He assembled the minority of the Cortes, but O'Donnell caused them to be dispersed. The latter has appointed a new manicipality to Madrid, declared all Spain in a state of siege, dissolved the National Guard and called upon them to deliver up their arms. The insurrection was overcome on the morning of the 16th and quiet restored. The London papers publish private telegraphic messages reporting Saragossa and all Aragon in insurrection. All Aragon, it is supposed, means the large towns that have followed in the wake of Saragossa, with their respective garrisons. France is reported to have sent an army of observation to the frontier. Twelve pieces of artillery were in the possession of the insurgents at the Plaza Seltaldo, and were only recovered after some hours hard fighting.

The news from Italy continues to be of an alarming character. There are symptoms that sooner or later Austria and Sardinia will come to blows.

The Diver and the Treasure.

A True History of the Raising of the Safe of the Atlantic.

Our readers were several days since highly amused by the fanciful relation of the Detroit Advertiser, of the raising of the safe of the steamer Atlantic, sunk in Lake Erie, Aug. 20, 1852. This morning we were favored with an interview with E. P. Harrington, of Westfield, New York, the successful rescuer of the safe, and give the items of the occurrence, which, if it be devoid of wonderful meetings with "beautiful ladies" and "children," is, nevertheless, very interesting and true. Mr. Harrington has had three years' experience as a diver, and during the past winter has been engaged on the Mississippi in his business. Associated with him in this undertaking were Martin Quigley and Charles O. Gardner, of Chautauque, N. Y., and Wm. Newton, of Detroit. They proceeded in the schooner Fletcher to the locality of the steamer Atlantic, which lies about three miles from the extreme point of Long Point. They arrived there on the 18th of June, and that day was used in preparations. On the 19th Mr. Harrington, encased in Wells and Gowen's submarine armor, made his first descent. This armor is made of two layers of canvas and one of India-rubber, the rubber occupying the middle. It is loose and flexible, and of course resists no pressure. From in front of the mouth proceeds a tube composed of nine alternate layers of canvass and rubber, with a copper wire coiled inside to prevent collapse. This is flexible too, and, being as long as the depth to which the diver goes, and the upper end being in the open air, secures proper respiration. The aperture is 3-8 of an inch in diameter. A wreck-line had been previously dropped and rested against the side of the steamer.

Dressed as above described, with leaden shoes, and with leaden weights attached to his body, amounting in all to 248 pounds, with a rope round his waist, by which he could be raised to the surface, and a check, or signal line in his hand, the adventurous diver commenced his first descent. He was governed by the wreck-line, and struck the promenade deck about 40 feet aft the state room, where the Express Company's safe was, which was in the third state-room aft the wheelhouse on the larboard side. He remained on deck but one minute. After descending from 50 or 70 feet, depending upon the clearness of the air above, all is dark to the diver, and he is governed entirely by feeling. The romantic sights recorded by the Advertiser, are therefore without foundation. The greatest caution as to entangling lines, must be used, and Mr. Harrington went each time outside of the stanchions, moving, as he advanced, his wreck-line, so that with each dive he advanced nearer the state-room. The second dive he was three minutes upon deck, the third four; the fourth seven. On the 20th he made four dives, and the time on deck was respectively four minutes, seven minutes, and the next or eighth, six, at which time he reached the state-room. Previous to this he had all the time been groping about, and twice was on the hurricane deck, and once near the main deck. The 21st he made seven descents: times respectively, 4, 6, 5, 8, 5, 6 and 8 minutes, and during which he was busy in breaking in the room window, and breaking down the work on the side below it, and succeeded at last in getting a line fast to the ring in the lid of the safe, but finding the apperture he had made too small to allow the passage of the safe, ascended to wait till the coming day. On the 22d, the sixteenth dive, being the first that day, he was on deck seven minutes, during which time he sawed through the casing and pannel work and tried to break it off with his hand, but could not. The seventeenth he was on deck nine minutes, in which he fastened a line to the wood-work, and by it the men above pulled it off. The eighteenth and last descent he was on deck eleven minutes, and during it he succeeed in fastening a line to the end ring of the safe, and helping it out of the aperture, it was raised to the deck of the schooner. The perilous work was done, and the adventurous men, upon opening the safe, or rather iron chest, 28 by 18, by 16 inches in size, found themselves the possessors of about $5,000 in gold, and $31,000 in bills, a small portion of which were useless from the action of water and insolvensy of banks, and six watches, two of which were valuable gold ones. The chest contained papers for which the American Express Company paid a handsome salvage. The Atlantic lies careened, her larboard side being 175 feet, and the water on her starboard 160 feet deep. The safe was about 157 feet from the surface. Upon her deck Mr. H. found a light sediment of three or four inches in depth. He could, as we have said before, see nothing, and encountered nothing but the wood-work, chains, glass and the chest. The water was very chilly, and Mr. H.'s hands were so numb that he could not by mere feeling distinguish glass from wood. It was only by the former's breaking that he knew the material. He thinks his strength when below not more than one tenth that he has when in the open air. He suffered but little from the pressure except two or three times, when such was the rush of blood to the head that, as he says, he saw "bright flashes in his helmet, like electric sparks."

We have been thus accurate, from justice to Mr. H., who has thus accomplished a feat never before, we believe, successful.* He is a candid, fair-spoken man, and is not a little mortified that any one should have so misrepresented the matter to the editors of the Detroit Advertiser.—[Cleaveland Herald, July 8.

*We have seen this statement contradicted by another diver who was a much longer period under water on that same vessel, and who states likewise that it was to some of his operations there that the present diver was successful.

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, July 25, 1856.

The Senate passed six private bills, and one providing for the compulsory prepayment of postage on all printed matter.

A motion was made and agreed to, that the Senate adjourn till Monday. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A message was received from the President recommending an appropriation of $250,000 to complete the purchase of the building in Philadelphia for the post-office there, and $50,000 for fitting up the same.

The House considered and passed twenty private bills, including the Senate bill for the relief of the widows and orphans of the officers, and seamen, and marines of the sloop-of-war Albany and the brig Porpoise. The bill provides that the 18th of April and the 29th of June, 1855, shall be taken as the days on which the vessels were lost, and from which the pensions shall commence.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

July 26. 1856.

The House was engaged in the consideration of private bills.

SENATE. July 28.

The bill to amend the Diplomatic and Consular system was taken up, considered and passed.

On motion of Mr. Pugh, a resolution was adopted, requesting the President to inform the Senate whether any application had been made to him by the Governor of California to maintain the laws and peace of that State against the usurped authority of the Vigilance Committee of San Francisco, and also to communicate whatever information he may have respecting the Vigilance Committee.

The bills making appropriations for the construction of harbors at the mouths of Grand River and Black Lake, Michigan, were passed. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed by a vote of 117 against 48, the bill appropriating $200,000 for continuing the improvements of the Des Moines Rapids in the Mississippi River.

Mr. Dunn moved to take up the Senate's bill providing for the admission of Kansas into the Union, his intention being to offer a substitute reorganizing the territory, restoring the Missourri Compromise, and dismissing indictments for treason, etc.

The motion was negatived by a vote 103 against 72—not two-thirds.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the Armory appropriation bill.

Mr. Sherman offered an amendment, that no part of the military force of the United States shall be employed to aid in the enforcement of the alleged laws of the Legislative Assembly convened at Shawnee Mission, until Congress declares whether those laws were passed by the Legislature chosen in conformity with the organic law; and until Congress so declares that it shall be the duty of the President to use the military force to preserve peace, suppress insurrection, repel invasion, and protect the persons and property of the citizens of the Territory, on the highways of Missouri, and elsewhere against the unlawful search and seizure, and that the President disarm the present militia, recall all United States arms, and prevent armed men from going into the Territory to disturb the public peace, or enforce real or pretended laws.

The Chairman, Mr. Lester, decided the amendment out of order, but was overrulled by a majority of two. Mr. Sherman's amendment was adopted.

In the evening recess some honorable members spoke about their respective political platforms. Did no business. Adjourned.

SENATE. July 29.

The Senate refused to order the engrossment of the bill appropriating $75,000 to test the practicability and usefulness of Richardson's atmospheric telegraph.

The internal improvement bills on the calender were then considered. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House proceeded to act on the various amendments, reported from the Committee of the Whole to the Army Appropriation bill.

The House concurred in Mr. Sherman's amendment, offered yesterday. The bill was then ordered to be engrossed.

On motion of Mr. Dunn, of Ind., the House reconsidered the vote by which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union the bill to amend certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of Kansas, and secure to the citizens of that Territory their rights and privileges.

Mr. Dunn submitted a substitute, re-organizing Kansas, and providing the usual Territorial machinery.

Mr. Sneed, of Tenn., moved that the bill be laid on the table. Motion lost.

Mr. Dunn's substitute was then agreed to, and the bill thus amended passed.

Adjourned.

SENATE. July 30.

The Senate took up the bill to regulate the compensation of members of Congress.

Mr. Callamer proposed a substitute providing that they shall receive for attendance at the Sessions 25 per cent. additional to what they are now entitled to by law.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill continuing the improvements in the harbor of Newark, New Jersey, gave rise to an animated debate, involving the entire scope of such questions.

Without disposing of the bill the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House discussed the bill providing for a settlement of the claims of officers of the Revolution and the widows and orphans of those who died in the service of the country, and the bill was then passed.

The Kansas contested election case was postponed until to-morrow.

The bill expediting the issuing of patents for confirmed land claims of California was debated, and tabled by three majority.

The Fortification Appropriation bill was taken up and discussed, and pending which the House adjourned.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Tornado at Cincinnati, &c.

CINCINNATI, July 30, 1856.

Almost a tornado occurred here yesterday afternoon. Rain fell in torrents. Trees were uprooted and awnings demolished. On Third street some buildings were blown down, killing one man and wounding five or six others.

General Tom Thumb has had his valuable box of jewels and presents stolen, valued at $20,000.

Terrific Storm and Marine Disaster.

PROVINCETOWN, July 30, 1856.

A letter from Green Island, Straits of Belle Isle, dated July 7, speaks of a terrific storm whic occurred there July 1, during which, at that place, twenty-nine vessels went ashore, and three vessels off Dog Island were lost, with all on board. Only two of the vessels that went ashore are named—the brig Samuel Cook and the schooner Sarah Louisa. Three hundred and fifty-four men were living in tents on Green Island. Only one vessel there had ridden out the gale in safety.

Severe Storm at Carlisle, Pa.

CARLISLE, Pa., July 30, 1856.

A very heavy rain and thunder storm occurred here last night. Five barns and one dwelling were destroyed by lightning. The barns were filled with the entire crops. The losses are heavy. Other losses are reported in the county.

Storm in the South.

WASHINGTON, July 30, 1856.

A terrific thunder storm raged here for an hour this evening. The only damage as yet known is the striking of the engine house of the Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company, the frame projection of which was entirely burnt.

BALTIMORE, July 30, 1856.

The storm has also been very severe here, but we hear of no damage.

Sentence of Death.

MONTREAL, July 13, 1856.

Corrivean, who murdered Miss Todd, at St. Homar, in January, 1855, was this morning sentenced to be hung at Quebec, on the 26th of September.

Change of Meeting-place.

The Latter Day Saints will hold their Meetings every Sunday, in the large hall of the Assembly Rooms, 361 Broome street, at 10½ A. M., 3 and 7 P. M.

The public are respectfully invited to attend.

Letter Notice.

We are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

United States Mails Salt Lake City.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, MAY 31, 1856.

PROPOSALS for conveying the mails of the United States from the first day of December, 1856, to the 30th day of November, 1860, on the following route, will be received at the Contract Office of this Department until 9 A. M. of the 15th of October, 1856, to be decided the next day, to wit:

No. 8911 From Independence, (Mo.) via Fort Kearney and Fort Laramie, in Nebraska Territory, to Salt Lake City, in Utah Territory, 1,150 miles and back, once a month.

Leave Independence the first day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Salt Lake City on the last day of the month at 8 a m;

Leave Salt Lake City on the second day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Independence by the last day of the month.

NOTES.

Bidders are required to inform themselves of the actual distance, the weight and bulk of the mails to be carried (the whole mail required to be taken each trip,) and all other points essential to a correct understanding of their liability for the proper performance of the required service, before making their proposals, which must be guarantied by two responsible persons, certified to as such by a postmaster or judge of a court of record; and contract must be entered into by the successful bidder, with surety, before the 1st day of December, 1856.

No pay will be made for trips not performed, and for each of such omissions not satisfactorily explained three times the pay of the trip may be deducted. For arrivals so far behind time as to break connexion with depending mails, and not sufficiently excused, one fourth of the compensation for the trip is subject to forfeiture. Fines will be imposed, unless the delinquency be promptly and satisfactorily explained, for neglecting to take the mail from or into a post office; for suffering it to be injured, destroyed, robbed, or lost; and for refusing, after demand, to convey the mail as frequently as the contractor runs, or is concerned in running, vehicles on the route. The Postmaster-General may annul the contract for repeated failures to run agreeably to contract, or for disobeying the post office laws or instructions of the Department. The Post master-General may alter the schedule; he may also order an increase of service by allowing therefor a pro rata increase on the contract pay; he may also curtail or discontinue the service in whole or in part, of pro rata decrease of pay, allowing one month's extra compensation on the amount of service dispensed with. Bids should be addressed to the "Second Assistant Postmaster General," superscribed "Proposals for Salt Lake City Mails." JAMES CAMPBELL, Postmaster General.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là. dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains-par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

Farewell to Thee, England.

BY MISS IDA. E. REDDING, EN ROUTE FOR UTAH.

Farewell to thee, England—bright home of my sires,
Thou pride of the freeman and boast of the brave,
I have lov'd thee—and never till being expires
Can I learn to forget thee, thou star of the wave,

Farewell to thee, England, a long, long farewell,
To every dear scene of my infancy's hours,
Ne'er more shall I roam through each moss-covered dell,
Nor pluck the sweet gems of thy blossomy bow'rs.

Farewell to thee, England, and farewell to all
Whose love hath yet hallow'd my pathway below,
Though sadly I leave thee, I would not recall
One hour of the past for the present to know.

Though sorrow may cast its deep shadow o'er my soul,
When mem'ry recalls one dear form to my mind,
And anguish of spirit which passeth control,
May crush the lone heart where that form is enshrined.

I wish not to linger thy beauties among,
I dare not be false to the God I adore,
Henceforward my lyre to His praises is strung,
And to Him I relinquish those memories of yore.

Yes, England, I leave thee, all dear though thou art,
A country more precious lies over the wave,
With hope for thee, Albion, I turn to depart,
God guard thee my country—protect thee and save.

The rose of thy beauty may fade from thy brow,
The day of thy glory in darkness decline,
Yet a halo of splendor encircles thee now,
Which in regions immortal more brightly shall shine.

There are hearts on thy bosom shall hallow thee yet,
There are spirits too noble, and feelings too pure,
There are creatures too worthy for God to forget,
Whose love like His goodness will ever endure.

His blessing be on thee—thou land of my sires,
Thou pri le of the freeman, and boast of the brave,
I have loved thee—and never till being expires
Can I learn to forget thee—thou star of the wave.

Harmony of Color in Dress.

M. Chevreul, the French philosopher, has lately written a volume on the principles of harmony and contrast of colors, and their application to the arts. A few hints, grounded on the same general principles, as to the effect upon ladies' dress, will not be thrown away, and may interest our readers, as no American writer, so far as we know, has attempted to elaborate the subject.

It must be borne in mind, that one color placed beside another receives a modification from it. We do not mean to say that the two colors, or rather the two material objects that present them to us, have a mutual action—either physical or chemical: we refer to the modification that takes place before us when we perceive the simultaneous impression of these two colors.

To illustrate this—notice a fact well known among Parisian merchants, viz: that if a purchaser has looked for a considerable time at a yellow fabric, and is then shown orange or scarlet stuffs, he is apt to take them for amaranth red or crimson; for there is a tendency in the retina, excited by yellow, to acquire an aptitude to see violet; whence all the yellow of the scarlet or orange stuff disappears, and the eye sees red, or a red tinged with violet.

Or if a buyer has shown to him, one after another, fourteen pieces of red stuff, he will consider the last six or seven less beautiful than those first seen, though the pieces be identically the same. The cause of this error of judgment is, that the eyes, having seen seven or eight red pieces in succession, are in the same condition as if they had regarded fixedly during the same time a single piece of red stuff; they have then a tendency to see the complimentary color of red; that is, green. This tendency enfeebles the brilliancy of the red of the pieces seen later. In order that the merchant may not be the sufferer by this fatigue of the eyes of his customer, he should take care, after having shown the latter several pieces of red, to present to him some pieces of green stuff, to restore the eyes to their normal state. If the sight of the green be sufficiently prolonged to exceed the normal state, the eyes will acquire a tendency to see red; then the last pieces will appear more beautiful than the others.

Scherffer, in 1754, gave great precision to the phenomena relating to successive contrast in demonstrating that a given color produces an accidental color; the same which is called its complementary. Œpinus, Darwin, Count Rumford, and other scientific men, have handled this subject. We shall merely, by way of explaining our intended application, mention what colors are complementary to others. Blue is the complementary of orange; orange of blue. Red is the complementary of green; green of red. Violet is the complementary of greenish yellow, and that of violet. Indigo is the complementary of orange yellow, and that of indigo. The same principle prevails in the diversified shades and combinations of these colors.

A green, therefore, tends to color the space near it red; an orange, blue; a violet, greenish yellow; an indigo, orange yellow, and vice versa, etc., etc.

Now, for the application to the dress of our fair friends. The color of light hair being essentially the result of a mixture of red, yellow and brown, it may be considered a very pale orange brown; the color of a blonde complexion, though of a low tone, is analagous to it, except in the red parts. A pale orange being then the basis of the tint of the hair and complexion of a very fair woman, the color nearest its complementary is sky-blue; known to accord well with blondes. On the other hand, yellow, and red more or less orange, are known to accord favorably with brunettes and black hair, in which type of female beauty the harmonies of contrast predominate over the harmonies of analogy.

Pink-red cannot be put in contact with the rosiest complexions without diminishing their freshness; it is, therefore, necessary to separate the pink from the skin, as by a border of tulle which produces the effect of gray by the mixture of white threads which reflect light, and the interstices which absorb it. Dark-red being higher, is less objectionable, as it tends to impart whiteness to the skin by contrast of tone.

A delicate green is favorable to fair complexions deficient in rose; but not to a deep color in the cheek; a dark green is better for complexions that have a tint of orange mixed with brown. To such, yellow imparts a rose hue, and, therefore, suits brunettes.

A violet drapery, imparting greenish yellow tint of a brown complexion, is one of the least favorable colors, when the hue is not sufficiently deep to whiten the skin by contrast of tone. Blue imparts orange, which is capable of allaying itself favorably with light flesh tints; but is not becoming to brunettes, as they have already too much of orange. Orange makes fair complexions blue, whitens those which have an orange tint, and gives a green hue to those of a yellow tint.

White exalts all colors by raising their tone; consequently it is unsuitable to those complexions which have the least disagreeable tint. But draperies of thin muslin or lace have a different effect. They appear more gray than white, like the tulle aforementioned. Black draperies, lowering the tone of the colors with which they are in juxta-position, whiten the skin; but the rosy parts distant from the drapery appear redder relatively to the white parts contiguous to the black.

It will be seen, in accordance with these rules, that a pink bonnet or head-dress too small, or too much thrown back to reflect colored rays, will impart to the skin feebly lighted by daylight, a slight tinge of green; a green imparting pink in a greater proportion, a yellow head-dress will give a sensible tint of violet; a violet a feeble yellow; a blue will give a slight orange; an orange a faint blue, etc.

It follows, then, that a fair complexion is suitable to a black bonnet with white feathers and white roses, or red flowers; or a light blue, or green bonnet. The blue may be trimmed with white, and in many cases with yellow and orange flowers—but not with rose or violet; the green can be ornamented with white, rose-colored, or red. Bonnets of gauze, crape or lace, are suitable to all complexions, and flowers of white, rose, or blue, accord with the white. A pink one must not be too close to the skin; if the hair does not produce sufficient separation, the distance may be increased by a wreath of white flowers with green leaves. A red bonnet is not advisable, except when it is desirable to diminish too warm a tint in the complexion; neither yellow nor orange-colored should be prescribed for a blonde, and she should be very reserved in the use of violet.

For the brunette, a black bonnet, a head-dress may be advantageously trimmed with white, red rose, orange or yellow; one of white crape or lace, with the same, rather than with blue. Bonnets of pink and red are becoming when the hair separates them as much as possible from the complexion. White feathers accord well with red; and white flowers, with plenty of leaves, have a good effect with rose. A yellow bonnet suits a brunette, receiving violet or blue trimmings with advantage; but the hair must interpose between it and the complexion. Green or blue are seldom admissible for dark beauties. A violet is hardly ever suitable; but may be tolerated if not only the hair, but yellow accessories, interpose between it and the skin.

Whenever the color of a bonnet or head-dress does not realize the intended effect, even when separated from the complexion by large masses of hair, it will be advantageous to place between the hair and it, ribbons, wreaths, detached flowers, etc., of a color complementary to that of the bonnet. Trimming of the same tint should be placed outside.—New York Sun.

The New Female Encroachment.

It has increased, it is increasing, and ought to be diminished. What! The power of the Crown!" Bah! It is a much greater matter than the power of the Crown, much more encroaching. It pushes us from our stools. It threatens to leave us no place in the social system. The world is not wide enough for it and us. Where is it to end? What is to restrain it? What to curtail it? Will no bishop raise his voice against it? Alas! a bishop has been totally lost in it. The holy man was sitting as near it as the magnitude of the thing allowed, it gradually enveloped him in its voluminous folds, he disappeared, and has never been heard of since. That advertisement in the second column of the Times related to the unfortunate lost prelate. A drawing-room now looks like a camp. You see a number of bell tents of different colors, the poles sustaining them appearing at the summit. These are the signs of habitation. You see who lives in a particular tent, but the whereabouts is not easy to determine.

Broughams must soon be abandoned. It now fills a Brougham, overlapping at the windows, and still in the course of aggrandisement. Omnibuses will soon be in requisition to afford the necessary space, or perhaps even houses on wheels, like the caravans for shows and wild beasts. Certainly there is a law in fashions if one could but find it out. They have their cycles like storms, and science might calculate the periods of their recurrence. Invention or fancy there is none in fashion, nothing is new. An old thing comes in again. Thus the hoop comes in again in rather an aggravated shape of enormity. But if there be an expansion in one quarter, be sure there will be contraction in another, for such compensations belong to the scheme of things. Thus, while the bonnet has been dwindling away, the petticoat has been expanding, engrossing, and pervading all space. The one is mathematically the complement to the other. The bonnet is now hardly visible to the naked eye, while the petticoat fills the view like a mountain of millinery. The curious thing is, that while the bonnet has been getting smaller and smaller, and reduced to a mere speck, the price has not undergone the desireable proportionate diminution, and husbands and fathers have only been certified that their wives and daughters still wear such articles by the very handsome price they still pay for them. If you complain you do not see it on your wife's head, be consoled—you will see it in ample dimensions in the bill. The consummate malignity is this—that as the price of the bonnet is in inverse proportion to the size, so that, if reduced to a spangle, it would be at the maximum price, the cost of the voluminous petticoat is in direct proportion to the magnitude. The ebbs and flows of the bonnet and petticoat are as regular as those of the opposite ends of the globe. When the one is waning the other is increasing, and so on. When bonnets were worn considerable larger than coal scuttles, but of the same fancy and figure, petticoats were so scanty and so short as to give assurance to the world that ladies had feet and ancles, the evidences of which have lately disappeared. And so it will be again. And when the enormity of the petticoat has exceeded all bonds of endurance, when things have come to such a pass, where pass is none, that one lady exclusively fills and occupies one moderately-sized room, the thing will begin to shrink and go to bonnet instead, and it will be all top instead of what it is now, which is quite the reverse. Glad are we to see that Punch has taken the petticoat in hand, and called upon the interference of the police to suppress the enormity. And surely there must be powers of repression under the Building Act. But if not, the case of obstruction is clear, tangible, most tangible, and removable by law under the Police Act. So, ladies, look out.—[London Examiner.

History of French Inundations.

The Sicele contains rather an interesting article apropos to the late floods, in which an account is given of the most famous inundations that, during one thousand years, from the sixth to the fifteenth centuries, were noted by the chroniclers of France. In the capitularies of Charlemagne there is a long passage, as it seems, consecrated to the development of all the reasons existing for the necessity of building up what are in that age already termed the "Levees de la Loire."

The first inundation mentioned by a historian is in the year 580, during the reign of Childebert. The Rhone and the Saone upon this occasion rose to such a height that the walls of the town of Lyons were overthrown, several edifices destroyed, and the adjoining provinces completely submerged. Twice within the next six years, in 583 and 586, the town of Paris was overflooded by the Seine, and two bridges were entirely swept away. Of these events the recital is to be found in the pages of Gregory of Tours.

During the two centuries and a half (till 821) little or nothing is heard of the infliction; but at this period, and again sixty-five years later (in 886,) Paris is laid under water by a formidable rise of the Seine, which produced horrible disasters. In 1037, again at the distance of a century and a half, took place an overflow of its banks by the Loire, which the historians of the time characterize as an awful visitation of Divine wrath. In the next century, (1195,) a long succession of diluvian rains caused floods over the whole country; and in Paris, for instance, all the bridges were carried away, and Philip Augustus and his son were forced to fly the royal residence, then situated in the "Cite," and take refuge in the Abbey of St. Germain, placed on the rising ground which terminates at St. Etienne du Mont; and here the King followed barefoot a procession which was made in order to obtain the cessation of the scourge.

The thirteenth century is the one in which the greatest number of inundations are to be remarked; and it is asserted that afterwards, no age counts so many until our own, the nineteenth. No less than seven times between 1206 and 1296 (a space of ninety years) does France suffer from this awful misfortune; in 1206, 1214, 1232, 1242, 1280 and 1296; and in many of these instances various towns were rendered totally inaccessible for days, and the loss of human life was horrible to think of. In the year 1373 Paris was completely flooded by a rise of the Seine, and the quarters of Saint Denis, Saint Antoine, and Saint Honore (existant then, all three) were only to be reached by boats. In 1408 the same infliction was again felt; and while Paris was lying under the waters of the Seine, Lyons had upwards of two hundred houses swept away by the Rhone and the Saone, and Charles V. granted to the Lyonese an exemption from taxation for four years. Later in this same fifteenth century, in 1414, in 1428, and in 1427, almost every river in France rose, sweeping away dwellings and harvests; and the overflow of the Seine was accompanied by a curious circumstance. On the 23d of June—the eve of St. John the Baptist's-day—the traditional fire had been lighted by the townsfolks of the Place de Grève, nothing suspecting what was impending, when the river rose so suddenly, that the fires were extinguished before any one had time to guess at what had happened.

A vain man's motto is, "win gold and wear it;" a generous man's "win gold and share it;" a miser's "win gold and spare it;" a profligate's "win gold and spend it;" a broker's win gold and lend it;" a fool's "win gold and end it;" a gambler's "win gold and loose it;" a wise man's "win gold and use it."

"Fort Vigilance."

The headquarters of the Vigilance Committee are continually being strengthened by additional fortifications and defensive weapons. In addition to the sand-bag breast-work thrown up to protect the approach from Sacramento street, we notice that one, equally formidable and extensive, has been erected so as to guard the entrance to the rear of the rooms in Halleck street, out of Davis. These breast-works will be of great service in case of an insane attack by the Governor's straggling army. Behind these fortifications are stationed powerful cannon, which are so arranged as to rake every possible approach to the rooms.

For the benefit of those at a distance, who know nothing of these head-quarters except what they read in the papers, we feel inclined to give, in detail, a description of the locality. The rooms are embraced in the block bounded by Front, Davis, California and Sacramento streets, having an entrance from, and fronting on, the latter. The square is 275 feet each way, and is covered with two story brick buildings, and is about one block from the water of the bay. The rooms, proper, are upon Sacramento street, and embrace about 100 feet frontage in the centre of the block. This front is protected by a sand-bag breastwork, which is thrown up about 10 feet high, 6 feet thick, and 20 feet from the building. A narrow passway through this fortification admits members to the retreat, from which ingress is made into the buildings. There are guards stationed at the pass through the breast-work, and also a double set at the entrance to the doors, as well as another at the stairway that leads to the second floor, where the different departments and cells are located. A small street, called Halleck street, puts into the centre of the block, from Davis street, which admits of a rear entrance to the rooms, and which is baricaded by sand-bags as stated in the first part of this paragraph.

Upon the second floor the apartments cover more space than upon the first, as they have opened communication with several adjoining buildings, by making doorways, so that they must now occupy nearly or quite one half of the entire block upon the second floor. The ground floor is used for the field pieces and heavy ammunition, while the small arms are nicely arranged in convenient racks above. The heads of departments and different inferior offices, and the Executive Committee rooms, as well as the prisoners' cells, are on the second floor.

Upon the roof is placed, in a conspicuous position, an alarm bell of about 700 pounds weight, as well as several pieces of cannon, which overlook the different streets. Nearly all the stores in the block are occupied as usual, by business houses, and their transactions go on uninterrupted. The corresponding block upon the opposite side of Sacramento street is vacant, having been burnt over a few months since. The adjoining blocks on the other sides, except on the last, are composed of solid brick and masonry work, thus preventing any possibillity of firing the buildings by the opponents of the Committee. About one hundred guards are kept constantly on watch, to protect the rooms and property of the Committee.

Such is a faint outline of the Vigilance Committee headquarters in San Francisco, the centre of more power and terror to evil-doers than all the courts or Governors of California; because it has, to aid its physical strength, the entire moral force of the State. There is more confidence reposed in its action than in all the legal tribunals we have ever had among us.—[California Paper.

Martin, the Painter.

While Martin, the painter, was unknown and engaged on his first great work, his means were so exhausted that he was one day reduced to the last shilling he had kept for some time, because it was a bright one. With it he went to a baker's shop to buy a loaf of bread. The loaf was purchased, the last shilling paid, and the change about to be handed to the artist, when the baker snatched the loaf from the starving man, and gave him back his shilling, because it was a counterfeit. Martin, upon this, was utterly broken down. He went to his humble lodging, and having at the bottom of his trunk found some crusts of bread, with which he sustained his existence, he set to work again at his picture. He struggled on till the picture was finished and exhibited, and in less than a week after its exhibition he was famous. That picture was "Belshazzar's Feast."

Dimensions of the American Lakes.

The latest measurements of our fresh water seas are as follows:

The greatest length of Lake Superior is 335 miles, the greatest breadth is 160 miles, mean depth 998 feet, elevation 627 feet, area 32,000 square miles.

The greatest length of Lake Michigan is 360 miles, its greatest breadth is 108 miles, mean depth 900 feet, elevation 687 feet, area 23,000 square miles.

The greatest length of Lake Huron is 200 miles, its greatest breadth is 169 miles, mean depth 800 feet, elevation 574 feet, area 20,000 square miles.

The greatest length of Lake Erie is 250 miles, its greatest breadth is 80 miles, its mean depth 200 feet, elevation 555 feet, area 6,000 square miles.

The greatest length of Lake Ontario is 180 miles, its greatest breadth is 65 miles, its mean depth is 500 feet, elevation 262 feet, area 6,000 square miles.

The total length of all five is 1584 miles, covering an area altogether of upwards of 90,000 square miles.

Have Mercy on the Children.

The Independent, in an article on the phyical degeneracy of the American people, speaks as follows:

The child will govern too much. If they do not choose to go to bed they sit up; if they choose certain articles of food they must have them, parents forgetting that instinct is no safe guide in a child, whatever it may be in an animal. So we see them in this delicate organization, keeping late hours when they should go to bed with the birds; and eating hot bread, pudding and cake, and drinking tea and coffee to the infinite detriment of nerves and stomach. The injury thus early done can never be repaired; as a machine imperfectly constructed at first can never be made to run faultlessly.

This is the secret. Parents should know that instinct is no safe guide to a child, particularly when the child is surrounded on all sides with poisonous delicacies. To ask a child at a modern table what it will have, and give it what it asks for, merely because it asks for it, is a very common practice. But it is as cruel as it is common Have mercy on the children.

Dickens' Opinions of Woman.

The true woman, for whose ambition a husband's love and her children's adoration are sufficient, who applies her military instincts to the dicipline of her household, and her legislatives exercise themselves in making laws for her nurse; whose intellect has held enough for her in communion with her husband, and whose heart asks no other honor than his love and admiration; a woman who does not think it a weakness to attend to her toilet, and who does not disdain to be beautiful; who believes in the glossy hair and well-fitting gowns, and who eschews rents and raveled edges, slip-alod shoes and audacious make-ups, a woman who speaks low and does not speak much; who is patient and gentle, and intellectual and industrious; who loves more than she reasons, and yet does not love blindly; who never scolds and argues, but adjusts with a smile; such a woman is the wife we have all dreamed of once in our lives, and is the mother we still worship in the backward distance of the past.

Dropping in at Meal Time.

A lady who was in the habit of dropping in at her neighbors about meal time, in hopes of obtaining an invitation to partake with the family, was recently completely nonplussed by the unhesitating frankness of a child.

Knowing that a neighbor's supper hour was five, she called in about four, and settled herself down for a long call.

"It takes two to make a bargain," and the lady honored with the call had no idea of giving an invitation, if it was in her power to escape it. Accordingly the hour of five brought no indication of supper. Time wore on, the sun was near its setting, and still the same. A little girl, the daughter of the lady in question, began to grow quite uneasy. At length, her mother having gone out for a moment, the visitor said:

"You must come over and see me, Mary, some time."

"No I won't," said the child.

"Why not?"

"Because I don't like you."

"But why don't you like me?"

"Because I'm hungry, and want some supper."

"But," said the visitor amazed, "I don't prevent your having your supper, do I?"

"Yes you do," said Mary. "Mother said she wouldn't have supper till you were gone, if you staid till midnight."

In less than five minutes the visitor was marching out of the front door with a very red face. She hasn't called to see Mary since.

Little Mary, in her childish frankness, has not learned the important lesson which after years will not fail to teach her, viz: that the "truth, however excellent, is not to be spoken at all times."

A "Monthly" Nurse.—Simpson vs. Nealet.

The plaintiff is a monthly nurse, and the defendant is an aged gentleman of great wealth.

Nurse—I claim for a month's services. In March last I engaged with defendant's wife to attend her in her confinement. She told me that she expected to be confined at a time I should have been disengaged. I have waited and waited until I got tired, and have refused other ladies. She is not confined yet, nor never will be. [Laughter.]

Judge—Well, Mr. Nealet, is this true?

Defendant—My wife is not confined yet. I don't know if she is in the family way or not. The doctor has not decided. [Roars of Laughter.]

Judge—As the doctor has not been able to decide, perhaps, there is no chance of this lady's service being wanted, and then, you know, she may have to wait for a death before a birth. [Laughter.]

Defendant—The doctor has nothing at all to do with it. [Laughter.]

Nurse—His wife told me she expected it every hour, but the doctor had told her several months before that there was nothing the matter with her. It was a longing fancy—that's all. [Renewed laughter.]

Defendant—My wife does not want this woman's services until she is confined—let her wait.

Nurse—I am ready to attend your wife; but take my word for it, she is no more in the family way than you are. [Laughter.]

Defendant—I sent for this woman one night, and she did not come till the next morning.

Nurse—It was a false alarm. I never had a lady to disappoint me like this before. [Laughter.]

Defendant's Housemaid—I heard my mistress agree with the nurse to attend her in her confinement. I went for her one night in a hurry, and she did not attend till next day.

Judge—Well, did anything go wrong through her not coming at night?

Housemaid (blushing)—Nothing happened. Nothing is likely to happen. [Laughter.]

Defendant (passionately)—How the devil do you know? [Roars of Laughter.]

Judge—Well, nurse, you understand these little domestic afflictions better than we do. Is anything likely to happen to this lady?

Nurse—Not a bit of it. She never meant it. [Laughter.]

Defendant—No matter, she did not attend when sent for, and is bound to wait.

Judge (moody)—Well, it appears this woman was engaged without any prospect of her services being called upon. She is not bound to wait years for the happy event. [Laughter.] You must pay this woman. Judgment for plaintiff, with costs.—[London Paper.

Special pleaders sometimes resort to curious expedients for procuring an effect on the sympathies of a jury. In a criminal case in which the culprit was arraigned upon a charge of manslaughter, which seemed to bear very much against the prisoner, the counsel held up his little child who was crying aloud, as an eloquent appeal to the jury in his behalf. This might have answered very well, had not one of their number put the pertinent question to the youngster, "What are you crying for?" when the artless reply was, "He pinched me, sir!"

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, AUG. 9, 1856.

There is a Time for Everything.

It ever affords us pleasure to comfort the afflicted, pour consolation into the bleeding heart, give a helping hand to those who are struggling to overcome the world, the weakness of the flesh and the temptations of the common enemy of humanity, but placed as we are, in some measure a guardian of the rights of others, it becomes our duty at times to speak disagreeable things of men much against the wish of our own heart. We believe in not only carrying the mantle of charity, but using it to cover the faults of all men, without distinction, inasmuch as these faults arise more frequently from errors of the head than from corruption of the heart, but when a man perseveres in doing wrong, shows no symptoms of redeeming qualities and glories in his shame, we think a little light on his course necessary.

Many of the Saints here and in other States will remember a person by the name of John Freeman coming by the Emerald Isle to this port in December last. Shortly after his arrival here he was appointed to take charge of the emigrants by that vessel who required assistance during the severity of winter. In the course of time Freeman became sick of "single blessedness," but as he was then in poverty, a recipient of our bounty we thought he might wait till he got thawed out and therefore refused our sanction to make bad worse, on which he got saucy, impudent and went to live with the mistress of his heart.

In consequence of another pair living in the same house changing life the same night and under the same mysterious circumstances they were all four in course of time expelled from the church for refusing to satisfy the Council of the legality of their marriages. A tried and faithful man was appointed to succeed Freeman and receive an account of his stewardship in the disbursement of food and money. At that time there was no opportunity of testing the truthfulness of his account, but since the assisted were able to return what had been loaned to them not a single one but what has complained of being overcharged. We feel sorry to see the poor imposed upon and women deceived, we therefore have deemed it our duty to make the above statement and add the subjoined from he Millennial Star, Liverpool, Feb. 24th, 1855:

"NOTICE.—Elder John Oakley, President of the Lincolnshire Conference, requests us to give publicity to the following:

"Please have the kindness to publish John Huckbody as unworthy the confidence of the Saints. Through his unrighteous conduct he has been excommunicated the fourth time. I have reason to believe he is now, by means of his smooth tongue, imposing upon unsuspecting Saints elsewhere, as such has been his manner, though perhaps now under another name. He formerly was connected with the 'Risegate Branch,' Lincolnshire Conference; lastly with the Chesterfield Branch, Sheffield Conference."

Besides the reasons already given for bringing Huckbury alias Freeman before our readers we wish to record our protest against any departure from the observance of the laws of the land where we are located respecting marriage or anything else. Many persons friendly to the Mormons, and convinced if there be truth in anything it is in Mormonism, stand aloof from the Church from no other reason than dissatisfaction at the conduct of some called Mormons. We consider such persons should think a little of "the tares and wheat" and the "net cast into the sea" and their dissatisfaction will gradually vanish. We know that some act unworthily of their profession and are a disgrace to any people, but hold on a little and a swift witness is on their tract—no Mormon can hide iniquity for ever, it will out—do right and live, do wrong and die, are as immutable as Jehovah's throne—for evidence read the history of Mormonism, pregnant with touching lessons; to the meek and humble, bright hopes; to the proud transgressor, dark despair.

Arrival.

ELDER CHARLES FORD arrived in this city on Monday en route for England. He left Salt Lake City on the 19th April.

Letter from a Friend.

POLK CITY, IOWA, July 21, 1856.

DEAR BROTHER TAYLOR, I will still call you, and all the good Mormons, brothers and sisters, although it is many years since the Gospel, in its purity, has fallen upon my ears. Many years since I preached to others the words of Eternal Life, as brought to light more clearly in the New Dispensation, that is spreading its influence upon every side, exerting an influence wide as the world and lasting as eternity. I little thought in the days when it was my privilege to meet with the Saints of God, that the time would ever come that I should be wandering in darkness among the Gentiles like a lost waif, floating upon the waves of the boundless ocean. I never till now realized the full meaning of our Saviour's words—"Walk while ye have the light, lest the light that is in you become darkness." Like the Prodigal Son, I get only for my Spiritual food the dry and withered husks that the Gentile shepherds and swine herds deal out in "Homœopathic Dilutions" to nations famishing for the "Bread of Life." Although I have been disconnected with the Church for a number of years, yet to her have I ever looked for light, and regard her as the fountain whence flow the waters of life. And I anticipate the time when I shall again be united with the Saints of God, and when my voice will again be heard in testimony to the nations of the earth.

The political excitement that is convulsing our nation, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the St. Johns to the Rio Grande, is but fulfilling the words of our martyred prophet, who, though dead, still speaks with warning voice to the nation; but his words fall upon leaden ears that hear not, and the harvest of blood and outrage now being reaped on the plains of Kansas does not satisfy, at least I judge so from the fact, that in this vicinity the advocates of "free soil," "free speech," "free men" and "Fremont," are preaching a new crusade against the Mormons of Utah, on account of their religious opinions. These precious "negro stealing scoundrels," who would rend the Union asunder to carry ont their "pious intentions," promise the people of Iowa, that if "Fremont" is elected to the Presidency, that the Saints in Utah shall have Christianity taught them at the bayonet's point.

Poor pious fools, too mad and blind to evil,
To know the God they worship is the "devil."
These "fanatics," so zealous in reform,
Would wrap the civil firmament in storm,
And to procure some false imagined good,
Of moral ills, unchains a noxious brood,
And to the workings of their mental vice,
Whole generations fall a sacrifice.

I do not speak of this matter as the advocate of any political party, but merely to condemn such conduct, and let you know what "issues" are presented in the name of "Fremont" in this part of the country. We have a good many of the old Mormons living in this part of Iowa—those that were not prepared to go through at the time of the Mormon exodus from Illinois. Some have become wealthy in this world's goods, and need waking up. An able Elder could do a good work in central Iowa—most of the population are ignorant of what the Mormons believe, especially the younger part of the population, who were but children when their parents settled here. This place is fifteen miles from Fort Des Moines, the capital of Iowa, and is delightfully situated, more good timber being found here than in any place in the State. As good a place for employment as any in the State, no doubt, exists in this county for those Saints who are forced to remain through the winter. In Iowa, wages are very good indeed; for men—from one dollar to one-and-a-half per day for common laborers; for girls to work in families, from one to three dollars per week.

Yours, very truly,
CHARLES A. ROGERS.

The above letter exhibits a fair sample of what may be called the frenzied outbursts of a section of political aspirants of the present day. To hear men exclaim against the Mormons who are evidently as ignorant of them both morally, socially and religiously, as they are about the motion of the planets in the milky-way, is calculated to excite in those informed a degree of mirth and risibility, at their incensate clamor and puerile folly. To those who are immediately concerned, however, as our friend seems to be, things assume another aspect. We would remind him that if he had lived, his Mormonism and those of his friends, of whom he speaks, they would have been in another atmosphere, where people do not depend upon the defamation of others' characters to obtain their elections; where patriotism is not composed of idle clamor, vituperation, and the withering blasts of calumny and falsehood; where liberty is more than a name, and does not consist only in flattering banners, meaningless speeches, and fullsome, empty gasconade; but is a living, abiding principle, in the hearts of the people, and where all men are allowed to worship God, not in name but in reality, according to the dictates of their own conscience, without the officious interference of political jugglers or religious hypocrites.

We, therefore, under these circumstances do not sympathize much with our friends who feel themselves surrounded with these noisy, ignorant roysterers. We might, nevertheless, if we felt disposed to sympathize, refer our friends to the fable of the "Pheasant and the Dunghill Fowls." A pheasant finding himself among a number of chickens who pecked at him on every side, was not a little troubled at the ill treatment he received as a stranger from his newly-found neighbors, but upon perceiving that they quarrelled incessantly among themselves, he was a little encouraged, and said, "I need not be troubled at their acts towards me. They fight and kill one another, no wonder they should abuse a stranger."

When we turn around and look at the bickering among the inhabitants of the United States; the bitter hate that exists between North and South; the insurrection in Kansas; the prostration of all civil functions in California, and the doings in Congress, we see a fair counterpart of the Pheasant and Dunghill Fowls, and would say, be encouraged, it is their nature, and if they treat one another so, no wonder that they should peck at the Mormons.

We wish, however, to examine this subject for a little. This clamor is not their immediate fault; it is the fault of their cliques. They would never have thought about the Mormons no sooner than they would about Robinson Crusoe or Sinbad the Sailor, if they had not been told to do so. They are told by their leaders to hallo Mormons, and at it they go. Now we thought that we should leave all these folks to their own fate, and let them fight it out among themselves; but if they don't immediately take off their dogs, we will show them a trick they have not dreamed of as yet. Many of the States are going to be very evenly balanced, and notwithstanding their noise and gasconade, Mormonism can yet control several thousand votes in a number of States of this Union, and we say to our friends, keep your weather eye open, you may hear from us again. If we do anything, we want deeds, not words.

We cannot, at any rate, vote for our enemies, and although the bayonets and pistols these fools talk about are all in their brains, yet if these whelps are not stopped their howling, we will give them a pill to swallow that will be difficult of digestion next November.

Letter from Bishop N. H. Felt.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3, 1856.

PRESD. TAYLOR—Dear Sir:—As I am about taking my departure from New York to go to my home, in the vallies of the mountains of Deseret, permit me, through your columns, to express my acknowledgements, and appreciation of the kindness and good feelings of the Saints in New York and vicinity towards me during the past two years that I have been in their midst, together with those who have lately arrived from the other side of the Atlantic. Nor would I forget the gentlemanly bearing, courtesy and good feelings invariably displayed by very many of the gentlemen, with whom I have had occasion to do business in New York, Philadelphia, Boston and other parts of the Eastern States: who, notwithstanding the difference of opinion upon matters of religion, and the usual prejudice existing against us, arising from misconception of our views, and the slanderous reports of enemies, have soared above such sordid bigotry, and stood ready to meet us upon the broad platform of humanity and equal rights. The courtesy of such gentlemen I ever feel a pleasure, in acknowledging thus publicly. In all my experience, I have ever found, that those most conversant with the world at large, were the most liberal in their views regarding a difference of opinion in others, and, look with less presumption upon the infallability of their own, especially upon matters of faith. It is the faith of the Latter Day Saints or our peculiar doctrines as a people, which bring out and display to view, the latent spirits and prejudices with all their lights and shades in those with whom we came in contact,—the experience of every Latter Day Saint, or Mormon, makes him aware of this.

The gentlemanly agents of the New York and Erie, Michigan Central, Boston and Worcester Railways, with those connected with their several offices, also many of those connected with Castle Garden, in this city, Messers. Enoch Train & Co., and gentleman connected with their establishment in Boston, have my warmest thanks for the attention and courtesy bestowed upon myself and various companies of emigrating Saints on their arrival in this country, which with myself, will long be remembered by many.

There are many whole-hearted Saints on their way to Utah, detained for a season, in the vicinity of New York, to accumumlate means to enable them to go to the place of destination another year. Among them, mechanics and artizans of almost every kind, from some of the best establishments in Europe, and many industrious, honest-hearted laborers, whose faith and purity of motive in coming here, places them far above the usual masses annually landing upon our shores, and safely guarantees to the employers here, a faithfulness on the part of the employed, not often found with those, whose only God is gold, and whose only interest is strife. They form a new ingredient in the composition of the society of New York, Philadelphia and Boston, and it is for them to leave an impress here, through a straightforward, upright course, that shall be favorable to those who shall hereafter follow. When the emigration wended its way, in 1846 and 1847, through Saint Louis en route to the mountains, it met in that city, the usual prejudice against the Mormons existing among its inhabitants, which first and last has existed all over the country, but soon the industrious habits, and upright course of the Saints in that region, caused an entire reversion of feelings, and our office was filled with applicants for artizans, laborers, farmers and mechanics from all parts of the city and surrounding country, and ere long, most of the manufactories and establishments of various kinds were filled by expert and willing hands of the Saints, anxious to fit themselves out, by close attention to business, for a speedy journey across the plains, to their long looked-for home in the peaceful valley of the mountains. The same will be the case in New York and elsewhere, for wherever the Saints have congregated for a season, there they have won for themselves a name and reputation for honesty, perseverance and industry, in the face of all the calumny and opprobrium heaped upon a good people, by interested and designing parties, who scruple at no meanness to accomplish the ends of bigotry and sectarianism. Let the Saints here, and those arriving in this country, continue to be dilligent in well doing and faithful in all their covenants, whether temporal or spiritual and the Lord will bless them and open the way before them, and enable them to go forth to the valleys of the mountains with joy and thanksgiving. God bless the upright in heart, and all those that strive to serve Him.

Pres. Taylor, allow me to acknowledge your kindness, and that of the brethren in the office, to me, during my stay in this city, and accept my sincere wishes for your success in sustaining your valuable paper, and all you set your hands to perform. Wishing blessings and prosperity to all faithful Israel, I am, with much respect, your brother and fellow-laborer in the Kingdom of God, N. H. FELT.

Better Late than Never.—The Wellfleet.

WILLIAMSBURG, July 31, 1856.

PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR:—Dear Brother,—Having read in "The MORMON" that you had not received any account of our passage from the old country. We beg to give you a few items of our voyage from Liverpool to Boston.

We sailed from Liverpool on the second day of June, and arrived in Boston on the 10th of July, 1856, in good health and spirits. On Sunday the 18th of June, Elder Thomas Williams came on board with a letter from President Franklin D. Richards, stating that Elder John Aubrey, from Birmingham, was appointed to preside over the Saints on board the ship "Wellfleet." The Saints unanimously acknowledged the appointment, and Elders Ephraim Tillotson and Peter McCain were nominated his Counsellors. The Saints on board were divided into seven wards, and a President appointed over each—namely, Elders George Reed, Stephen Stanford, Robert McKendrick, Samuel Lindsay, Henry Norman, Charles Wilkinson, John Nash.

We had a very comfortable voyage, and little sickness; the Government officers said that they had not seen a more healthy ship load of emigrants come into Boston for a long time back. In consequence of a majority of the passengers on board not being Saints, we were obliged to appoint brethren, one upon each side of the ship, to stand as watchmen four hours in turn. The wards were cleaned up every morning before the Saints rose from their berths; prayer meetings were held at 7 A. M. and 8 P. M., in all the wards. At the request of Captain Westcott we had preaching on deck twice, and he attended in company with another Captain who was on board. Captain W. had the deck washed up ready for our meeting; we had also one prayer meeting on the forecastle about 9 o'clock on the evening of June 20th.

We are glad to say that we had a very pleasant voyage and very calm weather, with the exception of about four days.

The Saints were very highly eulogised for their cleanliness, both by the Captain, Steward, and Doctor. The Captain was kind to the Saints and very often had them upon the deck either singing or dancing in an evening when the weather was favorable, so that we enjoyed ourselves innocently, and time passed on comfortably. Before leaving the ship. "Testimonials" were presented by the Saints to President Aubrey and Councillors.

President Aubrey proved to be a first-rate man; a man of God, and the blessings of Israel's God will attend him wherever he goes.

Praying for your welfare and prosperity in the Kingdom of God, we beg leave to sign ourselves your brethren in the New and Everlasting Covenant,

EPHRAIM TILLOTSON, Councillor,
ELI SMITH, Secretary protem.

Elder Aubrey has just walked into our sanctum, heard the above read, and says, "All right." Elder A. has had his hands full of family business since he arrived, or we should have received his report.—ED.

The Last Story.

IT is amusing to see the dodges of some folks to kill off what they don't like. We frequently see little sparks of wit here and there in a fine joocse story about the Mormons, reminding us of the smartness of our generation. We noticed a week or two since the Irish American congratulating his countrymen that not one genuine Hibernian had ever arrived at Castle Garden with the Mormon emigrants. Sometime before that we saw a small paragraph in different exchange papers about only seven Mormons in all Ireland. It would seem that there is something "awfully terrible" expected if the land of peat bogs was vacated for Utah. Here is the last racy piece that we have seen:

Among the many thousands of Mormons who come to this country, we do not believe there has been any one who belonged to Ireland. The elders do not obtain any converts among the Irish, nor do their doctrines find favor. A well known Irish gentleman in New York has in vain tried to detect an Irishman or woman among the many Mormons who have entered Castle Garden. On Saturday last, 170 Mormons were landed at the depot from the ship Thornton, most of them having been sent out at the expense of the Mormon Emigrant Fund. He saw among them English, Scotch, Welsh, Jerseymen, Danes and Swedes in great numbers, and at last he thought he detected a solitary paddy. Walking up to him, he inquired his name.

"John Daley, sir," he replied.

"Are you an Irishman?"

"Troth I am the same, your honor."

"Are you a Mormon, too?"

With an air of exquisite drollery he whispered:

"Faith, I am not, but you see I wanted my passage."

"Have you any money?"

"Nivir a hap'ny."

"Then you had better go with them to the West, to St. Louis, and leave them there."

"Indade, sir, I've been wid 'em too loong already, and I'm thinking I'll lave 'em and be off at wanst."

We don't remember what paper we clipped the above from; it was, however, acknowledged a clipping from some of our city cotemporaries. Pity we didn't take particular notice, or we should have paid him our compliments, and encouraged him to try it again. We wish the author, however, better luck another time. It is a good story, well told, pity it isn't true. We have just glanced at the list of names by the Thornton, (see MORMON, May 31,) and find no such name as John Daley there.

Additional evidence of its sanctum manufacture, there were by the Thornton 764 emigrants instead of "170," and they went by Iowa City instead of St. Louis.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE State Conventions of the Hard and Soft Shell Democrats assembled at Syracuse on Wednesday and Thursday of last week, in separate halls. After the introductory business had been attended to, the Hards and Softs began to show symptoms of desire to sheathe daggers and smoke the pipe of nominal fraternity. Success crowned their labors towards reconciliation, and Judge Crane, of Herkimer, was selected to preside.

Colonel Geary has accepted the appointment of Governor of Kansas, and proceeds thence shortly. Governor Shannon has been removed.

A party of the English Crimean Army Works Corps arrived in this port the other day by the "Orient." Through the sudden termination of the Eastern war, this corps, numbering three thousand eight hundred men, had been discharged, and received a sufficient gratuity to enable them to come to this country or the British colonies by their own means.

The Coroner's jury, after a full investigation of the circumstances attending the late calamity on the Northern Pennsylvania Railroad, while exonerating other parties, place the blame of the accident upon Mr. Hoppel, the conductor of the excursion train.

Mr. Brooks received 7,900 votes upon his re-election to Congress, and $600 were contributed toward the fine to which he was sentenced. The Governor of South Carolina sent certificates of election to Washington in advance. The vote for Mr. Keitt was also large.

Seventy thousand dollars worth of property was destroyed by fire in the village West Troy, on Saturday morning Aug. 2. The fire broke out about 2 o'clock in the morning, in the piles of lumber immediately adjoining Lamby's carriage establishment, on Canal street, between Rochester street and the Erie Canal. From thence it spread with inconceivable rapidity to the buildings in the immediate vicinity. The following is a list of the principal property destroyed:

Lamby's carriage establishment and residence, owned by E. & P. Wiswell; John Perrigo's dwelling, Patrick Kelly's livery stable, the dwelling houses of Wm. Clements, Wm. Crowner. J. D. Lobdell and Mr. Condee. All the lumber on the east side of the Canal from Canal street to the residence of Abraham Dyer was destroyed. It was owned by Smith & Craig and Lee & Hall. Loss of the former is about $15,000, and the latter $30,000. The lumber on the opposite side of the canal caught fire, but not more than $1,000 worth, belonging to Hall & Ogden, was destroyed. The origin of the fire is unknown, but is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary. The property is generally insured.

A man named Fox has been arrested in Philadelphia and committed for a hearing, who is suspected of being the perpetrator of the brutal murder of Burke, in the store of Mr. Joyce in Broadway. A telegraphic dispatch was received by the Chief of Police on Friday, requesting a description of the supposed murderer, to which that of the arrested party is said to correspond.

Mr. Hopkins, through whose arrest, the last California excitement was created is presently in New York. In a letter to the Herald he tells a sad tale about the Vigilance Committee, and asserts that his banishment from California was solely on account of the evidence he could give, against the parties accused of piracy—in seizing the United State arms, en route for San Francisco, under his charge.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

ENGLAND.—The Duke of Cambridge was appointed on the 12th ult., Commander-in-Chief of the British forces. Lord Hardinge an able soldier and faithful servant retires solely from advanced age. The Duke's appointment is very satisfactory to the army.

Sir William Williams of Kars after receiving complimentary dinners, rich appointments and brilliant honors without number has, in addition, obtained six months' leave of absence, that he may revisit his native country, Nova Scotia. Woolwich garrison has been placed under the command of the next senior officer, Colonel Hardinge, K. H.

IRELAND.—James Sadlier, member of Parliament for Tipperary, brother to the late fradulent Tipperary banker and assistant in the rascality, has absconded during the trial, leaving the Attorney General and master of the Rolls to squable over the affair and blame each other for his absence.

ITALY.—Piedmont continues to attract attention, by making active preparations for a brush with Austria. The King, during the prorogation of Parliament, has signed a decree for one million sterling, to enable Count de Cavour and General Della Marmora, to build a fortress and other defenses necessary on the Eastern frontier.

A letter from Parma of the 2d, in the Risorgimento of Turin, says:—"We are told that Marshal Radetzky has officially informed the Duchess Regent that, from stragical motives, he intends to increase our garrison to 3,000 men, to be quartered partly in the city and partly in the environs. Placentia has received an increase of 500 chasseurs of the Imperial regiment. The citadel having been demolished, the Austrians have constructed three forts around, armed with guns; they are called St. Lazarus, Podista, and St. Anthony. The Marshal wants to increase the Austrian army in Italy, to 120,000 men. The Pois to be furnished with military bridges at several points, and considerable bodies of troops are to be stationed along that river and the coasts of the Romagna. The Sardinian Government has even received official information to this effect, and has determined on strengthening the fortifications of Allessandria, by surrounding the whole with detached forts, and the works are to be commenced forthwith."

FRANCE.—The possibility of forming a road across the Alps to unite France to Italy has, for a long time, occupied the attention of the French Government; and it appears that at the present the problem is in a fair way of solution. A plan of a road from Grenoble into Piedmont by the Valley of the Drac and the department of the Hautes-Ales, crossing the frontier by a tunnel through Mont Genevre, has received the approbation of the Ponts et Chaussees.

LATEST.—The chief and interesting news by the last mails from Europe is from Spain. The insurrection is not yet suppressed, but seems triumphant in the provinces. The Cortes have removed into Arragon and thence under the command of Gen. Infante, their president, it is rumored, that they intend to make war on Queen Isabella and her Ministry in the name of Liberty and the Constitution.

Several French regiments were to proceed to the frontier and the war steamers Saffron, and Toulon have sailed for Barcelona.

The Bishop's of London and Durhamhave tendered the resignations of their respective Sees.

William Dove, charged with having poisoned his wife by means of strychine, at Leeds, has been found guilty and is sentanced to be hung.

Utah.

AT the moment of going to press, we have received our file of Deseret News, up to the 25th of June, and a big pile of letters. There is plenty for extract, but we have no room this week.

The Utonians are, as ever, industrious, and doing their best to get along in spite of grasshoppers, and they'll manage it. They feel badly used with the bungling mail contractor, and talk out. They were making great preparations for the Fourth of July, and anticipated fine times. The programme of the celebration of that eventful day, shows life in Utah not to be despised.

Across the Plains.

THE third company, consisting of 50 wagons, and two carriages, under the command of Capt. John Banks, arrived at the Elk Horn on the 10th inst., in fine spirits and good health. No deaths—but two births.

They appear to be having a good time out on the "Horn." The Brass Band from the Hand Cart company united with the St. Louis Band, and played to the great delight of the trains.—[Council Bluffs Bugle, July 22.

Poisoning by Strychine.

THE verdict which led Palmer to the scaffold for the murder of John Parsons Cook, has been extensively discussed in England. The deceased showed every symptom of having been under the operation of that dreadful poison, but there was no direct trace of its presence when his body was examined. It has been feared that this poison might henceforth be extensively used by the murderer, as some allege the utter impossibility of detecting the presence of small quantities. Dr. Herepath, the well known chemist, was examined during Palmer's trial, and stated that the presence of strichnine could always be detected, and gave as an important proof, that if he put 10 grains into 70,000 grains of water he could detect its presence in a tenth part of a grain of that water. Mr. J. E. D. Rodgers, Lecturer on Chymistry at the St. George's School of Medicine in a letter to Sir George Grey begging a respite for Palmer's execution till further examination, gives the following process for the detection of strychnine; no matter how small the fatal dose:

"The tissues of the body are rubbed with distilled water in a mortar to a pulp, and then digested, after the addition of a little hydrochloric acid, in an evaporating basin; then strained, and evaporated to dryness over a water bath; digest the residue in a spirit filter and again evaporate to dryness; treat with distilled water, acidulated with a few drops of hydrochloric acid, and filter; add excess of ammonia, and agitate in a tube with chloroform; the strychnine in an impure condition is entirely separated with the chloroform. This chloroform solution is to be carefully separated by a pipette and poured into a small dish, and evaporated to dryness; the residue is moistened with concentrated sulphuric acid, and heated over a water bath for half an hour; water is then added, and excess of ammonia—again agitated with chloroform, and the stychnine will be again separated by the chloroform, now in a state of sufficient purity for testing, which can be done by evaporating a few drops on a piece of white porcelain, adding a drop of strong sulphuric acid, a minute crystal of bichromate of potash being added in the usual way."

Wm. Penn's House Still Standing.

THE house occupied by William Penn still stands. It is in second street, opposite the Pennsylvania Bank. It is two stories high, about forty feet front, with projecting wings, but the center is boarded out the line of the latter. It is very venerable and very dirty A sort of old Jewry—a locksmith shop, retail fruits stalls, &c., distinguish the once gubernatorial precints. The walls are honestly built of old fashioned thickness, and so the little squat old concern is tough, and if cleaned up it would last a lot of lusters to come as a Quaker momento of early times. But the whole with other property adjoining, will soon be offered for sale, and then—and then—where will it go! It will be improved away unless pious, antiquarian sentiment buy it and consecrate it to colonial memories and the spirit of the past. The late Elliott Cresson left $10,000 toward buying it for civic acquisition and preservation, but it will take a much larger sum than that to save the venerable relic of Leni Lenape times. The indifference of Americans to such acts of filial retrospection and pronounciation is in wide contrast with the existence of the opposite sentiment in Europe, where such large sums are affectionately spent for the conservation of things of the olden time.—[Exchange.

FOR THE MORMON.

Acoustics.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

CONCLUDED.

AN echo is the return, repetition or repercussion of sound, and is caused by undulations of air being thrown back or repelled by solid bodies, such as stone, wood, &c. If a solid is struck by an elastic body, perpendicularly, that is to say, in such a manner as to cut another line at right angles, it is repelled in the same direction; but when struck obliquely, that is to say, not in the direction of a straight line up and down, the elastic substance is thrown back in the opposite direction, and so it is in reference to sound. Supposing a person to be in front of a high wall, the sound produced by him, will be repeated or carried in a right line, and the phenomenon of the echo will take place at a certain distance from the person uttering the sound; and as one sound cannot be distinguished from another, if not at least one-tenth of a second elapses between the two sounds, and sound travels about 1,120 feet in a second, it is evident that in a tenth of a second, sound will be propagated over a space of about fifty-six feet, which is the shortest distance at which the reflecting obstacle has the power of throwing back waves of air. If a person stands in a position, so that the waves of sound will strike the obstacle obliquely, the echo will not be heard by him, but by anybody standing at a distance in the opposite direction. In a crowded room, you can only speak with difficulty, so as to be understood by every one present, but in an empty room, the sound is heard distinctly. Furniture, soft texture, such as carpets, etc., are bad sound reflectors, hence it will be well to remove all those hindrances of a free propagation of sound, in order to have a smoothly regular surface. On a plane surface, sound is thrown back without being dispersed or collected; on a convex surface, sound is dispersed, and on concave surfaces, collected. If the reflecting obstacle is at the distance of fifty-six feet from the speaker, only the last reflected syllable can be distinguished, and then the echo is monosyllabic; if the reflecting obstacle is two, three, or more times the distance of fifty-six feet, the echo will be dissyllabic, trisyllabic, and so on.

The scientific man speaks of multiplying echoes, they are those by which the same sound is returned or repeated several times, and this phenomenon takes place when two reflecting obstacles or bodies are placed opposite to each other, two rocks parallel to one another, reflect the sound emitted. The echo, Canyon, about ten miles this side of Weber river, and fifty miles from Great Salt Lake City, has in some places, where rocks are in favorable positions, good multiplying echoes.

On my travels in Silesia, and Bohemia, in Austria, I came in the latter country to a village called Adersbach, a very romantic place, in the midst of fantastically-shaped rocks towering up to the sky, about sixty miles from Breslau, the capital of Silesia, in Prussia, where I heard an echo repeating seven syllables three times; and at the celebrated Loreley Falls, on the Rhine, of which Byron, in his Childe Harold, gives a beautiful description, there is another phenomenon of acoustics that repeats the same sound seventeen times. At Rosneath, Dumbartonshire, there is said to be a wonderful echo which faithfully repeats eight or ten notes of a tune played with a trumpet, but a third lower; after a short interval, it is heard to repeat the same tune still lower; and after a similar interval, the echo produces a third repetition in a tone a third lower still. There is also an echo on the Villa Simonetta, near Milan or Milano, the capital of Austria's Lombardic Venitian possessions, by which a shout is repeated thirty times; there is likewise a very remarkable echo in the ancient city of Pavia, in Upper Italy, repeating the last syllable of a question the above number of times. The Roman historians speak of some wonderful echoes amongst the classical ancients, as for instance, the tomb of the Metelli, at Rome, which is reported to have quite distinctly repeated eight times the first verse of Virgil's Æneid, which contains fifteen syllables, so also the echo of Capo-di-Bove, was very celebrated.

The ear or grotto of Dionysius, of Syracuse, and the whispering gallery of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, represent the remarkable phenomenon of acoustic foci; that is to say, two persons under an arched ceiling may converse with each other, at two opposite corners, in a low voice, and not be heard by anybody in the intermediate space, as the words of one speaking at one end will be transmitted quite distinctly to the other end. The oracles of the ancient heathen gods are supposed to have had their origin in this property of sound, with which the priests were probably very familiar.

The uniform density of the air influences much the propagation of sound, as a disturbance of the atmospheric equilibrium causes great reflections of sound, hence the human voice is not so much heard in misty, foggy weather, as in a clear, calm air.

The speaking and hearing trumpets are instruments well known to the reader, and are constructed for the purpose of increasing sound by reflection. These cylindrical tubes carry sound a great distance, and the philosophy of the instrument is understood by the waves of sound reflecting successively from the sides of the tubes. Those reflections are calculated to make the waves more and more divergent, (the mathematical term "divergent," signifies going to various parts from one point,) on account of the peculiar form of the speaking trumpet which consists of a tube made of a tin-plate or brass, which, throughout its length, is rather conical, (conical is derived from the Latin conis, signifying a solid body, of which the base is a circle, and which ends in a point like a sugar-loaf,) but at one end bell-shaped, and is applied to the mouth at the other end for the purpose of transmitting the sound of the human voice to a distance. It is evident from this instrument, that the more the amplitude of the vibration of aerial particles is increasing near the funnel, (a funnel is an inverted hollow cone with a pipe descending from it,) the more the sound is increasing. The hearing trumpet is a conically-shaped tube, one of the ends terminates in a bell, by which the sound is received, and the other end is applied to the ear; it is used by deaf persons.

Chords in the science of acoustics signify thread-shaped bodies, that are made elastic by tension. There are two kinds of oscillations observed in tense chords, the one is transversal, that is, in a direction perpendicular to the chords; the other longitudinal, that is, in the direction of this length.

The sonometer is from the Greek, and signifies sound-measurer, and mono-chord being derived from the same language, signifies an instrument of one string. The sonometer or mono-chord is an apparatus used for the purpose of examining the transversal vibrations of chords. It consists of a case of thin wood, which is intended to heighten the sound; on this case are two bridges with a metallic chord over them, fixed on one extremity, and stretched at the other by weights that can be increased optionally. A third bridge is moveable along the case, for the purpose of varying the length of the chord which is made to vibrate.

A series of continued, rapid, and isochronous, (isochronous is derived from the Greek, and signifies performed in equal times,) oscillations or vibrations produce on the ear a sensation of some duration, which is called a musical sound. In reference to their union or discord, such a sound can always be compared with others of the same nature, hence it is easily distinguished from mere noise. In musical sounds, three particular qualities can be perceived—height, intensity and distinctness. The height of a musical sound is the impression made upon the auricular nerve by the greater or less number of vibrations made in a certain time. Low sounds are the result of a small number of vibrations, and high sounds are produced by a great number of vibrations. Hence all sounds that are at the extremities of the scale of perceptible sounds, are called low or high. All the intermediate sounds are called low or high, only in a relative manner. Tone is the relative depth or height of two sounds, that is to say, this word expresses the degree of the height of a given sound.

Union is the result of two sounds being produced by the same number of vibrations. The unison of a musical sound can always be determined, but not that of a noise.

Previous to my closing this article, I will give a short anatomical description of the ear. That important organ is constituted a) of the ear trumpet, a wide-mouthed tube, which is intended to receive the waves of sound gathered at the focus of the nervous part of the ear-tube. This tube, owing to the action of certain muscles, is moveable by horses, mules, donkeys, dogs, and many other animals, so that the same can be directed towards the point where the sound comes from; b) of the tympanum, derived from the Latin, and signifies the drum of the ear, which is a tight drawn membrane, (membrane is from the Latin, signifying a web of many fibres interwoven together for the purpose of covering some parts) at the bottom of the ear-tube, upon which the gathered sound falls, and ceases its vibration. The eustachian tube is an open passage, through which the air within the drum is communicating with the external air, and leads to the back of the ear. When this tube is filled up with cotton or anything else, so that the free communication of the internal and external air is disturbed, a person is rather deaf; c) of the vestibule, from the Latin, signifying entrance, into the labyrinth, and is connected with the tympanum by four small bones, which are intended to transmit to the labyrinth the vibrations from the tympanum; d) the labyrinth, which is the inner receptacle of the ear, and is covered by the auditory nerve, the nerve of hearing, of receiving sounds; this nerve serves as a cover to the labyrinth, and is the connecting link between the organ of sense and the brain. The labyrinth is full of water, so that when the membrane is pressing on the four small bones, the water close to those small bones is compressed, which sensation is felt instantly throughout the whole mass of water, and in this manner the waves of sound or vibrations are transmitted to the cover of the labyrinth, and brought within the reach of the organ of hearing.

From India.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Rochester Democrat writing from Sittung, April 27, says: Last night we had a tremendous gale, with some rain. We are near the time when the long monsoon rains set in. We have now had a dry season of about six months, in which we have had scarcely a shower. Vegetation is of course withered up, except near the banks of the rivers. But we shall soon have rain without stint. Think of eight or nine feet of water falling in three months! No wonder that much of the country is under water, and that we can travel overland by boats. This is the common mode of travelling with us, and answers very well for the Burman missionaries, since the Burmese live by the rivers. But the Keren missionaries find it convenient to reach their hearers who live mostly in the hills away from the rivers, by elephants. Government is constructing a road from Toungoo to Maulmain, so that one can travel by cart if he chooses. There are no horses in this country, except those that are imported; but ponies abound and are an agreeable substitute. There are no railroads here, and the journey of a day at home, will consume weeks here. We are, however, about to have one Yankee invention for our benefit, the electric telegraph. The poles are now being set from Maulmain and Rangoon to Shwaygeen and Toungoo.

We hear that Prome has been nearly all consumed by fire. We have lost one of our senior missionaries—Rev. J. L. Ingalls, who died on his way from Calcutta to Rangoon, about the middle of last month.

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, July 31, 1856.

The bill directing the manner of payment of the California War Bonds was passed.

The following bills were likewise passed.

To continue the improvement of the Des Moines Rapids in the Mississippi River.

To continue the improvement of the Harbors of Newark, New Jersey; Conneaut, Huron, Fairport, Ashtabula, Sandusky, Cleveland, Black River, Ohio.

To continue the improvement of the Harbors of Buffalo, Dunkirk, Oswego, Oak Orchard Creek, Big Sodus and Little Sodus, New York.

Also the bill making an appropriation for a steam dredge on Lake Ontario.

Also the bill for the completion of the Breakwater at Burlington, Vermont.

Also the bills providing for the continuation of the improvement of the Missouri and Arkansas Rivers.

Also the bill to continue the construction of the Breadwater on the east side of Reedy Island. Adjoured.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The contested election was taken up.

Mr. Washburne, of Me., contended that the election of Mr. Whitfield was without authority of law, and he comes here as the choice only of the minority of the resident citizens of Kansas; therefore he is not entitled to the seat. The election under which Mr. Reeder claimed was equally without authority of law; but, inasmuch as he is the choice of a larger number of residents than those who voted for Whitfield, the Committee recommend that he be admitted to the seat. To deny to Kansas the right to be heard through the choice of its resident citizens, merely because that choice was manifestly outside of legal forms, and necessarily so because the law making power was destroyed by foreign violence, is to deny Kansas the right to be heard at all on the floor of the House.

Mr. Smith, of Tenn., called attention to the fact that the Committee on Elections in other contested cases had reported a resolution that the contestant was entitled to the seat, but in this they recommend that Reeder be admitted. Was right or might to prevail?

Mr. Savage insisted that the whole transaction in its origin was an assault upon the Constitution and laws of the United States, and in its progress was an assault upon justice and truth. Instead of facts, the report of the majority of the Kansas Investigating Committee was a compound of the grossest partiality, misrepresentation and falsehood, not to say perjury. To the traitorous and bloody movements of the Congressional Aid Society, and others who supported them, must be attributed all the horrible events of Kansas. Like gamblers, they resort to the bowie knife and grab game, four hundred millions of the Federal treasury being the stake for which they were now conducting their Presidential schemes.

Mr. Washburne, of Me., asked that the statement of Mr. Reeder be read.

Several objections were interposed, but were finally withdrawn.

A letter from Mr. H. Green, dated Merchants' Hotel, Philadelphia, was first read, stating that Mr. Reeder was confined there by sickness, and wishing some gentleman to write to Mr. Reeder, informing him what day the debate on the Kansas election case would be closed.

The Speaker remarked that Mr. Reeder's statement was without date.

The Clerk then commenced reading the statement, which is to the effect that a great mass of evidence renders it indisputable that the Legislative Assembly of Kansas was a fraudulent usurpating body, elected in a manner disgraceful to the age.

After some interruption the clerk resumed the reading of the statement of Mr. Reeder, but before he had finished it a motion to adjourn prevailed.

SENATE. August 1.

Mr. Crittenden presented the memorial of Lieut. Bartlett, relative to the action of the Naval Board in his case, and that of the Senate Naval Committee thereon. Mr. Crittenden spoke on the case, and on his motion the papers were ordered to be printed with view to do justice to Mr. Bartlett.

Mr. Cass and Mr. Stuart presented petitions from citizens of Michigan praying for the admission of Kansas with the Topeka constitution.

On motion of Mr. Seward, a resolution was adopted, directing the Committee on Commerce to inquire whether it is expedient to require that the fire rooms of steam vessels be constructed of fireproof material.

The Senate then considered the report of the Committee on Indian affairs. The report states that no further legislation is necessary in the case of Richard W. Thompson, who made an agreement with the Menomonee Indians for one-third of the money he should procure for them in addition to the amount allowed for their lands, and their removal across the Mississippi. He obtained $240,000 from the Government, and modifying his original agreement, consented to take $40,000 as his fee. The bill passed last Congress, authorizing that this be paid him, with the proviso that Thompson should get the consent of the Indians, which he did. But complaint is made that Commissioner Manypenny prevented the payment, on the ground that the bill signed by the President was not the bill passed by Congress, the proviso having been, by some means, emitted therefrom.

The matter was debated, but no definite result arrived at. Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Boyce, of S. C., said he had received the certificate of the Governor of South Carolina, stating that Preston S. Brooks was re-elected to Congress, and asked that he be sworn in.

Mr. Brooks advanced to the chair of the Speaker, who administered the oath to support the constitution.

The Clerk finished the reading of Governor Reeder's statement. Among other things, he refers to the remarks of General Cass and Mr. Buchanan to show that a delegate may be admitted in the absence of a specific law for that purpose. He concludes by arguing in support of the positions heretofore assumed by him.

Mr. Whitfield, the sitting delegate, said his election should not be reversed without a full and impartial hearing. He maintained that he was elected over the statute passed in pursuance of the organic law, and therefore was entitled to remain where he was. There was here no proper legal challenge of his rights, from the fact that he had no competitor in the canvass. Hence, Mr. Reeder being a volunteer, had no right to contest. But apart from this, Gov. Reeder is estopped, he having certified the power to right such wrongs as were represented to exist. He insisted that every rule of testimony in his case had been violated by the Kansas Investigating Committee.

The resolution reported by the Committee on Elections, that Mr. Whitfield was not entitled to a seat as delegate from Kansas, was adopted by yeas 110, nays 92.

Mr. Washburne, of Me., asked but was denied, unanimous consent to pay Mr. Reeder mileage and per diem to date.

The House then considered, but passed no private bills. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Aug. 2.

The House passed eleven of its own and six of the Senate's private bills.

The House then went into Committee on the Fortification Appropriation bill.

After the bill had been amended, it was reported to the House with recommendation to strike out the enacting clause, with a view of its defeat.

This was disagreed to by a vote of 60 against 95.

A point was then raised that the first business in order was to vote on the amendments, including Mr. Benson's appropriating $100,000 for fortifications at the mouth of the Kenebec River, and $62,000 for the purchase of additional land on Staten Island for defensive purposes.

The Speaker decided that the only thing reported from the Committee of the Whole was the recommendation to strike out the enacting clause, and thus that all the amendments were cut off and the vote must be on the bill as originally reported.

After an inaffectual motion to table the bill it was passed.

The bill appropriations $1,583,000, including $75,000 for Fort Richmond and $25,000 for Fort Montgomery.

Mr. Herbert, of Cal., made an unsuccessful effort to introduce a resolution authorizing the intervention of the United States land and naval forces in San Francisco affairs.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the bill to defray the expenses of the Legislative, Executive and Judicial departments of the Government.

Mr. Herbert made personal explanation, saying that various charges had been made against him from both the Pacific and Atlantic coasts. He branded them as falsehoods, and declared that not one of his accusers could compare with him in point of purity, honor and integrity. The charges, he said, came from political enemies, and he considered them complimentary rather than disgracefnl.

The bill was discussed at considerable length, when the House took a recess untill 7 P. M.

Mr. Lumpkin, of Ga., spoke of the Black "Republican" party as being organized on sectional principles, and said its success would be the commencement of a revolution, for that party would conduct the Government in accordance with the triumphant majority, and no Southern man could accept office under it. He charged that the politcians of that party intended to bring about a disruption of the Union, and said to the rabid spirit of anti-slavery might be attributed the existing evils.

Mr. Wade, of Ohio, while engaged in his avowed object of calling men's minds to the better and purer days of the Republic, said if the Constitution was to be used as an instrument to propagate human bondage, it could not endure, nor was it desirable that it should. It has not been possible to construct a Union on the sentiments declared by the modern sham Black Democracy, who would substitute for the Constitution a machine for slavery extension, without limit, time or space.

Mr. Letcher, of Va., characterized Mr. Wade's speech as the most ultra he had ever heard from any quarter, and was inclined to think the gentleman's affection for the Union as strong as the devil's love for holy water. [Laughter.] He (Wade) no longer than Tuesday last, voted for the Fugitive Slave law, as embodied in Mr. Dunn's bill.

Mr. Wade replied it was a bitter pill, but being driven into the corner by sham Democracy, who are engaged in an effort to engraft slavery in Kansas, he was willing they should have the law till he could get a fair lick at it. [Laughter.]

Mr Letcher, resuming, said the gentleman, together with his "Republican" friends, voted for a law which they had over and over denounced in the face of God as a violation of the Constitution. He regarded these as revolutionary times, and alluded to the movements of the "Republican" and free State men of Kansas as treasonable.

Messrs. Valk, Petit, Pelton, Reade, Branch and Underwood, gave notice that they should print their speeches without consuming the time of the committee delivering them.

Mr. Ruffin, of N. C., spoke of Mr. Fremont as a mere adventurer and land grabber, and as the fit exponent of the "Republican" party. The people had not sunk so as to elect a manakin, moved by wires in the hands of political mountebanks. These Abolition disorganizers are plotting the destruction of the Government, while they act the part of landsharks, marauders and political gamblers. He said that the conduct of the Black "Republicans" was revolutionary and iniquitous, that Know Nothingism was a failure, that Mr. Fillmore had no chance, and that Mr. Buchanan was nationally sound. Adjourned.

SENATE. Aug. 4.

Mr. Wilson offered a resolution instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to report forthwith a resolution authorizing the President to direct the District Attorney of Kansas to enter a nolle prosequi on each of the indictments against Messrs. Robinson, Smith, Jenkins, John Brown, Williams, G. W. Brown and Deitzler for treason.

The Senate passed bills continuing certain public works in Massachusetts; for the improvement of the Mississippi River, and the harbors of New Castle, Delaware, and Erie, Pennsylvania; also the bills to continue the improvement of the Tennessee River. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed the bill providing for the appointment of a commission to run a boundary line between Washington Territory and the British Possessions, under the Oregon Treaty, there being conflicting claims, owing to the undetermination of the main channel, southerly from the Gulf of Georgia in the Straits of Fuca.

The Senate bill, appropriating $100,000 for the improvement of the Potapasco River, and rendering the port of Baltimore accessable to war steamers, was then passed.

Mr. Purviance moved a suspension of the rules, to enable him to introduce a resolution similar to that offered by Mr. Wilson in the Senate. Agreed to by 106 against 74.

The House passed the Senate bill, authorizing any two Judges of the Court of Claims to act as a quorum for the transaction of business, and providing for the appointment of a solicitor and an additional clerk.

In the evening session, there was considerable talk about the election of the Presidents being thrown into the House. Adjourned.

From Lake Superior Country.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Cincinnati Daily Columbian, writing from Superior City under date of the 6th inst., says:

This place may appear to some to be "out of the world," or beyond the reach of civilization; but such is not the case. From the important position which it occupies, it may be readily seen that it is bound to become, at a period not far distant, one of the leading towns of the Northwest. Situated as it is, at the head of navigation upon the lakes, and soon to be connected by railroad with the Mississippi, and also with Chicago, Milwaukie and Sheboygan, it cannot but become a town of rank and interest. The town is beautifully laid ont into lots, streets and avenues, and is situated on a pleasant elevation upon the bank of the St. Louis Bay, commanding an extensive and enchanting view of the lake and bay. With the exception of a small valley occasioned by the source of a clear cold rivulet, the town site is unbroken by ravines or hollows.

The ground is dry and entirely free from stones, yet there are an abundance of stumps and roots. That portion of the town which remains unimproved, is covered with a dense growth of spruce, fir and birch; these species of forest trees, with an addition of pine and maple, constitute the timbered region of Lake Superior. Cedar is also found on some of the streams, though not to any great extent.

Business is active and lively, and every thing commands high prices. Wages are good and mechanics in great demand. Provisions are rather high at present. Flour $10 50 per brl.; Pork $25 per brl.; Beef $18 per brl.; Hams 14 to 15c. per pound; Potatoes $2 per bushel; Beans $3 50 per bushel; Peas $3 per bushel; Dried Apples 121-2c. per pound; Sugar 12 to 15c per pound.

A regular line of boats run between this place and Cleveland, and also to Chicago. Mining companies are doing a good business and find an abundance of copper. Some persons working by the job are making $75 to $100 per month, clear of all expenses. The mines are about ten miles from this place.

Water here is not very good on the surface of the ground, in consequence of the clayey nature of the soil, but this difficulty is easily surmounted by digging through the clay into the sand below; by so doing an abundance of the purest water can be obtained. Water in the lake is good, perfectly pure and cold the year round.

Lake Superior possesses one peculiarity over other lakes west of Niagara Falls, from the fact that it has a regular tide ebbing and flowing every six hours. The climate here is healthy, the air being dry, and bracing breezes from the lake are cool and fresh.

The country being new, not much produce is yet raised, yet people are commencing to farm it some; those living on the north shore, about ten miles from here, have put large crops into the ground. The climate and soil are well adapted to the raising of wheat, rye, oats, potatoes, peas, beans, and all kinds of vegetables.

A Man Lynched in Missouri.

WE have already published an account of the poisoning of a spring at a school house in Morgan county, Mo., which caused the death of some of the pupils. A man named Ray was suspected and lodged in jail. He made his escape, but was retaken next day in Hickory county, and brought back on the 6th inst. Next day he was tried by "mob law," sentenced, and hanged, protesting his innocence to the last.

A correspondent of the Richmond Inquirer says the prisoner being allowed to speak, commenced as follows;

"Gentlemen and honorable citizens of Morgan county and State of Missouri, I come not to plead for mercy. I am an innocent man. I don't come before you with a darkened forehead, or a downcast eye. I come determined to die brave, and shall die without a tear in my eye. Gentlemen, take care of my poor wife and children, and see that they have plenty to eat and wear."

He looked up at the limb, and not a muscle of his face quivered. He only spoke twenty minutes more: he asked to pray during that time, and said, "I will not keep you long, gentlemen, and if I am a minute or two over my time, I hope you will excuse me."

He then got upon the bench, and remarked that he thought the rope was too short, as he wanted to fall further, so he might die easy, as he had seen persons before die hard when they did not have fall enough. The rope was fixed round his neck, and he tied the hankerchief over his face himself, and called all his friends to tell him good bye; he kissed one or two, and said, "I am innocent," when the bench was pulled from under him; but the rope not being fixed right, he had to be lifted up again, until the rope was properly adjusted, when he died in about five minutes.

An Unexpected Gift.

A YOUNG MAN of eighteen or twenty, a student in a University, took a walk one day with a Professor, who was commonly called the student's friend, such was his kindness to the young men it was his office to construct. While they were walking together, and the Professor was seeking to lead the conversation to grave subjects, they saw a pair of old shoes lying in their path, which they supposed to belong to a poor man who had nearly finished his day's task.

The young student turned to the Professor, saying:

"Let us play the man a trick: we will hide his shoes, and conceal ourselves behind those bushes and watch his perplexity when he cannot find them."

"My dear friend," answered the Professor, "we must not amuse ourselves at the expense of the poor. But you are rich, and you may give yourself a much greater pleasure by means of this poor man. Put a dollar in each shoe, and then we will hide ourselves."

The student did so, and placed himself with the Professor behind the bushes close by, through which they could easily watch the laborer, or see whatever wonder or joy he might express.

The poor man had soon finished his work, and came across the field to the path where he had left his coat and shoes. While he put on his coat he slipped one foot into one of his shoes; but, feeling something hard, he stooped and found the dollar. Astonishment and wonder were seen upon his countenance. He gazed upon the dollar, turned it round, and and looked again and again; then he looked around him on all sides, but could see no one.

He put the money into his pocket, and proceeded to put on the other; but how great was his surprise when he found the other dollar! His feelings overcame him—he saw the money was a present—and he fell upon his knees, looked up to Heaven, and uttered a loud and fervent thanksgiving, in which he spoke of his wife, sick and helpless, and his children without bread, whom this timely bounty from some unknown hand would save from perishing.

The young man stood there deeply affected and tears filled his eyes.

"Now," said the Professor, "are you not better pleased than if you had played your intended trick?"

"O, dearest sir," answered the youth, "you have taught me a lesson now I shall never forget! I feel now the truth of the words which I never before understood: 'It is better to give than to receive.'"

IF you please a fool, you must act like one. The chuckle-head who goes to sleep over Hamlet, will laugh his boots off at the second-rate joke of a fourth-rate clown. If you would interest men, you should only be one step above level. Politicians will please notice, and when they address a crowd of shoulder hitters, conclude the performance by pulling off their coats, and dashing their fists through the hall door.

"MISTER," said a regular go-ahead, active, persevering Yankee to a lazy drone that was lounging about, scarcely identified as being alive by his motion, "did you ever see a snail!" "Y-e-s, I r-a-ther think I have," said Mr. Drone. "Then," replied Jonathan, "you must have met it, for by Jerusalem, you never overtook one."

SOME men are like cats. You may stroke the fur the right way for years, and hear nothing but purring; but accidentally tread on the tail, and all memory of former kindness is obliterated.

"I find there are half a dozen partridges in the letter," said a gentleman to a servant—who replied, "Sir, I'm glad you found them in the letter, for they all flew out of the basket."

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

Change of Meeting-place.

THE LATTER DAY SAINTS will hold their Meetings every Sunday, in the large hall of the Assembly Rooms, 361 Broome street, at 10½ A. M., 3 and 7 P. M.

The public are respectfully invited to attend.

Letter Notice.

WE are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

St. Louis Book Agency.

J. S. CANTWELL, southwest corner of Washington avenue and Sixth street, St. Louis, Mo., has for sale, at the usual prices, the following books and pamphlets:

United States Mails Salt Lake City.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, MAY 31, 1856.

PROPOSALS for conveying the mails of the United States from the first day of December, 1856, to the 30th day of November, 1860, on the following route, will be received at the Contract Office of this Department until 9 A. M. of the 15th of October, 1856, to be decided the next day, to wit:

No. 8911 From Independence, (Mo.) via Fort Kearney and Fort Laramie, in Nebraska Territory, to Salt Lake City, in Utah Territory, 1,150 miles and back, once a month.

Leave Independence the first day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Salt Lake City on the last day of the month at 8 a m;

Leave Salt Lake City on the second day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Independence by the last day of the month.

NOTES.

Bidders are required to inform themselves of the actual distance, the weight and bulk of the mails to be carried (the whole mail required to be taken each trip,) and all other points essential to a correct understanding of their liability for the proper performance of the required service, before making their proposals, which must be guarantied by two responsible persons, certified to as such by a postmaster or judge of a court of record; and contract must be entered into by the successful bidder, with surety, before the 1st day of December, 1856.

No pay will be made for trips not performed, and for each of such omissions not satisfactorily explained three times the pay of the trip may be deducted. For arrivals so far behind time as to break connexion with depending mails, and not sufficiently excused, one fourth of the compensation for the trip is subject to forfeiture. Fines will be imposed, unless the delinquency be promptly and satisfactorily explained, for neglecting to take the mail from or into a post office; for suffering it to be injured, destroyed, robbed, or lost; and for refusing, after demand, to convey the mail as frequently as the contractor runs, or is concerned in running, vehicles on the route. The Postmaster-General may annul the contract for repeated failures to run agreeably to contract, or for disobeying the post office laws or instructions of the Department. The Post master-General may alter the schedule; he may also order an increase of service by allowing therefor a pro rata increase on the contract pay; he may also curtail or discontinue the service in whole or in part, of pro rata decrease of pay, allowing one month's extra compensation on the amount of service dispensed with. Bids should be addressed to the "Second Assistant Postmaster General," superscribed "Proposals for Salt Lake City Mails."

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, Il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

Look up!

SELECTED.

"Look up!" cried the seaman with nerves like steel,
As skyward his glance he cast,
And beheld his own son grow giddy, and reel
On the point of the tapering mast.
"Look up!" and the bold boy lifted his face,
And banished his brief alarms,
Slid down at once from his perilous place,
And leapt in his father's arms.

Look up! we cry to the sorely oppressed,
Who seem from all comfort shut,
Ye had better look up to the mountain crest,
Than down to the precipice foot;
The one offers heights ye may hope to gain,
Pure ether, and freedom, and room;
The other bewilders the aching brain
With roughness, and danger, and gloom.

Look up, meek soul, by affliction bent,
Nor daily with dull despair;
Look up, and in faith, to the firmament,
For heaven and mercy are there.
The frail flower droops in the stormy shower
And the shadows of needful night,
But it looks to the sun in the after hour,
And takes full measure of light.

Look up, sad man, by adversity brought
From high unto low estate,
Play not with the bane of corrosive thought,
Nor murmur at chance and fate;
Renew thy hopes, look the world in the face,
For it helps not those who repine;
Press on, and its cheer will amend thy pace;
Succeed, and its homage is thine.

Look up, great crowd, who are foremost set,
In the changeful battle of life,
Some days of calm may reward ye yet
For years of allotted strife;
Look up, and beyond, there's a guerdon there
For the humble and pure of heart,
Fruition of joys unalloyed by care,
Of peace that can never depart.

Look up, large spirit, by Heaven inspired,
Thou rare and expansive soul,
Look up with endeavor and zeal untired,
And strive for the loftiest goal,
Advance, and encourage the kindred throng,
Who toil up the slopes behind,
To follow, and hail with triumphant song
The holier regions of mind!

Extracts from the Speech of Wm. H. Seward,

FOR THE

Immediate Admssion of Kansas

INTO THE UNION.

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, APRIL 9, 1856.

From the Deseret News, June 11.

THE extracts are taken from the speech as published in the N. Y. Weekly Tribune of April 12, the comments thereupon are such as we have deemed proper to make, so far as space and time would permit.—Ed. 'News.'

We will commence with the first four periods.

"MR. PRESIDENT: To obtain empire is easy and common; to govern it well is difficult and rare indeed. I salute the Congress of the United States in the exercise of its most important function, that of extending the Federal Constitution over added domains, and I salute especially the Senate in the most august of all its manifold characters, itself a Congress of thirty-one free, equal, sovereign States, assembled to decide whether the majestic and fraternal circle shall be opened to receive yet another free, equal and sovereign State. The Constitution prescribes only two qualifications for new States, namely—a substantial civil community, and a Republican Government. Kansas has both of these."

Most frankly do we coincide with the statement that to govern well "is difficult and rare indeed," so much so that in the strict sense of the term well, in this connection, it never has and never will be done upon this earth without direct revelations from the Almighty, who organized and peopled this planet, and unto Whom it belongs. A steady persistence in practically rejecting this fact is the grand cause of the weakness, jarring and confusion prevailing in the councils of the nations, and explains the curious mixture of part truth, and part error, part wisdom and part fanaticism, part liberality, and part selfishness, to be found in the sayings and doings of nearly every professed and acknowledged wise man and statesman.

After the beautifully expressed salutation to Congress, we find the following truthful enunciation of the ONLY two constitutionally prescribed "qualifications for new States, namely, a substantial civil community, and a Republican Government," followed by the statement that "Kansas has both of these." Admit these statements to be true, and we rightfully claim the same candid admission and argument for Utah from Senator Seward, his friends, and every lover of freedom and equal rights. Neither can this claim be put by without rank and obvious injustice, more especially as Utah has demonstrated for a much longer period, and with far greater numbers, her "substantial civil community, and a Republican form of Government."

For these reasons alone we shall confidently look for consistency in Mr. Seward, and for his advocating a prompt compliance with the present unanimous knocking of Utah for admission, with at least as much zeal, learning and ability as he has displayed in favor of Kansas in the speech now under consideration. Now, Mr. Seward, we most respectfully ask you to sustain your positions, as above made known, both by voice and vote, when our Delegates present Utah's UNANIMOUS mememorial petitioning for simply what is her right.

"The Declaration of Independence asserts the political equality of ALL men, and even the Constitution itself carefully avoids any political recognition not merely of slavery, but of the diversity of races."

Most true, and equally true is it that the first two lines of Article I. of the amendments to that Constitution read, "Congress shall make NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF." Does not Mr. Seward value the last named priceless boon at least as highly as he does those he has named? And can he be so short-sighted and unjust as to be more careful of rights, colors and bodies pertaining to time and flesh, than he is of aiding to secure to every American citizen, whether in State or Territory, the right and privilege of worshiping God in accordance with His commandments and the dictates of conscience? We shall know, when Utah knocks at the doors of Congress halls.

"Whatever is forbidden expressly by the Constitution is unlawful. Whatever is not forbidden is lawful."

We most cordially thank you for that assertion, for you are reputed to be learned in international, national, State and municipal law, hence it comes to the public with more weight and being printed in the Tribune will have a wide circulation. But as memories are often treacherous and highly excited fanaticism rife in the land, we sincerely trust that you will not forget your last quoted assertion, nor let Article I. of the amendments of the Constitution escape your notice in connection therewith. So may you be preserved from blowing hot to-day and cold to-morrow, or from being caught in the predicament of the lawyer in the spelling book, who was found saying, "and if, and if, and if," when there was no ground for a single if.

"Examine the code created by the Legislature (of Kansas.) All the statutes of the State of Missouri are enacted in gross, without alternation or amendment, for the Government of Kansas; and then, at the end, the hasty blunder of misnomer is corrected by an explanatory act, that wherever the word 'State' occurs it means 'Territory,' and what a code! One that stifles not, indeed, the fruits of the womb, but the equally important element of a State, the fruits—the immortal fruits—of the mind; a code that puts in peril all rights and liberties whatsoever, by denying to men the right to know, to utter, and to argue freely, according to conscience—a right in itself conservative of all other rights and liberties."

"We are not familiar with that code, neither does it concern us, at least for the present. What we particularly wish now to note is the earnest, emphatic, and correct opposition to any "code that puts in peril all rights and liberties whatsoever, by DENYING TO MEN THE RIGHT TO KNOW, TO UTTER, AND TO ARGUE, FREELY, ACCORDING TO CONSCIENCE—A RIGHT IN ITSELF CONSERVATIVE OF ALL OTHER RIGHTS AND LIBERTIES." And not only any code, Mr. Seward, but any course or practice, whether in Congress or elsewhere.

Be pleased to bear particularly in mind that portion of your above quoted important statement which we have honored with small and large capitals; and condescend to allow a small amendment, (doubtless overlooked in the hurry of speaking,) by adding the words "to act" after the words "to know," so far as such action does not infringe upon any true rights of others, or upon any wholesome law or regulation. Will you be kind enough to accept of our amendment, so obviously necessary and in keeping, and to be mindful of your position in the hours of temptation so soon to assail you!

"I propose to apply the remedy now, by admitting the new State with its PRESENT population and present Constitution."

Again you are strictly and constitutionally correct, as also in the following:

"Freedom justly due cannot be conceded too soon."

"The Constitution does NOT PRESCRIBE 93,700, or ANY OTHER NUMBER of people, as necessary to constitute a State."

"The point made concerning numbers is therefore practically unimportant and frivolous."

If this true doctrine is applicable to Kansas with her reputed 40,000, and we contend it is, most certainly should it be extended to Utah with her 80,000 inhabitants, who are permanently increasing as rapidly as they are in Kansas, and probably more so. And is it aught but simply just to expect that Senator Seward, in his place in Congress and elsewhere, will give Utah his powerful aid in her lawful efforts to procure full constitutional liberty?

"Precedents in such cases, (steps for admission,) BEING WITHOUT FOUNDATION IN LAW, are without authority. This is a country whose Government is regulated, not by precedent, but by Constitutions."

Right again; and inasmuch as Utah, in her preliminary measures and action, followed the best precedents that government and governmental mail facilities had placed within her reach, then most certainly she has no cause for apprehension on the ground of informality or accidental oversight, should any thing of that nature be discovered in her proceedings, which we are confident will not.

"No Republican Government ever has endured, WITH STANDING ARMIES MAINTAINED IN ITS BOSOM TO ENFORCE SUBMISSION TO ITS LAWS."

We commend the perusal of the above quotation to the N. Y. Herald and its readers, a paper that recommended, with unblushing effrontery, the sending of troops into Utah, not to aid her inhabitants against the aggressions of the red men, for well it knew that she sought no such aid; not to enforce submission to laws, for equally well did that "Satanic print" know that Utah had been most loyal and law-abiding. On what ground, then, did it advocate such a devilish policy! Forsooth to compass, if possible, the corruption of the fairest and most virtuous of all the female sex, the lovely daughters of Utah. A policy most worthy the boasted Christianity and enlightenment of the 19th century!!!

With the quotations thus far made we cheerfully and almost entirely coincide, and had hoped to be able to do so to the end. But, alas for poor human nature, even in a man so noted for political wisdom as Senator Seward, for he broke down on his own platform, in his efforts to get a fling at polygamy in Utah before so polished an audience, as will be plainly seen by comparing the teachings and positions of previous quotations with the following:

"Even then you must give over Utah to Slavery, to make it secure and permanent in Kansas; and you must give over Oregon and Washington to both Polygamy and Slavery, so as to guarantee equally the one and the other of those peculiar domestic institutions in Utah; and so you must go on sacrificing on the shrine of peace, Territory after Territory, until the prevailing nationality of freedom and of virtue shall be lost, and the vicious anomalies, which you have hitherto vainly hoped Almighty Wisdom would remove from among you without your own concurrence, shall become the controling elements of the Republic."

Mr. Seward, what evil spirit could have tempted so great a man to take so long a stride from his subject, and to pour his scattering insinuations upon isolated Utah! How could you have so far forgotten your text, and like a sectarian priest preached so far from it, and so entirely irrelevant to it! Who told you that the practise of polygamy was unvirtuous, that it was a vicious anomoly! Is it possible that sound arguments for rights of the 40,000 freemen in Kansas were not, at least, as valid in favor of 80,000 freemen in Utah, a contiguous Territory of the same great Republic! Had you so soon entirely forgotten Article I. of the amendments, or must you sacrifice candor and consistency in order to tickle the ears of your auditory!

If your object was to please the ladies who thronged the galleries, we must courteously correct the delusion which blinded you, with the information that every noble-minded, every virtuous and truy intelligent female in all Christendom is despising celibacy, manogamy and their attendant accursed abominations, as rapidly as you will permit true light and knowledge from Heaven to enlighten their understandings.

You must surely have let dust accumulate thickly on your Bible, the source of all valuable laws with which you are acquainted, or you could not have been unmindful that it was in the seed of polygamic Abraham that all the nations of the earth were to be blessed. A polygamist who received the word and will of God, who talked with angels and with his Maker, and whose second wife, during the life of the first, was counseled in her domestic affairs by the Almighty and received promises from Him concerning her offspring. "If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham." John viii. 39. Why did it not occur to you that the Saviour himself was a lineal descendant from that righteous polygamist Jacob! Then you might have saved yourself from your present ignorant predicament, and peradventure have remembered that the God of Abraham, of Isaac and of Jacob was the same yesterday, to-day and forever; that his course is one eternal round; that he changeth not, but that is one eternal round; that he changeth not, but that it is foolish men who "change the laws, transgress the ordinances and break the everlasting covenant."

Having made our quotations in all fairness, and having criticized your speech far more daintily than you commented upon the course of President Pierce, after calling your closer and more prayerful attention to your Bible, after again asking you to urge Utah's request for admission into the Union with the same ability with which you have argued the cause of Kansas, after urging upon yourself the strict practice of those portions of your speech which we have quoted and coincided with, we will close with its ending as we began with its beginning, also commending your own exhortation to your careful study, lest peradventure you be again found forgetful, and again make yourself as one of the simple ones in the eyes of the assembled beauty and wisdom of our nation:

"Mr. President, the Continental Congress of 1787, on resigning the trust, which it had discharged with signal fidelity, into the hands of the authorities elected under the new Constitution, and in taking leave of their constituents, addressed to the people of the United States this memorable injunction: 'Let it never be forgotten that the cause of the United States has always been the cause of human nature.' Let us recall that precious monition; let us examine the ways which we have pursued hitherto, under the light thrown upon them by that instruction. We shall find, in doing so, that we have forgotten moral right in the pursuit of material greatness, and we shall cease henceforth from practising upon ourselves the miserable delusion that we can safely extend Empire, when we shall have become reckless of the obligations of Eternal Justice, and faithless to the interests of Universal Freedom."

Will the N. Y. Weekly Tribune please copy!

The Eastern Mail.

Which left Independence May 1, reached the Weber on the 30th of the same month, and arrived in this city about 4 p. m. of the 4th inst., being over five days in crossing a small stream (swimming to a horse for about a rod) and traveling 44 miles. Locomotives and telegraph wires must be abashed at the display of such astonishing energy and speed, and the Ox Line may now crack its whip with impunity on route No. 8911, for it has best contractor time, over the same ground and distance, at the rate of two days to the contractor's five.

The mail brought on the 4th, 21 brass-lock sacks, 1 iron-lock way sack, 1 iron-lock dropletter bag and 3 bags tied with cords. Much of the mail matter was wet through, and the entire contents of two of the corded bags, containing the Patent Office agricultural report for 1854, were in excellent condition for bleaching and throwing into the pulp tub of the paper-maker, as wrappers, cloth covers, pasteboard and leaves were soaked and chafed into a useless and nondescript mass. This is more to be regretted, for that report contained much information highly valuable to our agricultural interests.

There are other singular circumstances connected with this mail. The sack containing some letters was not quite half full, and of that unusually small amount, there were only 66 came under brass lock for this city, and about one-third of these had been missent. What makes this small number all the more strange and unaccountable, is the fact that a clerk in the Post Office at Independence told Mr. Leonard I. Smith, just previous to the mail's starting, that within the last three days they had done up between 5 and 10,000 letters for G. S. L. City. Again, as near as we can at present learn, the office at Independence put the through mail matter of May 1st into 12 new brass-lock sacks, and only 10 of that description have arrived. The other two sacks would have held that large number of missing letters, concerning which the clerk informed Mr. Smith at the time of their being mailed. The condition and locality of the large number of letters, that should have arrived, are to us unknown.

Another brass-lock sack, filled with newspapers, was brought in from the Weber on the 7 inst.: whether there are still other sacks on the bottom, banks, or tow-heads of the Weber, is also to us unknown.

The failure of the letter mail has, for the present, thrown confusion over details which we had hoped to be enabled to continue to report, not only for our accommodation and the information of our readers, but also that the Post Office Department might be familiar with actual facts touching mail arrivals on route No. 8911, in addition to the official returns from the Post Office in this place.

We are well assured that the mail, which left Independence on the 1st of May, started with 12 brass-lock sacks and, as already mentioned, it has brought in 22 sacks of that description and 3 corded or book sacks. By reference to No. 10 of the current vol. of the "News," it will be found that there were at that time 15 brass-lock and 9 book-sacks still left somewhere on the route, which with the 12 brass-locks last started with make 27 brass-lock and 9 book sacks that this mail should now have delivered, thus leaving at least 5 brass-lock and 6 book sacks somewhere between this city and Independence, since last November. The almost total failure of the letter mail prevents our being any more exact at present, and for aught we know there may be yet at random still more than the 11 sacks above noted.

There is so favorable a prospect that the contractor will be released from farther performance (non-performance!) of his contract, from and after the 18th of August, 1856, that we gladly waive comment upon his memorial to the Postmaster General, and upon his miserably inefficient operations on the route from the beginning, trusting that the large amount of government funds, paid to him for getting in the way of those who would have done, and then performing almost a solemn nothing, may prove as little of a gratification and benefit to him as his mail-course has been to us. With this candid and strictly just wish, we hope to be able to close our brief biographical notice of one W. M. F. Magraw, contractor on route No. 8911.

If the Post Office Department of Progressive America wish to again let the contract on route No. 8911 after the fashion last practised, we cordially commend to their perusal that chapter in Little Dorrit which treats upon the "Circumlocution Office." And if they are particularly anxious to continue "HOW NOT TO DO IT" upon this route, we recommend their letting the contract to some high-minded, honorable gentleman of the right stripe, who is perfectly skilled in knowing "how not to do it," or at least to some one who would much prefer that no mails ever reach Utah, even when perfectly reasonable and responsible bids are before them from those alone whom they know will use every possible exertion to render faithful service. Such a course will effectually carry out the "how not to do it" policy, and afford Congress a welcome pretext at each session, for making large appropriations for services never rendered, and for losses never sustained.

Studied neglect and wilful abuse of the most intelligent, patriotic, exemplary and law-abiding portion of her citizens may be a wise course in a nation, but we most respectfully dissent from that policy, and close for the present with the following quotation from the New York Herald:

"POST OFFICE NEGLECT.—We have received a letter from Mr. William H. Prior, complaining that a letter addressed to him, and mailed in this city on the 2d inst., did not reach him till Saturday, 19th. Mr. Prior must be a stranger here. Had he been long a resident of New York, he would have got over the old delusion that the postal service was organized for the purpose of carrying and delivering letters. He would have known that the Post Office exists for the purpose of providing berths for meritorious politicians of the barnacle species; and that if, besides fulfilling its aim in this respect, it occasionally carries and delivers a letter or two, it deserves the thanks of a grateful community. Mr. Prior will know better another time."—[Deseret News.

The Insurrection at Madrid.

ADVICES to the 19th leave no doubt that the O'Donnell government reigned supreme at Madrid. The city at that date was reported "tranquil." Espartero was still at Madrid, and, according to The London Times correspondence, O'Donnell had offered him passports to any part of Spain, or to go abroad. An official return says the loss of the troops in suppressing the insurrection were 6 officers killed and 19 wounded; 32 soldiers killed and 2 missing, and 202 wounded. No return is made of the loss sustained by the insurgents, but private accounts say that the troops behaved with great ferocity, and butchered several companies of the National Guard after they had ceased to resist. Business was beginning to be resumed, and crowds daily visited the scenes of conflict. The artillery had damaged a number of buildings, among them the palaces of Medina-Celi and the Platerias, also the residences of the Count de Onate, the Countess Montijo, and others in the streets of Milanese and Toledo.

Lord Howden, the English Embassador, was, as usual, absent from his post when these events took place. He has received orders by telegraph to return instantly to Madrid, via Saragossa.

Marshal Narvaez, on the revolt breaking out, offered his services to O'Donnell, and has received the appointment of Minister to Paris in place of Sr. Olozaga.

The Duke of Alba, brother in-law of the Empress Eugenie, is appointed Mayor of Madrid, pro tem.

Patricio Escosura has sought refuge at the British Embassy; his brother, who held a command in the insurgent ranks, had escaped.

Letters from Madrid of the 18th bring the following intelligence: On the previous day numerous arrests were made, and orders were given that the insurgents who had been taken prisoners should be sent under strong escort to some fortified places around the capital. Among the persons arrested is M. Madoz. He commanded a battalion of the National Guard during the insurrection, as well as M. Escosura. The latter has as yet escaped the search made for him. Several general officers who were at Madrid during the late events, but did not present themselves to the military authorities, are to be brought before a court martial to answer for their conduct.

The universal opinion is, that the bearing of the army during the whole of the late events was admirable. The immediate cause of the sudden dispersion of the National Guard is not yet known. The movement was commenced by the battalion of M. Madoz, which occupied one of the houses near the palace of the Cortes. M. Madoz had massed his companies in a cross street, protected from the fire of the soldiers, and when they were all assembled there, he all at once ordered them to return to their homes. This order was given after the fire had been opened by the troops, and after a conference had been held by M. M. Madoz, Rivero, (the democrat,) and others, with M. Serrano, the Captain General of Madrid. This order for dispersing was naturally communicated to all the other posts, and they in their turn, after a little hesitation, gave way. Various surmises exist as to what took place at the conference just mentioned.

It is said that M. Madoz and his friends were alarmed at the warmth of the fire of the troops, and from understanding that it was the determination of O'Donnell to act with the greatest severity. Other accounts say that the ammunition of the National Guard was already exhausted. It is thought that the resolution of M. Madoz was come to in concert with Marshal Espartero. The latter, his partisans say, seeing the turn given to things in the Congress by the Democrats, did not wish to sacrifice the throne, or launch into the hazards of anarchy and civil war, and in consequence did all he could to restore tranquility. It is stated that Marshal Espartero appeared for a moment at the Congress on the 15th, and that he retired very much disgusted. There has been in all his conduct more weakness than evil intention or malevolence. The large quantity of specie which had been sent from Paris by the Credit Mobilier Company arrived in safety at Madrid. M. Pedro Bayarri on the 17th took possession of the Ministry of the Marine.

The Madrid Gazette publishes a great number of promotions and dismissals; all the general and other officers who were wounded have obtained their next step, and the soldiers who distinguished themselves, or who have been wounded, receive decorations and pensions. The Queen had 30,000 cigars distributed among the troops. Several Governors of Provinces have been placed on the retired list. There is also a decree removing Gen. Prim from his functions of Governor of Grenada, but the Queen reserves to herself "to utilize his services on his return from abroad." Gen. Prim some days back left for Spain.

The Journal de Madrid says that Espartero demanded a passport for some place abroad, and that the Government gave it to him for any place which might best suit him. It is said that he left Madrid by the Alcala gate in a post chaise escorted by cavalry. The same journal says that some idea of the great resources of the Government to put down the insurrection might be formed by the fact that it had 69 pieces of artillery ready for action, but only made use of 12 of them.

Novel Scene in a French Theatre.

THE Paris correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune gives the following account of an amusing scene which occurred during the representation of a play recently. The piece was a very successful one, and in one of the scenes lambs played an important part. To give greater effect the machinist determined to procure the genuine article, instead of using dumb representatives. The animals were trained so that they played their part to a charm in the rehearsals, and at the first performance they formed an exquisitely beautiful group around a corydon, whom they saluted with bleatings. The theatre shook to its foundation with the loud applause. The applause continued and the sheep became frightened, and popped, some into the stage boxes—some over the footlights into the orchestra—and of course the whole flock followed their leaders. The ladies in the boxes shrieked, the orchees whooped and hallowed to prevent the sheep from tumbling on their violins, the house roared. The supernumeries were thrown off after them, but it was an hour before they were caught. The next day they were sent to the shambles.

Certain Cure for a Felon.

WE are sure that all who have suffered from a genuine bone felon, will thank us for making public so simple, and yet so effectual a remedy as the following. In thousands of instances, weeks and months of the most intense suffering have been endured, allowing of neither rest by day, nor sleep by night, and when a cure is at last effected, the finger or thumb is often deformed and rendered useless for life. As soon as it becomes apparent that a felon is making its appearance, which is known by a continued soreness and pain proceeding from the bone, and sometimes evincing but little change for the worse for a week or more, take a strong cord of any kind, and wrap it around the finger, above the afflicted part, as tightly as it can be borne. Keep in this condition until the pain can be endured no longer. Now loose the cord, and as soon as the pain or soreness caused by the cording subsides, tighten it again. Continue this for several days, or until the felon is completely blackened and killed. We have known several persons, who had been afflicted with felons, to try this remedy with complete success; in fact, we have never known it to fail. The cording stops the circulation, and thus the sore has nothing to feed on, and soon dies of starvation. We have faith in this remedy, even after a felon has made considerable progress.

An Excellent Sentiment

IN 1839 the Duke of Wellington fought the Earl of Winchelsea. It grew out of facts which occurred in a Parliamentary debate. In the correspondence the Duke of Wellington used the following striking language, which it would be well to engrave upon the walls of Congress:

"No man has a right, whether in public or private, by speech or in writing, or in print, to insult another, by attributing to him motives for his conduct, public or private, which disgrace or criminate him. If a gentleman commits such an act indiscreetly, in the heat of debate, or in a moment of party violence, he is always ready to make reparation to him whom he may thus have injured."

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, AUG. 16, 1856.

Our Excursion.

In these days when one-half of creation is scratching, kicking, swearing, swaggering, threatening and seeking to butcher the other half, and our position in Gotham obliging us to witness a large share of the struggle, we have felt often a longing desire to retreat from the bustle, confusion, din and sickening rage for a little, to breathe the "caller air" and rest a while from the ordinary routine of business. Kansas and California, Harbor and River Appropriation bills, together with President making, monopolizing the whole attention of Congress, we invited our honorable colleagues, George A. Smith and Dr. Bernhisel, with Judge Wm. J. Appleby and Bishop Heywood from Washington and friends from Connecticut, Pennsylvania and New York, together with the staff of the office, to join us in our excursion to Tom's River, New Jersey, where we have had an invitation for a long time and carte blanche invitations for friends. To our great regret and their's, the Doctor and Bishop could not cut loose from business and join our little party. We should have been exceedingly pleased likewise to have enjoyed the society of President F. D. Richards, Bishop Felt and the brethren from England, whose arrivals and departures are noticed elsewhere, but the lateness of the emigration season and the business they had to attend to West before they started on the plains for Utah, rendered it impossible for them to stay a single day. As soon as they took their departure for St. Louis we started for the Jersey harbor, where Captain S. P. Brown had moored his schooner, Banner, for some days waiting the moment we could lock up and bid good-by to dull care. We got on board and found that the captain and crew had rigged out our little craft with taste and well supplied with all the nic-nacs for our comfort on a fishing voyage. Friday night of last week was anything but inviting for a start—the clouds lowered, the thunder rolled and the lightning flashed with great rapidity and splendor, we, nevertheless, had no notion of backing out, and off we started slowly and cautiously. The storm increasing and the rain pouring down in copious profusion, we cast anchor off Long Island.

At the supper table some began to show symptoms of squamishness and hostility to the viands. In a few hours the storm abated somewhat and we weighed anchor and beat about all night, making but little progress. The morning was delightful and formed a great contrast to the preceding dark and cloudy evening. We got our fishing tackle hauled out and had a good share of exercise, amusement and success; having caught quite a number of blue fish of considerable size. We had all more or less a share of dizziness, but all kept moving save Col. Geo. A. Smith and Elder Stenhouse, who squared out on the deck, comforting each other in their affliction with the oft-repeated assurance that it was "a delightful excursion!"

We neared Barnegat Inlet, forty miles south of Sandy Hook, at 11 P.M. The night was very dark and ebb tide at the moment we were ready to cross the bar. It was a question whether we should venture into the narrow, crooked and difficult passage; but rather than roll about till daylight, we took our chances of running against the shoals, as we had confidence that our nautical brethren were equal to the work. Captain Reamer, who had favored us with his society from New York, took his place at the mast head, Capt. Brown at the wheel, "Joe" throwing the lead, "Edward" tending the centre board, and off we started. In crossing the bar the sea broke twice over our little schooner. The wind had just blown off the Colonel's hat as he was sitting by the wheel, when the water in a mighty sheet poured down upon his devoted head and dashed down upon Judge Appleby, half asleep in the cabin. Elders Savage, George J. Taylor and Stenhouse came in for a big share of the water, to their no small consternation, especially as it was accompanied with the quick order, "close the hatchways." Being more surprised than hurt, their quick exit from the cabin caused more than one joke the remainder of the trip. We got to a safe anchorage about two miles from the mouth of the Inlet, and at midnight, our nerves being pretty regular and little rolling movement of the schooner, the most sickly began to cultivate a closer acquaintance with the good things of the captain's table. We had midnight worship of our Heavenly Father and retired to rest for a few hours.

Sunday morning at five o'clock we were again on the move. Little or no wind, but a delightful morning. Though absent from Gotham, we can never travel far without thinking and doing something for THE MORMON; we had accordingly a considerable number of English, Scotch, Irish, Manx, French, German and American papers for general perusal and entertainment. Utah and Mormonism, of course, having the first and best attention, we were on the hunt for the last attack or goose story among the Gentiles. The Glasgow Saturday Post had the only piece about the Mormons, and all were summoned to hear someting about "Women in Mormondom." The Post had an astounding revelation for "all the world and the rest of mankind," as "old Zach" would say—astounding revelation. The women in Utah are so poor as to wash linen to gain a livelihood and split wood to make the kettle boil. Poor creatures, how our heart bleeds for them—how much they are to be pitied—just think of a woman working. What barbarism! Who ever heard of such a thing outside of Utah! And the Post has been enabled to enlighten the world on this horrible state of things from the information received from "a Mormon just escaped from the Territory." How romantic and miraculous! "Just escaped." He should be exhibited. How fortunate to escape from such a terrible state of things where there is no loafing even for the women. It is to be regretted that the name of the fortunate person has been withheld from the public. We wonder if it is not the same that was advertised as having escaped from the convict stone breaking department with a piece of chain dangling to his left leg, and last seen entering the Kanyon with a flitch of bacon on his shoulder, half covered with a brown handkerchief, both belonging to one of these same hard-working women, stolen the night before to serve him on the journey eastward! Would the Scotch editor just invite him to exhibit the ancles of his continuations and post us on the matter?

But these poor women, so deplorably poor as to be obliged to work. We can't get over it. How much better it would be to return to the States and Europe, and take lessons from their more fortunate sisters. How nice it would be to parade the streets, avenues, and public places—during the day, arrayed in the finest silks and satins the hands and heads of men have brought into the market of civilized society—and go to the theatre, ball-room, and freelove reunions in the evening, in the thinest gauze, hanging over six feet diameter hoops, in grand profusion, but sparingly over the bosom, lest the eyes of adultery should find no attraction. Oh how stupid the women in Utah are to have husbands that work in the field, and live and keep their families by their united labor and exertions; how much easier and more convenient to have a husband not so very particular about who works, who makes, who toils, and who pays—how convenient to be respectable, get credit, borrow and bet on a grand and magnificent scale, and sport about without a moment's thought of who has toiled from daylight to dusk, been ill-payed, half-starved, oppressed, broken-hearted, and ruined forever by their damnable corrupt scoundrilism. Oh ye simpletons of Utah! why live with men who are ignorant of the game of speculation and usury; why toil when you can flutter about in lazy indolence in a plumage rivalling that of the birds of Paradise, and the only return for all such favors is the simple sacrifice of SELF-RESPECT. Oh simple Utonians! to pride yourselves in virtue, why value so highly a clear conscience before God! why prize the smiles of simple men, who can only say you are spotless jewels, the joy of their hearts, when they can only bestow upon your heads the blessings of their simple hearts instead of feathers and jewels in rich abundance. But Utah is young yet, if it has not got its Argyle street, neither has it yet its Gorbals, Broomielaw, Salt Market, and Gallowgate, where the editor of the Post could introduce a stranger to scenes we must not touch now. Women of Utah, however, have not yet to labor in steam factories enveloped in the most sickening, reeking, fœtid atmospheres for ten, twelve, and fourteen hours per day to gain a miserable pittance to keep together the soul and body of their poor, neglected, half-starved, three-parts naked children. The women in Utah have not yet got to the sublime occupation of gathering manure from the public streets and public highways, or raking the dung heaps for cynders, rags, and paper, or crying fish, oysters, musles, "buckies," cat-meat, and dog-sausages through the streets. But leave them alone, and they may yet improve in their tastes and aspire to these high and glorious callings, and lay aside their wood-splitting, linen-washing, cotton and woolen spinning, and all such homely things beneath the majesty of women. Leave them alone; they may yet rise in refined tastes, and see themselves, husbands, and children clad in patches of "cloutes" instead of the homely spun—Go it, Christendom! you are ahead of Utah; go it to your heart's content, till we have more leisure to look after you.

We have digressed from the description of our excursion, but we could not help it. The music must come out when the right string is touched.

Our sail up Barnegat Bay and Tom's River was very pleasant. Elder Angus M. Cannon and friends were awaiting our arrival, as we had been considerably longer on the water than we anticipated, and took us home to fix us out comfortably. We got to meeting in the afternoon, and assisted to confirm many of the Saints who had renewed their covenants, likewise confirmed four persons who had just joined the Church, through the labors of Elder Jacob Hoffheins; after which Elder Geo. A. Smith and ourself addressed the congregation. In the evening Elders Smith and Appleby preached to a goodly number of persons—the "Mormon chapel" was well filled.

On Monday some of our party went a fishing, and we, with a good number of others, went to visit Mr. Wilbert's farm, about two miles from the village of Tom's River, where Utonians, New Jerseyians, Pennsylvanians, New Yorkers, Englishmen, and Scotchmen enjoyed themselves in out-door amusements. Captain Brown's family, and that of his father-in-law, Bro. Wilbert, spread for all a bountiful table. In the evening, all satisfied with their enjoyment and entertainment, returned to the village, and met again with the Saints in the chapel. Elders Stenhouse and George J. Taylor preached to a very attentive audience.

On Tuesday morning, through the kindness of Captain Bennett, one hundred and seventeen of our brethren and sisters, with their children, started for an excursion on the Bay, in the commodious schooner Sarah R. Ivins, with colors flying and music playing, accompanied by Captain Joseph Brown's yacht—Hickory. Presidents Cannon and Reamer, in concert with Captains Brown—junior and senior—Bennett, and Philips, and a committee of ladies, made a first-rate arrangement for sailing, amusement, and refreshment. We had a quiet sail of about twelve or fourteen miles, and purposed landing on the beach, but the weather threatening rain we had tables fixed out on deck for a quiet dinner party, where our friends had provided great variety and abundance. In the evening we returned very slowly, having but little wind to catch our canvas. There was, however, plenty of amusement for everybody: what with music, dancing, singing, and speaking, we should think all were well satisfied. Our honorable colleague opened our day's proceedings with prayer, and craved the blessing of the Most High on all our innocent recreations, and truly in the evening we all felt and sung with the spirit and understanding—"It is good to be a Saint of Latter Days." Towards mid-night, under the mellow light of a clear and silvery moon, we called all together before we quit the schooner, gave a hearty vote of thanks to Sheriff Ivins, Captains Reamer, Brown, Johnston, Bennett, and Philips, President Cannon, the ladies of the committee, and the musicians, and addressed them on the day that was closing, and lifted up our hearts in gratitude to God, while his faithful and devoted servant returned thanks for the blessings we had enjoyed. Thus ended our public visit to Tom's River. While we remained with our friends they were attentive and kind, and showed no weariness in well doing. We here tender to Elder Cannon and all the Saints the united thanks of ourself and friends who accompanied us on the occasion, and devoutly wish that we many all meet again in the valleys of the State of Deseret.

The New York Tribune at Work.

Those acquainted with wire pulling and the jugglery practised on the eve of a Presidential election, require not to be informed that there are men who, utterly unscrupulous, recreant to every sense of honor, self-respect, and every enobling principle, will stoop to employ any and every means which may in any way contribute to the attainment of office at or dependant on the White House, even if it were no more than keeper of "the key of the swine's grass." Since the Philadelphia "Black Republican" platform linked polygamy to slavery, and made them "twin relics of barbarism"—the important plank for issue next November—the country has been deluged with the most outrageous stories to favor the new position. Our eyes have been open, though our mouth has been closed, and we have done considerable at watching the progress of the game. The New York Tribune of August the 7th, publishes a lengthy letter, DATED Great Salt Lake City, May 30th, professing to give important revelations. The Tribune heads it "The Political Secrets of Mormonism." There is certainly a very great scarcity of fuel to keep up the steam, or this letter would not have been cast into the furnace to make its flutter and pass away in smoke. It is no news in August, 1856, that Polygamy is established in Utah. The Mormons published that to all the world, and "the rest of mankind," years since. Who, among the readers of the Tribune, didn't know that the United States officers in Utah were repulsed, the laws scorned, trampled in the dust, and spit upon? Old Bullion, in his famous St. Louis speech, said all that, and a great deal more. Who didn't know that "many of the Gentile officers sent here, (Utah) are men of seven principles—'five loaves and two fishes,' who come to speculate, and, as such, have but little moral courage!" The Mormons have complained of that often enough, and by no means minced the matter. What information then, has the Tribune given to its readers by the publication of this letter? None, whatever. There is not one sentiment in it that has not been published and republished, refuted and refuted, again and again. The object, however, is obvious.

When we can, we extract from an enemy, but of this letter we may say what Lord Derby said of the last parliamentary speech of Queen Victoria, it is too "redolent of water gruel" to do much with it.

After writing the above, we were passing over the paper before committing it to the basket, when we caught a glimpse of the following editorial:

"We call attention to a letter on the political aspects of Mormonism, which may be found on another page. It comes from an intelligent and well-informed source, and its statements merit consideration."

Since the Tribune, says the letter, merits consideration, we have looked at it again, but we find nothing that we think merits particular consideration. The language put into the mouths of the Mormons about demanding rights through the "little giant," "our Champion" smells too much of the corner of Spruce street. It is not Mormonism, and never was uttered in Utah, and never came from there. We base our demands on the rights guaranteed by the Constitution. If the "little giant," or the "Big Giant" stand by the Constitution, we stand by him shoulder to shoulder, and furthermore, we don't mean to be trampled upon by any "nigger-worshipper," or slandered by any "Squash-head" without letting him know that we are Americans, and shall defend ourselves at the door of the Union, or anywhere else, and want neither twaddle nor gammon about Mormonism when our political rights are under discussion. We are Mormons, and are proud of it, but we go to Congress as Americans, and shall never cease to demand our rights as such till we obtain them, there and everywhere else, now, or at any other time.

The mighty power of Brigham Young—what about it? Nobody denies he has mighty power. We are glad to find a man in whom we can place unlimited confidence, and having found him, we mean to honor him, listen to his counsels, and reduce them to practice. It is very pleasing for us to hear the testimony of the Tribune's correspondent, that the folks in Utah are so faithful and united. It forms a beautiful contrast to cut up and divided religious and political sectarianism. It augurs no mean destination for Mormonism, and the Tribune, and the small fry that are in its leading strings may take all the comfort they can from the libels of "Veritas," for Mormonism is, and means to be One, and nobody can hinder it. We are forced to drop the letter; we can't see anything in it that any rational being can believe or cares anything about.

We dare say after November the Mormons will be pretty decent folks till another Presidential election.

Utah and Its Mail.

Elsewhere we publish an article from the Deseret News of June 11th on the Eastern Mail. We have had likewise forwarded the following notice for a Mass Meeting in Great Salt Lake City on that subject.

TREMENDOUS EXCITEMENT!
INDIGNATION MASS MEETING!
MONDAY EVENING!
MAIL FROM THE STATES!!

Citizens of Great Salt Lake City and Territory generally will convene at the Council House this (MONDAY) evening, June 9th, at 6 o'clock, to express the sense of the people in regard to the management and delivery of the under the Contractor Mr. McGraw and his Conductors, who have laid over FOUR DAYS with the Mail within 40 miles—under pretence that they could not cross the Weber, a stream that a farmer boy can cross with impunity at its present stage.

We regret that the echo of their indignation did not hurry itself over mountains and plains to the ears of the government officials at Washington in time to have protested against the changing of thousands of dollars from the public treasury to the pockets of those who have so flagrantly abused the charge committed to them. We know of no public servant whose labors affect so many as the mail carrier. No honest man was ever the bearer of a letter from a distance but what felt he was intrusted with something more precious than gold—something that placed him under sacred obligations to deliver it intact and with dispatch. What can we think, then, of those who have conducted, or rather mis-conducted the mail to and from Utah—men who have, on the slightest pretext, excused themselves from discharging their duties, though to the disadvantage of tens of thousands and to the sacrifice of those sacred feelings that ever exist between persons so far removed from each other as are the inhabitants of Utah from their friends this side of the plains, and we may say their friends in all parts of the earth?

The last time we noticed the mail we encouraged hope for a better future. Again, we encourage hope, and trust that the authorities at Washington will remember the past abuses and compensate, in some measure, by the adoption of such arrangements as will assure the Utonians that their interests are regarded as well as those of the inhabitants of other States and Territories. Let the mail business to Utah be put into the hands of honorable men who are willing and able to accomplish all that is required of them, and not placed in the hands of any mere speculator, who labors to perform the least he possibly can and secure the most in return. We have long expected some move on the part of Government, not only towards a more efficient monthly mail, but something still more consistent with the reasonable wants of the people. Some have called for a daily mail, but for the present and until facilities for its performance increase, we might have at least a weekly. We fondly hope that the expectations of the people of Utah will not be disregarded. In these days of commotion and confusion it is no bad thing to have a united people, as are the inhabitants of Utah, in favor, one and all, of the Government.

Utah.

By the last mail from Utah we have encouraging news of the state of things in that Territory. The following extracts from private letters will be read with interest by the Saints:

G. S. L. City, July 1st, 1856.

Dear Colonel: A few words only. The crops promise a good harvest; the health of the people is good; the waters of the Cottonwood river have been brought through to the Five-Acre Lots. All is peace with the Indians. The fruit crop promises well. We are now preparing for our usual national celebration on the 4th. You will most assuredly be missed. Mrs. Smith, your lady, met with us at our last meeting of the Agricultural and Manufacturing Society, held June 26, and was in fine health. Bread stuffs are being furnished more plentifully than for the past month. Many have commenced harvesting. I shall leave for Western Utah ere this reach you, and will send you as soon as located a petition for a post-office and direct post route through to Placerville, Cal., via Carson Valley, with a full description of the Territory. I should be glad to hear from you when leisure will permit, and shall feel gratified for public documents, especially for all kinds of seeds from the Patent Office. Please remember me in all fellowship and kindness to our worthy representative, J. M. Bernhisel, and to your worthy and most honorable colleague, John Taylor, and enquiring friends.

Your friend, S. M. Blair.

Col. Geo. Smith, Washington City.

From another letter, dated June 30th, we learn that home manufactures are everywhere encouraged and occupy considerable time and attention:

"The Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society have regular weekly meetings and are exerting their power to bring out the talent, skill and ingenuity of our Territory, to be exhibited at their fair in the fall. We anticipate a splendid display of home manufactures. The ladies are manifesting a commendable spirit and believe that in their department this exhibition will not be behind. I understand the leather manufacturers are calculating on supplying the State with the valley tan, if we may judge from their late representations. President Hunter is sanguine in the anticipation of a cattle show equal to those in the east."

* * * "The barley harvest has commenced and the wheat in some places will be cut in a day or two, but not before it is wanted."

Another letter from the same place, of the same date, says:

"Things are moving along here quite smoothly, and the near approach of harvest makes the hearts of many glad; some wheat has been cut, thrashed and ground, and soon the scarcity of bread will begin to cease, and our city and country exhibit once more that industrious and improving feature heretofore seen manifested in these valleys, but which has in a measure been paralyzed of late in consequence of the scarcity of bread stuff, that I hope will not soon be realized again."

From Our Utah Correspondent.

Historian's Office, G. S. L. City, June 30th, 1856.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Sir: The mail from the east due here towards the last of May arrived here on the 4th inst., and contained forty-four letters for this Territory; whereas our friend Leonard J. Smith was at Independence (on his way home from the Cape of Good Hope) when the mail started, and was told by the clerk there that he had put up from five to ten thousand letters for Salt Lake within a day or two! The June mail arrived here on the 28th inst., but has brought no tidings of the missing letter sacks. I suppose the contractor is showing his gratitude in this way for the appropriation by Congress of $36,000 extra pay for keeping us without a mail the whole of last winter, from the 1st of December to the 10th of May. We are still a little plagued with grasshoppers, the wheat crops in Box Elder county being eaten off; we are also troubled with drouth and scarcity of water, yet we shall make out to harvest a crop, though not an average one by any means.

The canal from Big Cottonwood is so far finished as to bring the water to irrigate the four and five acre lots in the Big Field.

You will have received a programme of our intended celebration of the 4th of July from the post office.

Presidents Young and Kimball have been spending a few days on the island in Salt Lake; they, as also President Grant, are in good health.

The Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society are holding weekly meetings and making great efforts to carry out their objects; there is to be an Exhibition this fall.

We have been over to the Public Works and find they are casting moulds to run pig lead into from the furnace.

I am spending most of my time in this office, compiling the history of the late Joseph and Hyrum.

The weather has been very dry and warm for the last few weeks.

The people are generally enjoying good health.

Two new boats have been taken to the ferry at Bear River, and there is a ferry newly started on the Weber.

Respectfully yours,
Wilford Woodruff,
By Thos. Bullock, Clerk.

Camp, near Iowa City, July 29, 1856.

Dear Bro. Taylor:—I seat myself at this time to address a few lines to you, according to promise. We were well received by Bro. Spencer and the Saints. The Company, over which Bros. Willey and Attwood presided, moved out the day before we arrived in Camp. My father, brother, and sister were glad to see me; they had got the wagon and oxen all ready for the start by the time we arrived. It would astonish you to see them dragging the hand cart. Away they go, singing and rejoicing. No one can imagine how easy those carts go, but those who have had experience in drawing them. Give me a hand cart before an ox team for traveling. You have got to herd your cattle by night and by day, to pull and haul them to break them in; and often times get kicks from them that you feel for weeks, and perhaps for your life time. In the morning they are about two hours getting ready for the start with the ox teams, but not so with the hand carts. When Bro. Haven gave them the order to start, you would have been surprised to see them take down their tents and pack up in about twenty minutes, and off they went, without any ceremony. The hand carts for me. What little I have seen I prefer them, and I pulled them for some miles. The greatest part of the wagon companies have moved about two miles out from the old camping ground. They moved out on Wednesday, the 24th instant. My team led the way, and was first on the ground. Sunday, 27th, we had a meeting, and was addressed by Elders Spencer, Tyler, Ferguson, Captain Jones, McAllister, and Webb. I expect we shall start to-morrow, if all is well. Bro. Martin's hand cart company being the last this season, moved out a little away from the old camping ground on Saturday, the 26th instant. They are expected to leave finally to-day.

Here is the place to try a man what he is. If a brother comes in camp and don't catch hold of an axe and cut down a tree for to make hand carts, or break in a pair of oxen, or make himself useful in some way, he is but little respected. This is the place to make a man know himself.

Good bye, and God bless you, till I see you in the Valley of the Great Salt Lake.

With kind regards to all friends, I am your Brother and well-wisher in the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

J. R.

Arrivals.

Hon. G. A. Smith arrived from Washington on Wednesday evening the 6th, and as will be seen elsewhere escaped narrowly a share of the accident on the Philadelphia and Baltimore road. Judge W. J. Appleby arrived from the same place the following evening. We were glad to see the judge so much recovered in health, as for some time his health has been very precarious. We learn from him that his letter to the Washington Star, in reply to "Old Bullion," republished in this paper, was only a meagre part of his communication; we regret the whole manuscript did not reach us; the Star was unable to publish it entire.

President F. D. Richards, Elders Cyrus H. Wheelock, Wm. C. Dunbar, Joseph A. Young and James Linforth, with his lady and two children, arrived on Thursday evening, the 7th, at this port, by the Asia, en route, for Utah. They left by express for St. Louis the following evening.

Elder Arthur P. Welchman arrived in this city on the 7th August. He left Salt Lake City on the 25th April, on a mission to this State.

Elder Samuel John Cook arrived in this city on Wednesday evening the 13th, on his way to England, he left Salt Lake on the 8th of May, and reports all well.

Departure.

Elder N. H. Felt left for Utah on Tuesday, the 8th inst., in company with President F. D. Richards, and his associates from Europe. Bro. Felt is the last of our associates who came out with us on this Eastern mission, except George J. Taylor and Angus Cannon. It is now nearly two years since we left Salt Lake City in company, our departure being on Sept. 4, 1854. As our duties require our attendance at Washington in the coming Congress, and as we consider two years quite long enough for men to be separated from their families in the absence of positive duties, we felt glad to say to our brethern having families, "go in peace," and although we felt sorry to part with them and appreciated their labors, we felt unwilling to deprive them of a return to the peaceful valleys of the mountains and to the bosom of their families and homes.

Bro. Felt has been laboring with us in the office most of the time since his arrival, and has been very efficient in assisting about the emigration, among whom his unremitting attention and care has made him many friends. Personally we have very much enjoyed his society as a co-laborer, and now that he leaves us, he goes with our best blessings and desires for his welfare, and we pray that the God of Abraham, of Isaac, of Jesus, and Joseph, may watch for and preside over him that he may have a safe, speedy, and prosperous journey to his home in the far distant West; that his health may be preserved, that he may enjoy long life and peace upon the earth and a celestial inhertance in the eternal worlds.

FOR THE MORMON.

A Sketch of Life in a Russian Polish Town.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

There are generally no particular attractions in a Russian Polish town, the surrounding country consisting of dreary, flat, bottom lands, filling the air with miasmatic vapors, that prove fatal to strangers. The place itself is a conglomeration of superannuated houses, that with their crumbling staircases and creaking hinges remind one forcibly of a consumptive person beyond hope, and make it for any man of more than common size dangerous to disturb their equilibrium. There are a number of churches and chapels, that with their ancient steeples and spires impart to the town the character of a Roman Catholic place. The greatest part of the inhabitants are Roman Catholics, with the exception of a few hundreds of Jews and a sprinkling of Protestants. It is true, that there are no attractions for a stranger visiting the place, but there are some curiosities to be found, that may be worth mentioning to those that are not initiated into the mysteries of a Polish city. There are certain beings living there belonging to the species of sharks; I do not refer to those monsters of the finny tribe, that are according to Buffon confined to warmer climates—but I mean certain class of bipeds—that is I am sorry to say found in all latitudes—but more so in those countries where a large body of Policemen is continually on the look-out for them. It is strange, but true that the greatest number of sharks is often met with near criminal courts, police offices, etc. Those monuments of public justice with their living phalanx are then as it were the centre of gravity, round which the sharks according to the power of attraction are moving in not exactly eliptical spheres as the satellites revolve round a sun, but their motions form a wonderful variety of interesting, artistical meanderings, curvateurs, salto mortales and involuntary summersets in proportion to to their nimblefootedness. Those bipeds are human beings and are carniverous like their namesakes of the watery element, their carniverous propensity is however not dangerous to the human family the same being only confined to meat; in fact they have nothing particular or strange in their outward appearance worth mentioning with the exception of marvelous agility of their fingers and some mysterious manipulations; they speak, walk, eat and drink like every other person, but their intellectual system seems to be rather ruffled or in a very unsettled state, their ideas concerning other people's property and their own is of very vague and limited nature. You have possibly heard scientific men say, that some people cannot tell one color from the other, owing to the peculiar construction of their eyes; now, the above class of bipeds have such poor perceptive powers, that they can only with difficulty tell the difference between other people's property and their own; thus they struggle nor in blissful ignorance till even the last glimpse of that knowledge is gone. The world at large being generally ignorant of those mental anomalies or deficiencies calls the above class of people thieves or chevaliers d'industrie, and sets all kinds of traps to catch them.

Independent of those sharks, the traveler meets with a curious medley of soldiers; there is the prim, stiff-looking grenadier in his grey great coat, standing at his post, as solemn and motionless as an automaton; there is the Cossack of the Don, the son of Steppe (Steppe is the name for prairies in the southern parts of Russia) in his white trowsers and short jackets, displaying all the liveliness of a man of the wilderness, caressing his pony, upon which he dotes; there is the Yalmuck with his small, grey, penetrating eyes, his bows and quiver, mounted like the Baschkir on small ponies; they are sallow-complexioned, grim-looking people, and are heathens; the Cossacks however belong to the Greek Catholic church, and are friendly, gay and buoyant in spirits. These three last named nations constituted the irregular cavalry of the Russian autocrat, and form the van or rearguard of the regular army. They are very useful and ingenious in espying, annoying and attacking an enemy from behind an ambush, but when taken by surprise, they are not able to stand the well-regulated volleys of disciplined armies; they fear most the fire of artillery; though there are instances in which the bravery and steadiness of those troops in attacking and checking an enemy was successfully signalized, as for instance in the battle of Leipsic, in Saxony, Germany. The allied monarchs, viz., Alexander I, emperor of Russia, Francis, emperor of Austria and Frederic William III., kings of Prussia were in imminent danger of being made prisoners, when the Cossacks of Guards pushed forward and checked the rapid advance of the French cavalry. The Cossacks are exempt from taxes, but they are all subject to military duty and have to equip themselves on their own expenses; their wages are very low, amounting to about two cents a day, but still they want nothing. It is an old saying in Russia, put a Cossack on a barren rock, he is sure to make his living; the Government may pay him badly for his services, he will find means however to get along very well without it. When hungry or in straightened circumstances, he steals or kills a cow, sheep or anything else, that may be useful to him, without feeling the least remorse. In time of peace a large body of Cossacks, amounting to about 60,000, is constantly stationed on the frontier, acting there in the capacity of policemen, to prevent travellers from leaving or entering the Russian domains without passports and at the same time to stop the smuggling business. The Cossacks, Baschkirs and Calmucks partake very much of the character of our Indians; they are a roving people, very expert horsemen; the sense of their sight is very keen; they are most expedient and cunning in scheming plots; they can endure the greatest hardships, and are very loyal to their Government. The wages being very low, every Russian soldier is permitted to work at a certain trade, to procure himself means. Owing to this peculiar feature of military life in Russia, I have seen on market days hundreds of soldiers turn out, offering boots, shoes and a variety of other articles for sale.

The police forms a very important part in those tyrannical Governments, and is constantly on the qui vive. They have a military organization and receive their orders from the different Governors of provinces. Independent of the street police, there is a large number of spies or mouchards, for the purpose of prying into the secrets of private life. You will find them in all classes of society, among the male and female population of the high and the low, the rich and the poor. Their salary is in proportion to their services and ability in discovering the secret threads of conspiracy; some are highly educated, fluent conversers in different languages, and very familiar with the political and social topics of the day. Those spies or decoys often appear to be very inoffensive, harmless persons, willing to converse with you but woe to you, if you trust those demons in human shape, you are irretrievably lost, and no more heard off.

In order to give the reader an idea of the quite ridiculous severity of the law in prohibiting the importation of forbidden books, pamphlets, etc. I will mention a circumstance, that came to my knowledge, while travelling in that country. A young man, a member of a Silesian college, whose parents were residing in Russia-Poland, was returning home. On arriving at the frontier, he had his passport and portmanteau examined by the custom-house officers, in the presence of a detatchment of Cossacks, when suddenly a book on physics was found, being entitled, "Revolutions on the Earth." The book was directly confiscated, and the owner severely reprimanded for the intention of importing so dangerous a work. An explanation ensued from the part of the student, stating that the word "revolution," had merely a reference to the physical revolutions of our globe, whereupon the officer replied, "It ought to read, 'Changes on the Surface of the Earth,'" the word "revolution," might easily lead the reader to a mistake. French, English and other newspapers are carefully examined by the authorities previous to their circulation, and all political articles are made elligible by blackening them.

The reader will easily imagine, that in such a town, where it is considered a national requisite to have as it were a commissary of police grown to one's tongue, in order to bridle that unruly member. Liberty is nothing but a chimera, an exotic plant that gets destroyed by the chilling atmosphere of iron despotism. Well may the eye of him that is engaged in the perusal of heroic deeds performed for the liberty of foreign countries, light up with admiration; well may his hand convulsively grasp the hilt of the sword; well may he dream of the rising sun of a better political era, but still it is only a dream that will not be accomplished for a long time to come, and the ivy that creeps over the little cottage of the Polish resident, is rustling with a dirge-like wind, sounding like requeim for the departed shades of political martyrs. There is a monotony, a mental lassitude, a dreariness in the life of such a place, that fills the heart of the traveller with compassion, and as soon as he has wound up his business, he leaves for purer and more congenial climates. Everything is done by order of the authorities; in fact the people are not permitted to have a mind of their own, to indulge in the free and full exercise of their intellectual powers; their movements are like those of an automaton, that stops working after having passed through a certain series of performances, till a higher intelligence touches the spring of its machinery. Commercial business is the all-absorbing theme, that occupies the public mind; labor the never-ending topic of the common man; pleasure, the only aim, the only desire of the slave, anything beyond that, is an impenetrable mystery, a film is as it were over his eyes, and it is but seldom that the sunshine of a better and nobler future steals through the intellectual and political darkness. Being confined to the limited sphere of his own actions and observations, his ideas are narrow-contraced, his judgement is poor and the consequence is that a dark and gloomy despondency seizes the mind, tears start often to the eyes of the grey-headed man, who has seen better days, and a smile scarcely ever breaks over him, like a sunlight on a flower.

As remarked above, everything is done by order of the Government, religion is practised by order, even loyalty is shown by order. As soon as the authorities are apprized of the Emperor's coming, every owner of a house, yes every inmate is compelled under grievous penalty to adorn his cottage with festoons of flowers, to illuminate his dwelling place by putting some candle lights or gas lamps at the windows. The system of national education is carried on consonantly to the principles of a despotic government. Every germ in the youthful mind, that might have the least tendency of a more intelligent development is suppressed or destroyed, in order to keep the multitude in blissful ignorance. Because the more enlightened a nation is, the greater the difficulculty for the rulers to subject them to the yoke of iron oppression, and the more ignorant a nation, the easier it is guided according to the principles of despotism. In order to prevent an importation of revolutionary ideas, the intercourse with foreign nations is very difficult, and only a privilege of some of the highly-favored aristocracy. All public institutions as for instance schools, academies, etc., are under the special care and guidance of the military authorities, and woe to the pupil or teacher that acts contrary to discipline, he has to undergo the severest punishment. The most horrid thing, is the manner in which the recruiting system is carried on. Every male inhabitant is subject to military duty, on account of which he has to report himself at the recruiting depot of the district, and, if found strong, he has to serve from 20 to 25 years in the army, hundreds, yes, thousands of miles from his family, his friends, his fireside, perhaps to see them no more again, he leaves when a blooming youth and returns generally an old, care-worn, palled-looking man. On a certain night, the date of which is never known except to the officers of the police, a strong detatchment of Cossacks surrounds the small town, takes possession of every gate, street and outlet, so that nobody can escape, while the recruiting officers enter or force the houses of the ill-fated citizens; and drag away the unhappy victims out of their beds. Utter dismay and consternation seizes the mind, and if you could witness the heart-rending scenes, it would make your soul shudder at the unheard cruelty of separating husbands from their wives, boys of 12 years of age from their parents, the young man, the only support of his aged mother, from his home. Half dressed, the poor men are gagged, tied, put in wagons, and taken to a large gloomy-looking prison-house, the temporary residence of those recruits. Many a wretched heart has withered within its walls, or broken in the intense agony of its sufferings; many a head has turned grey from anguish, while watching those damp, naked walls. Sobs burst forth from the bosom of the pitable wretches, they mutter hoarsely to themselves a prayer for a grave scarcely more terrible than the gloomy future. There is an aged woman, a picture of touching and holy self-devotion, falling at the feet of the commanding officer, taking both his hands between hers and covering them with tears and murmuring such words of pity as no human being could resist; alas! poor woman, thou canst not move to compassion the unpitying and relentless heart of a monster. She is rudely forced back and removed from this place of honor, while her son is lost for her, and she dies of a broken heart.

There are a great many other scenes worth mentioning out of the gloomy drama of Russian Polish life, the detailed account of which might fill up volumes.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

The appeal of Governor Johnston, of California, to President Pierce, for 3,000 stand of muskets, two mortars, three hundred shells and two guns of large calibre, with their ammunition and appliances, likewise the use of the military and naval forces to suppress the insurrection in San Francisco has been refused. The President fully agreeing with the Attorney General in the conclusion that he could not interfere in the affairs of the State till invited to do so by the Legislature of the State, or of its chief magistrate—after he had failed to convene the Legislature. Gov. Johnston is politely blamed for not checking the evil in the bud.

General Harney is presently at Washington and reports all quiet among the Indians.

The American Dentists held a convention in this city during three days of last week, for the purpose of promoting the science of the profession. The meetings were a little turbulent, but on the evening of Thursday they met in the best of feelings, to do justice to a grand entertainment in the Astor House, given by the profession in New York. The expenses of the entertainment were said to have been at least $1,000.

Upwards of one hundred vessels are detained in the Quarantine, off Staten Island, on account of the Yellow Fever having been lately brought to our bay by some vessels. The Islanders have been strict in prohibiting intercourse with the Hospital and the vessels, and have adopted such rigorous measures for their preservation, at the expense of the sons of Neptune, that the latter call loudly to the authorities of New York for redress of their grievances.

The coming elections bring out a great deal of sporting gas. Bets of every description are freely offered on the head of Buchanan, for first in to the White House. Col. Fremont, as will be seen from the Congressional, is to have a little handling over moneyed affairs in California, and some claims he has had to conquering the former occupants of California. Fillmore, as reported by his friends, is coming on slowly but surely. The "Old Line" Whigs, in their convention at Albany, on Thursday, resolved to do their best for his election—being in their estimation, the best man. They object to Buchanan as they fear the Cincinnati Platform would continue the struggle between North and South, and for Fremont, "that he is not qualified for the Presidency of this Union."

There has been a tremendous rain storm between Mobile and New Orleans. The rain fell for one hundred and ten consecutive hours, and it is feared great damage has been done to the crops. The telegraph being prostrated, we are without particulars.

Boston has been severely visited by the late storms, doing considerable damage.

A large fire occurred at Chicago on Wednesday night, during the progress of which the freight depots of the Rock Island and Michigan and Southern railroads, containing numerous loaded cars, were totally consumed. The total loss by the fire is estimated at $150,000 to $200,000.

Judge Terry is still in the hands of the Vigilance Committee of San Francisco. Hopkins is recovering.

California remains in the same awful condition. Murder and arson leave a terrible impress there. Official or citizen "vigilance" is certainly needed.

During the month of July, from the 5th to the 19th, property to the amount of nearly three millions of dollars was destroyed by fire in that State. The following are the names of the towns which were visited by the devouring element:

			Loss.
July	5	Placerville	$600,000
"	3	Georgetown, Placer county	100,000
"	12	Fair Play, El Dorado county	70,000
"	16	Marysville	160,000
"	19	Nevada City	2,000,000
		Total	$2,930,000

In the above conflagration upwards of five hundred buildings were destroyed, and in that which visited Nevada City six persons were burned to death.

The San Francisco Daily Bulletin, July 18th., comes out openly for a provisional government: there is some such talk among knowing ones at Washington. Time will tell a tale.

In Oregon, the miners have had a brush with the government officials at Yreka, arising from the under-Sheriff shooting a miner that he was attempting to apprehend.

It is reported that Gen. Wool, now at Napa springs, is dangerously ill.

The inhabitants of Brooklyn were disturbed in their ordinary peaceful routine on Saturday afternoon by the evcitement arising from a terrible explosion at Wilder's Safe factory. The explosion of the boiler demolished one half of the main building, burying beneath its ruins five persons and injuring fifteen others. About eighty mechanics were in the building at the time.

In anticipation of a revolution in Europe, foreign refugees, chiefly French held a meeting in this city on Sunday afternoon. The usual denunciation of their oppressors and expressions of their willingness to fight for Libert, Egalité, Fraternité, and Solidarité were the prominent speeches. An appeal was made to the revolutionists of all nations to be ready, and volunteers signed the following obligation:

New York, Aug. 9, 1856.

The undersigned bind themselves to depart at the first signal of a democratic and social revolution in Europe.

The Chairman of the Senatorial library Committee has handed in an adverse report to the purchase by Congress of 15,000 copies of Dr. Kane's Artic expedition. It is be hoped that this will be overruled. The country wants the books and Congress ought to give them. It is certainly a work a hundred times more worth circulation by Congress than many others that have had that patronage.

By the arrival of the steamship Daniel Webster at New Orleans, from San Juan, we have a few items of news from Nicaragua. Gen. Rivas, assisted by 3,000 Guatemalans, was fortifying Leon, and Gen. Walker was expected shortly to march to attack him, with a force of one thousand Americans. Costa Rica, it was expected, would again invade Nicaragua, Gen. Mora having put down the revolution against him. Seven British vessels of war were in the harbor of San Juan. The British screw steamship Panama had been wrecked near Cape Lamar. Vessel a total loss; crew saved.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

England.—The British Government has determined to erect defences along the coast of Scotland, and prospectively, also on the western coast.

Lord Wensleydale's peerage for life which has caused so much discussion has been changed to a hereditary peerage in the usual form.

England.—The Imperial Parliament was prorogued by Her Majesty on the 29th ult., until the 7th of October. In the Royal Speech, allusion is made to Central America, and the hopes of a speedy and satisfactory termination to the misunderstanding between England and the United States.

The Crimean heroes are dropping on to Albion's shores in great abundance. The Williams, Windhams, and Codringtons are the lions of the present. Testimonials of swords, banqueting, and all the etceteras mark their progress from debarkation. The soldiers, with their medals, are objects of great attention.

Ireland.—A court martial has been held on the mutineers of the North Tipperary militia. Four are sentenced to death, and two more are handed over for trial by the civil power.

France.—The Emperor of France has sent from Plombieres, a circular to the Prefects, ordering them in positive terms to allow to all Protestants within their respective districts the free and undisturbed exercise of their religion.

Prince Lucien Bonaparte has gone on a mission to Madrid.

Two camps will be formed near Paris in August and September—one on the plain of St. Maur, near the wood of Vincennes.

The movement of French troops towards Spain, and other circumstances indicate that Louis Napoleon's influence reaches the Peninsula. All manner of rumors are afloat. The chief and most likely is that his hatred to Constitutional government has helped the late Coup d'Etat in the hopes of binding more firmly the people and rendering the government like his own, irresponsible and the country no longer a home for political exiles.

France.—Marshall Pelessier has returned to France, and was warmly received at Marseilles.

The Empress is appointed by the Senate Regent of the Imperial Prince, approved and sealed by the Emperor.

Spain.—The Coup d'Etat in Spain occupies the greatest share of the public attention the other side of the Atlantic. Marshal O'Donnell, who supplanted Espartero, has suppressed, according to government dispatches, "the insurrection." Correspondents of the English papers report great discontent everywhere and stout resistance at Saragossa. Louis Napoleon and that old vixen Queen Christiani are reported the soul and body of the present movement represented by Isabella. O'Donnel has discovered that he is but the momentary tool to serve despotism, and is reported to have already quarelled with his royal mistress. The government troops have acted with savage barbarity when opportunity offorded them the joy of glutting their cannibal propensities.

Turkey.—The Sultan gave a brilliant reception to Marshall Pelessier and General Codrington, the French and English commanders-in-chief, on their return to Constantinople from the Crimea, and decorated the warriors with the highest honors.

Italy.—There has been a little rising in the Duchy of Massa Carrara but of no consequence. The Austrians are blamed as the instigators of the movement—another of their wiles to strike terror in the bosoms of the Italians by the opportunity they expected to enjoy in crushing the revolutionists.

The Piedmontese Government takes every precaution not to be inveigled into a row with Austria, and is industrious in its preparations for a coming struggle.

Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.—This popular paper is out this morning with a beautiful woodcut of Great Salt Lake City. We have had no time to read the accompanying letter-press, so as to learn what Mr. L. has to say about Mormondon, but if the pen is as faithful as the pencil—all's right.

Change of Meeting-place.

The Latter Day Saints will hold their Meetings every Sunday, in the large hall of the Assembly Rooms, 361 Broome street, at 10½ A. M., 3 and 7 P. M.

The public are respectfully invited to attend.

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

Washington, Aug. 5, 1856.

The Senate passed the House bill providing for running a boundary line between Washington Territory and the British possessions.

Mr. Seward presented the petition of Charles Robinson and others, now confined in Kansas under a charge of treason, praying for relief. Referred to the Judiciary Committee. Mr. S. asked attention to the petition at as early a day as possible, because the time assigned for the trial was near at hand, and the nature of the case such as to require the most profound consideration.

Mr. Weller—I object to a discussion of the question now. It is out of order. I have some reports to make, and know that other Senators have, and we don't want the whole morning hour thus consumed.

Mr. Butler, from the Judiciary Committee, made a report on the necessity of additional legislation in case of the death or disability of the President and Vice President.

The Senate considered and passed the bills for the improvement of the harbors of Michigan City, Vermillion and Chicago, and for the improvement of the navigation of the Ohio River. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Bills relating to the District of Columbia were taken up and considered, and about half a dozen of them passed.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the Legislative, Judicial and Executive Appropriation bill.

Mr. Grow moved to strike out the salaries of the Judges and Secretary of Kansas, declaring he would not vote to sustain usurpation nor to pay the salaries of Judges who trample down the liberties of the people in that Territory.

Mr. Sherman made an amendment which was rejected by six majority and Mr. Grow's was likewise disagreed to.

Mr. Dunn offered a proviso, that no part of this money be drawn from the Treasury till a bill be passed and approved by the President for the pacification of the troubles in Kansas, which shall contain a slavery restriction regarding Kansas and Nebraska. There was but one remedy, take hold of the red mischief by the roots and tear it all up. Adopted by ayes 70; noes not counted.

On motion of Mr. Grow another was added that no money be paid until the pending prosecutions for treason and other alleged offenses against the laws of the Legislature which assembled at Shawnee Mission, be dismissed.

The compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly, officers and clerks, and the contingent expenses, $20,000, were stricken out

The House had an evening session, no business done. Adjourned.

SENATE. Aug. 6.

Mr. Seward introduced a bill, which was referred to the Judiciary Committee, providing for a change of venue in certain criminal cases now pending in Courts of the United States for the Territory of Kansas.

The bill was founded on the petition of Gov. Robinson and others, presented yesterday.

The Senate considered and passed the bills making appropriations for the following purposes:

For the improvement of the harbors of Apalachiola, Charleston, (S. C.,) Cape Cod, Providence, and Georgetown, (D. C.)

For the improvement of Hell Gate; the harbor of Bayou Lafourche; the inland passage between St. Johns and St. Mary's Rivers, Florida; the harbor of Mobile.

For a steam dredge on Lake Michigan.

For the improvement of Cape Fear, and the Illinois and Red Rivers.

For a survey of Atchfalaya Bay and approaches, and for a survey of the Falls of Red River.

The bill for a wagon road to the Pacific, and five private bills, were then passed.

Mr. Fish presented a petition from the Ocean Steam Navigation Company, praying for a renewal of their contract, and against the bill to make one with Mr. Vanderbilt. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Orr presented the credentials of Mr. Reill, who was sworn in.

Mr. Thorington reported a bill, granting lands in Nebraska, Minnesota, and Kansas, for Railroads. Referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Bennett of New York reported a bill, granting a million and a half acres of lands in Mississippi for a similar purpose. Passed by 93 against 59.

The House then went into Committee on the Legislative, Judicial and Executive Appropriation bill.

The clause appropriating $800,000 to pay the expenses of the Courts of the United States was read.

Mr. Grow moved the proviso that no part of this money shall be expended for prosecuting or detaining any person or persons charged with treason or any other offence in Kansas.

Mr. Stanton moved to amend by adding, "or any prosecution which has hitherto been instituted for political offences."

Mr. Grow's amendment, together with Mr. Stanton's, was adopted by 69 against 57.

The Committee rose, when Mr. Campbell of Ohio offered a substitute for the bill, omitting the clause making appropriations for the Kansas Legislature, including the provisos of Messrs. Dunn, Sherman, and Grow, and restricting the proposed expenditures.

The question was then on Mr. Grow's amendment to the appropriation for the judiciary of Kansas: "That money shall not be drawn from the Treasury till the criminal proceedings pending in the Territory against the persons charged with treason, or alleged violation of the laws passed by a body of men at Shawnee Mission claiming to be the Legislature, shall be dismissed by the Court and every person, who has been or may be restrained of his liberty by such persecution, be released from confinement."

Agreed to by 84 against 69.

Mr. Grow's and Mr. Stanton's amendment that no part of the money be expended for prosecuting or detaining any person charged with treason, &c., was agreed to, by 82 against 62.

The bill was then passed by a vote of 84 against 55; the democrats, together with the South Americans, and Mr. Dunn, of Indiana and Mr. Bennett, of New York voting, in the negative.

The House then took a recess and had evening session.

SENATE. August 7.

On motion of Mr. Weller, a resolution was adopted calling on the President for any correspondence relative to the refusal of Honduras to receive a Commercial Agent from this Government.

On motion of Mr. Seward, a resolution was adopted requesting the President to communicate any information he may have, and his opinion, on the expediency of establishing an American Consulate at the Loo Choo Islands.

The Senate then took the Army Appropriation bill, which was reported from the Finance Committee, with an amendment striking out Mr. Sherman's proviso offered in the House, "that no part of the military force of the United States shall be employed to aid in the enforcement of the alleged laws of the Legislative Assembly convened at Shawnee Mission, until Congress declares whether those laws were passed by the Legislature chosen in conformity with the organic law, and until Congress so declares that it shall be the duty of the President to use the military forces to preserve peace, suppress insurrection, repel invasion, and protect the persons and property of the citizens of the Territory on the highways of Missouri and elsewhere, against unlawful seizure; and that the President disarm the present militia, re-call all United States arms, and prevent armed men from going into the Territory to disturb the public or enforce real or pretended laws."

Mr. Hunter said the proviso was irrelevant, and if for no other reason should be rejected, but for the House to insert such a proposition and insist upon it, to stop the wheels of Government, was not only factious but revolutionary.

Mr. Wilson said, if the bill failed to pass, the responsibility would rest on the Senate and not on the House, which had made a thorough examination of the affairs of Kansas, and ascertained there had been a violation of the organic law and a tramping down the rights of the people. The House, he said, had acted with intelligence and patriotism.

After a lengthy discussion, the bill passed by yeas 27; nays 3.

Mr. Weller gave notice that he would call up the Pacific Railroad bill to-morrow.

The Senate then at 9 1-2 o'clock, adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the Naval Appropriation bill, and subsequently passed it. Among its items are $305,000 for completing the railroad of the San Francisco Navy Yard.

The House then considered the bill making appropriation for a Coast Survey Light House establishment, Land Surveys and other civil expenses.

There was an evening session, but no business done. Adjourned.

SENATE. Aug. 8.

The Senate passed the House bill granting a million and a half acres of land to Mississippi for railroad purposes.

The Senate passed several private bills, and then discussed nearly five hours, adopting it, the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs that no further legislation was necessary to enable R. W. Thompson to receive $42,000 for services rendered the Menomonee Indians.

Mr. Weller moved the consideration of the Pacific Railroad bill, but there being no quorum present, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Washburn, of Me., reported a resolution to pay Gov. Reeder mileage and per diem to the time that his claim to seat as as delegate from Kansas was decided. Adopted by 23 majority.

The House then considered the bill making appropriations for lighthouses, coast surveys, custom houses, marine hospitals, &c.

An amendment appropriating $300,000 for the continuation of the Washington aqueduct was lost by 25 majority.

The proceedings were dull, and without disposing of the bill the House adjourned.

SENATE. Aug. 9.

The Senate passed a joint resolution authorizing Prof. Bache, of the coast Survey, to accept the medal presented him by the King of Sweden.

Mr. Hunter, of Va., reported a substitute for regulating the compensation of members of Congress, giving them $2,500 instead of $3,000 a year, with a section providing that if any books be distributed to members by resolution, in either or both houses, the price given for the same be deducted from their annual compensation: provided that this shall not extend to books ordered to be printed during the Congress members respectfully shall have been elected.

Mr. Thompson of N. J., made a speech to show that Com. Stockton, and not Col. Fremont, (an honor claimed by the latter's friend's) was conqueror of California.

Mr. Bigler, of Pa., submitted a resolution, which lies over, calling on the President for copies of the vouchers on which Mr. Fremont's accounts, as an officer of the Government, from his first expedition to California, were settled; so that the nature of the disbursements, may appear; also inquiring whether there is any public money in his hands unaccounted for, or whether there are any papers on file in the departments, from official sources, charging him with malfeasance in office, &c.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

On motion of Mr. King, of N. Y., a resolution was adopted requesting the Postmaster General to make special and vigilant inquiry as to the place where the persons who have unlawfully abstracted or detained from mails transmitted from Washington, books and public documents distributed by members of Congress, and when discovered.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill making appropriations for light-houses, coast and land surveys, custom-houses, marine hospitals, &c. Among its items are appropriafor a post office, custom-house and court-house in Philadelphia, for six revenue-cutters on the lakes; $75,000 for the purchase of the cuttings and seeds of plants for distribution through the Patent Office. The bill also provides that after Nov. 15, the military superintendency of public buildings be abolished.

The bill was passed by a vote of 93 against 30. Adjourned.

SENATE. Aug. 11.

Mr. Mason, of Va., submitted a resolution which was adopted, calling on the President for information as to what measures had been taken by this government with regard to the propositions adopted at the Congress of the Allied Powers of Europe, recently held in in Paris, respecting the abolition of privateering and the doctrine that free ships make free goods.

Mr. Mason said it was somewhat remarkable that these Powers should have presented these propositions as a new question, when it was known that the United States had contended for their adoption ever since the foundation of this government.

Mr. Bigler called up his resolution submitted on Saturday concerning Col. Fremont's accounts.

After considerable talk about other presidential candidates the resolution was taken up by a vote of 20 against 14.

Mr. Weller moved to take up the Pacific Railroad bill, but his motion was disagreed to. He said he had yielded to the River and Harbor bills, and now the friends of these measures failed to assist him in considering that bill.

The Senate then struck out from the House bill, appropriating for executive, judicial and legislative expenses, the appropriation of $183,000 for books voted to the members of the House of Representatives. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House laid on the table, by 20 majority, the bill enabling the owners of land warrants to locate the same on any public domain subject to entry, whether the minimum price is a dollar and a quarter or otherwise.

The bill making appropriations for the support of the Post Office Department, was then passed without debate, and after passing the light-house appropriation and other bills of minor importance the House took a recess till 7 P.M., and then held an evening session, but nothing of importance transpired.

SENATE. Aug. 12.

Mr. Hunter, of Va., asked that the question be taken on the passage of the Legislative, Judicial and Executive Appropriation bill.

Mr. Trumbull, of Ill., could not vote on it, because the Senate had stricken out the clause providing that no part of the money to be appropriated shall be expended for prosecuting or detaining persons charged with treason or other political offences in Kansas.

Mr. Bayard, of Del., thinking that a good reason for voting for the bill, should do so.

Mr. Hale, of N. H., said he should vote against all supplies for the government so long as they were coupled with an appropriation to pay members of the usurping Kansas Legislature. The bill was passed by 35 against 12.

The Pacific Railroad bill was then taken up.

Mr. Hunter moved to lay it on the table, as a test vote, which was agreed to, by 25 against 23.

The Navy Appropriation bill was then passed. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Walbridge, of Mich., from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill for the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the western boundary of Missouri and Iowa, north of the 38th and south of the 44th degree of latitude, to some point on the Pacific Ocean. It is substantially the same as that prepared by the Select Committee.

A struggle ensued between the friends and foes of the measure on points of order, when a motion was made by Mr. Orr to postpone the consideration of the bill until the second Monday in December, which was lost, by the casting vote of the Speaker.

A joint resolution, allowing sixty additional days, during which creditors of Texas can present their claims to the Treasury Department, was passed. Nearly $400,000 remain unpaid.

The House then passed fifty private bills, and adjourned.

SENATE. Aug. 13.

A message was received from the President in answer to the resolution calling for information relative to the protocol of the Peace Congress on privateering.

The Senate discussed and passed by a vote of 35 against 11, the bill regulating the compensation of members of Congress.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Senate's amendment to the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation Bill was then taken up.

The question stated was in agreeing to the Senate's amendment to strike out the proviso that no money be expended until the persons under indictment in Kansas shall be discharged, and the prosecutions dismissed, etc.

Mr. Pennington moved an amendment to the Senate's amendment, making a similar provision that nothing therein should be so construed as to prevent the indictment, arrest, prosecution, punishment or detention, in or by any court of the United States in Kansas, of any person who shall have violated any provision of any act of Congress in the commission of any offense against persons or property. He (Pennington) would never vote a dollar to sustain these indictments for treason or uphold the bogus Legislature. Agreed to by ayes 91; noes 72.

Various ineffectual efforts were made to further amend.

SENATE. Aug. 14.

Mr. Pearce, of Md. introduced a joint resolution, which was passed, accepting a portrait of John Hampden, presented by John McGregor, Secretary of the Board of Trade, England, and directing the same to be properly framed and placed in the Executive Mansion. It was painted either by Van Dyke or Sir Peter Lely.

The Senate reconsidered the bill continuing the improvement of the Desmoines rapids, with the Presidents objections thereto, but failed to pass it over the veto, two-thirds not voting in affirmation. The vote stood 32 against 17.

A long debate ensued on the House priviso, prohiting military superintendency in the erection of public buildings, except for defensive purposes, when it was stricken out. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A communication was received from the Postmaster General in reply to a resolution saying that special instructions had been issued to the proper agents, and no effort will be spared to discover and punish persons who unlawfully abstract or detain from the mails, books or documents sent hence by members of Congress.

The House voted to retain the appropiation of nearly $183,000 for books, which the Senate had stricken out, and added a proviso, that any member who was unwilling to receive his share may so inform the Clerk, who shall report the same to the House next session.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "The Mormon." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

Letter Notice.

We are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie; basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? On devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tachons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systêmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

The Dewdrop and the Diamond.

BY CHARLES MACKAY.

A DEWDROP, bright with all the rays
That summer noon could lend her,
Lay smiling on a rose's breast
In evanescent splendor.
"Behold," said Folly passing by,
"This gem the rose adorning!
How like a pearl of priceless worth
It sparkles to the morning."

A diamond, lost from Beauty's brow,
Lay lonely in the by-way;
And heard the words that Folly spoke,
Repeated from the highway.
"Ah me!" she said, "this transient thing
Extorts the praise of many;
While I am trodden in the dust,
Unseen, unknown of any."

Hush! Envy, hush! the true of heart
Should bear without repining;
Thy light is not the less thine own
That none can see it shining!
The dew exhaling in the sun
Shall fade from men's opinion,
While thou may'st live to grace a crown
In glory and dominion!

Border Ruffianism at Our Own Doors.

Not One Dollar's Worth of Sympathy in Chicago.

THE State of Illinois, it is pretty well known, is a free State; it has not had an African slave held in bondage within its limits since 1848. For eight years it has rejoiced in the freedom of its inhabitants. It is well known that the city of Chicago is in the State of Illinois, and that here, next to real estate, the most marketable commodities are sympathy for slaves and material aid for the victims of "Border Ruffians." So largely has the latter article entered into the business pursuits of the city, that more than one newspaper rejoices in the profits of the trade. A few rapscallions were sent from here to Kansas; they were furnished with arms bought on credit; those arms were taken away, and now the question has arisen whether any person is bound to pay for them. But we do not propose to say anything about the Kansas case; we intend merely to call the attention of our readers to the fact that victims of the most brutal exhibition of ruffianism presented themselves in Chicago on Wednesday, and were allowed to starve—not one of the followers of Lane and Reeder bestowing upon them as much as a crust of bread or a cup of cold water.

On Wednesday the steamer Buckeye came to our dock with some 90 persons on board; these persons consisted of men, women, boys and girls. They were without an exception, American citizens, and Americans by birth They had lived in the State of Michigan; most of the females and all the younger members of the party were born in that State. They had been for years settled upon the soil of that State; they and their fathers bought the land, and by hard labor earned from it a livelihood. There were buried fathers, mothers, wives, sisters, brothers and children. It was their home. No man disputed their right to live upon and cultivate it. For all offenses they might commit, they were amenable to the laws; and as American citizens, they claimed for themselves and their children the protection of those same laws. But, while their citizenship, or their Americanism, might have appealed successfully for sympathy, they were unfortunately for themselves unstenched with negro blood, and stood before the world as free WHITE men.

In the State of Michigan, one Kinsley Bingham is Governor. He has for the last two years and a half been a delegate in every Know Nothing and Republican Convention that has been held in Michigan, or which has met elsewhere to nominate candidates for the Presidency. He is Governor of Michigan, and to his hands has been entrusted the duty of protecting the inhabitants of the State.

Some week or more ago, an armed body of "free State men," intense bellowers for "Free Speech, Free State, Free Kansas and Fremont," invaded the Mormon settlement, and, by fire and sword, drove off the inhabitants. They robbed the houses, burned the dwellings, destroyed the crops, shot down men, insulted and outraged women, and threw helpless babes into the streets. Oh, they were valorous men, those "Border Ruffians" of the free State of Michigan; valorous men, those champions of liberty in the State "consecrated forever to Freedom by the sacred ordinance of '87!" The Captain of the steamer Buckeye State picked up from the Lake shore 400 of the unfortunate victims who thought that a State sanctified by the ordinance of '87 would always prove as safe an abiding place for free white men as for negroes.

The wonderful sympathy expressed for the victims of "Border Ruffianism," by the people of Chicago, has been so widely extended, that a large number of these outcasts came to Chicago. They thought to find here hearts overflowing with love for humanity, and hands impatient to relieve human suffering. They landed in the morning, penniless, houseless, half-clad; they sat upon the dock, strangers among their brethren, outcasts in their native land, and starving for want of bread in a city that cannot find cover for its grain. We looked upon that spectacle of human woe with pain. There sat a mother, not over 17 years of age, mourning her husband, shot down upon the land he had bought and paid for. At her breast was an infant 13 days old, perishing for that sustenance which exhausted nature failed to supply. We thought of the men who had at the Fusion Convention furnished the wife of the traitor Robinson with a purse of gold; and ventured to believe a cup of milk to this starving mother would find more favor in the sight of Heaven. Little children were there fainting for want of food, and we wondered whether that lawyer who pledged his "next fee" to Jim Lane and Reeder, would feel happier if he bestowed it upon these children, who for six days had no other food than that shared with them by the hardy tars of the steamer. Where was Chicago's "Respectability," that had poured forth its gold to enable Lane to run off and leave his wife and children destitute in Indiana; which had paid down its gold to send ragamuffin cowards to Kansas; which had hired the clergy to preach treason. Oh! these poor victims of the "Border Ruffianism" of the Free State of Michigan were not fit subjects for the "Respectability" of Chicago; they were white, they were accustomed to vote the Democratic ticket, they were not Abolitionists; therefore Chicago Abolitionists had not one dollar to subscribe for their relief; not one loaf of bread to keep them from perishing by starvation; not one garment to cover the half-exposed persons of poor unfortunate wives and mothers.

That poor woman, whom we have mentioned, was forced from her bed with her infant five days old, driven out of the house which her husband had erected preparatory to their marriage. She stood upon the dock of Chicago, and the men who had subscribed $22,000 to purchase rifles for traitors, had not a kind word or a shilling for her babe!

The laws of Chicago regarded these poor, pillaged, robbed victims of "Michigan Ruffianism" as paupers, and the Captain of the Buckeye had rendered himself liable for bringing them here. He had no other resource than to invite them all aboard again, and with his freight of human misery he left Chicago last night.

Let us not hear any more of the sympathy of Chicago with freedom. Here were men driven from the soil they had purchased, which was theirs beyond dispute; were driven off by armed ruthless violators of the free laws of a free State, and, in their exile, they asked food, shelter and clothing from Chicago, and Chicago denied it.

It may be said that they were Mormons. What if they were, they were human beings suffering for food. What if they were Mormons, we answer that by using the emphatic language of Col. Bissell in urging the admission of Utah as a State of the Union, "HE CARED NOT IF THEY ARE MORMONS. IT WAS sufficient for HIM TO KNOW THAT THEY WERE AMERICAN CITIZENS."—[Chicago Times, Aug. 5.

Terrible Earthquake in the Moluccas.

THE Indian mail brings advices of another of those dreadful earthquakes for which Ternati and the adjoining localites in the Moluccas are proverbial. An eruption of the active volcano on the island of the Great Sangir, in lon. 125 50 E., and lat. 3 50 N., has occurred. The north-western part of the island of Great Sangir is formed by the mountain Awu, which has several peaks, the highest being about 4,000 feet above the sea. On the west side the mountain runs very steep into the sea, at the height of the large village of Kandhar, however, falling away to a low promontory. Between 7 and 8 o'clock on the evening of the 2d of March, a sudden and altogether indescribable crashing noise was heard, which, indlesng to the Sangirese an eruption of the volcano, filled them with consternation. Simultaneously with this, the glowing lava streamed downwards with irresistible force in different directions, bearing with it whatever it encountered on its destructive course, and causing the sea to boil wherever they came in contact. The hot springs opened up and cast out a flood of boiling water, which destroyed and carried what the fire had spared. The sea, obedient to an unusual impulse, lashed the rocks with frightened violence, dashed upon the shore and heaved itself with wild haste against the land, as if it strove to overmaster the stream. This frightful picture of destruction, the horror of which was increased by the shrieks of men and beasts, the wild roaring of the tempest and the crashing of thousands of trees torn up and carried away, was followed about an hour later by peals of thunder which shook the ground and deafened the ear. A black column of stones and ashes then shot up from the mountain to an immense height, and fell, illumined by the glare of the lava, like a shower of fire upon the surrounding country below, producing a darkness that, only now and then momentarily broken by the flashes of lightning, was so intense that people could not discern objects close at hand, and which completed their confusion and despair. Large stones were hurled through the air, crushing whatever they fell upon. Houses and crops which had not been destroyed by fire, sunk and disappeared beneath the ashes and stones, and the hill streams, stopped by these barriers, formed lakes, which, breaking over their banks, soon proved a new source of destruction. This lasted some hours. About midnight the raging elements sank to rest; but on the following day, about noon, they again resumed their work of destruction with renewed violence. In the meantime the fall of ashes continued without intermission, and was so thick on this day that the rays of the sun could not penetrate through it, and an appalling darkness prevailed. Scarcely recovered in some degree of their fright, the inhabitants of this desolated part of Sangir were again disturbed by an eruption on the 17th of March, which destroyed many fields and a great number of trees on the Tubukan side. Since then the volcano has remained quiet, and the only symptom of its working has been the smoke rising up in all directions from cracks and fissures in the ground. The streams of lava on the slopes are still so slightly cooled that people dare not venture to any great distance from the shore. According to the accounts of the natives, the top of the mountain does not appear to have undergone any noticeable alteration. On the other side of Kandhar, on the extreme north point of the island, the appearance of the devastation which has been caused is, if possible, even more frightful than what has taken place at Tartuna; for here, where formerly there were to be seen extensive fields bearing all kinds of crops, and thickly planted and endless groves of cocoa nuts, we now find nothing but lava, stone and ashes. The liquid fire seems at this point to have flowed from the mountain with irresistible force and in prodigious quantity. Not only has this fearful flood as it were buried the whole district and all that was upon it, but after having caused this destruction over an extent of several miles, it was still powerful enough on reaching the shore to form two long tanjongs (capes) at places where the depth of water formerly consisted of many fathoms. A number of other districts and places have been, some wholly destroyed, others greatly injured by the fire. The loss of life has been great. It is estimated as follows in the undermentioned districts: Tatuna, men, women and children, 772; Kandhar ditto 45; Tabukan, ditto, 2,039; total, 2,856.

The greater number met their death in the gardens. They fled in all directions, but were overtaken and swallowed up by the fatal fire-stream. Some tried to save themselves in the trees, but were either carried away with them or killed by the scorching heat. At Kalougan and Tartang the houses were filled with people, who were stopped in their flight by the lava streaming down on all sides, and the streams of boiling water, and who met their death under the burning ashes and the tumbling houses. Many who had reached the shore and thought themselves safe, became a prey to the furious waves, and many died through sheer despair and agony.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 14, 1856.

A TERRIBLE storm occurred in this vicinity on Sunday, which lasted all day, until Tuesday evening.

Its effects were most disastrous at Last Island, a great summer resort, and which our accounts represent to have been entirely inundated. Every building on the island is said to have been swept away, and it has been positively ascertained that 108 persons have been lost.

It is feared that Grand Caillon Island, another-watering place, has also been submerged, and many lives lost as well as property destroyed.

The corn, cotton and sugar crops have been incalculably injured.

The steamers Nautilus and Perseverance are several days overdue, and it is feared that something has happened to them. The steamship Texas has gone in search of them.

The storm extended far up the river. At the Government Hospital, Baton Rouge, 14 inches of water fell between Sunday and Tuesday evenings.

The survivors at Last Island reached this city this morning. They estimate the loss of life at 200. One hundred and eighty-two have been already counted as lost.

Many of the survivors here from Last Island are badly wounded and bruised.

The dead bodies at the island were plundered by a set of pirates who inhabit it.

The steamer Perseverance has just arrived, but nothing has yet been heard from the Nautilus.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 14—P. M.

The recent storm also proved very destructive in this city.

Several vessels lying at the wharves were more or less injured, and a number of buildings unroofed.

From all sections of the country accounts continue to pour in of the fearful havoc that has been created.

The greatest damage, however, appears to have been done at Last and Caillon Islands, though it is impossible as yet to say what accounts may come to hand from other sections.

The storm appears to have come from the Gulf, and it is not unlikely that some of the Texan ports may have suffered severely.

Last Island, where the destruction of property and life was so great, is about half a day's sail from Galveston.

Further Particulars.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 16, 1856.

Nothing definite has yet been heard from Caillon Island, but there has undoubtedly been great loss of life there. It is reported that 30 bodies had been found on one end of the island.

It is supposed that at least $10,000 in money, in packets, fell into the hands of the pirates on Last Island, and about $5,000 worth of baggage. The loss on this island is estimated at over $100,000.

The banks of the river at Bayou Sara caved in, carrying away 300 residences. No lives lost.

Several vessels were blown ashore at the mouth of the Mississippi.

The telegraph lines have suffered severely. The loss at Caillon Island cannot fall short of $60,000.

The Louisiana arrived at Galveston on the 14th, picking up on the way the cabin door of the steamer Nautilus, which vessel it is now supposed was lost during the storm.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 16, 1845.

It is now believed that the number of lives lost by the dreadful storm of Sunday and Monday will reach full 250, including men, women and children, but mostly the former.

At Last Island alone, 190 dead bodies have been found, the sight of which was terrible.

The total loss of property by the sudden and unlooked-for calamity is computed at $500,000, while at some places it is at a still higher figure.

The passengers by the steamer Star are believed to have been all rescued. Had the storm overtaken them in the night, however, the entire number (over 200) must have perished.

IT is beautiful to behold at a wedding the sorrow-stricken air of the parent as he "gives the bride away," when you know that for the last ten years he has been trying his best to get her off his hands! Only imagine what pleasure it is to the young man who gets her.

Terrific Conflagration at Salonica.

ON Saturday last, (Salonica, July 17,) a terrible catastrophe spread grief and terror throughout our city. About half past eight in the evening, a fire was discovered in the residence of M. Saoul, and the flames soon attained a great hold. Several adjacent store houses were rapidly burnt to the ground. The fire was first discovered at Vardar Kalessy. Certain facts, immediately antecedent to this accident, attach great responsibility on M. Skilizzi, a Greek merchant, who had but just before illegally imported a large quantity of gunpowder. Casks, which it was imagined were filled with ordinary merchandise, are now known to have each contained three kegs of gunpowder. There were 80 casks in all, and each keg (240 altogether) held 10 okes, or more than 24 lbs. English, of powder; a grand total of 6,000 lbs of powder! Instead of placing this dangerous article in an isolated place, according to the municipal regulations, Skilizzi imprudently placed it in the cellars of his warehouse. A rumor soon reached the authorities to this effect, and Ahmed Pasha summoned the merchant to appear before him, offering even to store the powder in the Government magazines, and hand it over as sold. Skilizzi quibbled about his having such a quantity of powder at all. Further complaints were nevertheless made; the Pasha thereupon determined to search Skilizzi's stores; but a consul interfered (!!) the Pasha consequently could not proceed further, and then, next day, the fire broke out, and now all the world knows the result.

(The Presse d'Orient here attacks not the consul but the Turkish Custom House, as to the landing of so much powder.) It then proceeds:

When the fire broke out, M. Skilizzi, fearing an explosion, set off for his country house, thus abandoning to destruction a crowd of brave fellows, left battling against the flames, which were not only attacking other houses, but his own. Such conduct naturally led to Skilizzi's being arrested. The Governor and the Consul this time concurred in the act. The explosion had occurred. The roar was terrific. The damage was increased from the powder being stowed in cellars, and those fastened up. The commotion was felt all over the neighborhood, and house upon house was blown into the air. Nearly every individual near Skilizzi's house was killed, several being literally cut in pieces by stones, beams, iron, &c. Many must have been buried under the ruins. There was at last a general flight, another explosion being feared. And to this frightful scene must be added, as a climax, the flaming timbers, which set fire to other edifices, and thus much increased this terrible disaster. The Egyptian bazaar was among those places burnt down. At the landing stage 15 tchekis of wood were also consumed. The flames also destroyed two hundred and sixty-two stores or shops, two mosques, one college, two khans, 144 houses, two palaces, one bath, and several public buildings. Among the merchants who have now met with the severest losses at Salonica is Mr. John Nelson Abbott, the head of one of the most influential houses in Turkey; he is said to have lost 20,000 purses, or 10,000,000 of piastres, (each Turkish purse is £5 English.) His family were absent at their country house. Eleven stone warehouses full of goods, and a magnificent mansion, which had been built for eighteen months, were totally destroyed by the explosion. Thirty-seven persons are known to have been killed, three are still missing, and there are about 300 wounded. Some others are believed to be buried under the ruins. Ahmed Pasha, so well known in the Crimea, was wounded in the leg; his muhurdar lost an arm; and nine of his servants are also injured. Eight persons of the household of Yousouf Pasha are also hurt. The troops—and they behaved well—lost 13 killed and 140 wounded.

Another account from Salonica, of the date of the 15th ult., briefly states that a most destructive explosion occurred in that Turkish town on Friday, the 11th of July. A fire broke out in the quarter of the European warehouses, and caused the ignition and explosion of 240 barrels of gunpowder in the store of a French merchant. Mr. C. Blunt, the long-resident and indefatigable British Consul at Salonica, was in the midst of the conflagration previously aiding in the extinction of the original fire. A man was instantaneously killed by his side, and his Turkish guard suffered severely, chiefly in wounds, from the descending showers of stones, beams, rafters, and exploded materiel. The exact number of killed and wounded was not known by the last packet; but the Pasha estimated the unfortunate victims of both classes as exceeding 1,000 persons.—[Presse d'Orient.

An Iceberg.

THE iceberg had been in sight since the weather cleared at midnight, when it looked like some high rocky headland, except that by watching the bright stars behind it we could see its gigantic outline swaying solemnly and majestically up and down. There was something sublimely grand in the slow stately movement of such a mass. There it floated, large enough, had it been land, to be the dwelling place of hundreds of human beings. The lower part was of so dark a purple as to look almost black; but higher up it shaded off to a bright azure, then to a bright pale green, while on its lofty summit were long slender spires and pinnacles, and pieces of thin transparent ice, worked into all manner of fantastic forms, and either of a crystal whiteness or tinted with a beautiful pale or pink. There were bays and promontories, caves and grottos, hills and dells, with a variety of light and shade. The island is almost equally divided by a great valley running through its centre. This was half filled with snow, which, thawing slowly in the sun, formed the source of a waterfall, at a height so great that it was blown and scattered into fine rain before it reached the sea. Around its base—on which the sea was breaking with a noiseless booming, and more musical than when it dashes on the solid shore—was a broad band of frozen spray, which, glittering in the sunshine, looked like the silver setting of an enormous sapphire. Not far from the top, on the side nearest to us, was a vast, smooth, glassy plane, inclining steeply towards the sea, and terminating abruptly in a tremendous overhanging precipice. We sailed along its side, frequently lying to, to explore each nook and corner as we passed. The further end of the island, when we rounded it, presented quite a new feature; the base was sapped away and undermined for about half a mile by a succession of low cavernous hollows, extending farther than we could see, while the sea rushing in and out tumultuously, made the pent-up air within howl like a hurricane. Altering our course again, we steered almost due west under the southern side, where its vast shadow spread far and wide over the ocean. It now even looked grander, darker, more fear-inspiring, than before, with the sun beaming over its rugged crest, or shining through the thinner parts, and showing all the prismatic colors of the rainbow. The form of the ice-island was that of an irregular triangle, and in about five hours we had sailed completely round it. But there was no single point at which any boat ever built could have landed, even had it been a dead calm, or the sea as still as a mill pond, much less in such a heavy surf as was then foaming and creaming all around it.—[Dicken's Household Words.

Colonization of the Crimea.

THE plan for colonizing the Crimea with Greeks has long been under consideration, and at length the Emperor's will on the subject and the official proclamation have been received. According to the particulars which have hitherto transpired, the object in view is to prevent the depopulation of the Crimea, or rather to replace the Tartars, who are emigrating en masse to the Dobrudscha and other parts of Turkey, by fresh colonists, who will be the more acceptable, as they belong to the same religion as those of the Russians. To induce the Greeks to come over and settle, very great inducements are held out to them. Thus each family will receive the sum of 200 silver roubles to purchase agricultural implements and other articles needed, and be permitted to cultivate the land allotted to them without the payment of any taxes for 50 years, whilst the children will have the benefit of being educated at the public expense in the schools to be established by the Russian Government. They are further permitted to import their furniture, farming-stock, clothes, &c., without the usual payment of duty. The houses abandoned by the Tartars will be allotted to the new colonists, and churches built, and clergymen of the Orthodox Oriental Church appointed to them.

Virtue is like a rich stone, best plain-set,

A Letter and an Answer.

A FEW years since when the Pestilence made its appearance in Great Britain, the Presbyters addressed a petition to Lord Palmerston, praying him to appoint a day for fasting and prayer, that the Plague might be turned from their door. Lord Palmerston refused to grant the request, stating that the remedy lay with themselves; and advised them that cleanliness, and attention to the wants of the poor, would be more efficacious than fasting and prayer. The request and the answer PUNCH thus immortalizes in verse:

THE PRESBYTERS TO PALMERSTON.

THE plague has come among us,
Miserable sinners!
Fear and remorse have stung us,
Miserable sinners!
We ask the State to fix a day,
Whereon all men may fast and pray,
That Heaven will please to turn away
The Plague that works us sore dismay,
Miserable sinners!

PALMERSTON TO THE PRESBYTERS.

The Plague that comes among you,
Miserable sinners!
To effort hath it strung you?
Miserable sinners!
You ask that all should fast and pray;
Better all wake and work, I say;
Sloth and supineness put away,
That so the Plague may cease to slay!
Miserable sinners!

For Plagues, like other evils,
Miserable sinners!
Are God's and not the Devil's,
Miserable sinners!
Scourges they are, but in a hand
Which love and pity do command;
And when the heaviest stripes do fall,
'Tis where they're wanted most of all,
Miserable sinners!

Look round about your city,
Miserable sinners!
Pray: but use brush and limewash pail;
Fast: but feed those for want who fail;
Bow down, gude town, to ask for grace,
But bow with cleaner hands and face,
Miserable sinners!

All Time God's Law hath spoken,
Miserable sinners!
That Law may not be broken,
Miserable sinners!
But he that breaks it must endure
The penalty which works the cure.
To us, for God's great laws transgressed,
Is doomsman Pestilence addressed,
Miserable sinners!

We can not juggle Heaven,
Miserable sinners;
With one day out of seven,
Miserable sinners!
Shall any force of fasts atone
For years of duty left undone?
How explate with prayer or psalm,
Deaf ear, blind eye, and folded palm?
Miserable sinners!

Let us be up and stirring,
Miserable sinners!
'Mong ignorance and erring,
Miserable sinners!
Sloth and self-seeking from us cast,
Believing this the fittest fast,
For of all prayers preyed 'neath the sun
There is no prayer like work well done,
Miserable sinners.

Sir. George Cathcart's last Blood stained Letter.

I THIS morning heard a very touching anecdote connected with the death of the late Sir. George Cathcart: whether it be really true, I know not, but I write it just as it was told to me. It was said, that at the time he received his fatal wound at the battle of Inkermann, he had in the breast pocket of his coat a letter, which he had just written to some member of his family: the bullet, in its passage to his heart, had perforated this letter, which was consequently saturated with his best life's blood. It was in this state discovered the next day, and forwarded with his other effects to England. What a precious relic must this ensanguined letter prove to those who are still mourning their lost hero! He was as gallant a soldier as ever drew breath, and closed an honorable career by a glorious death. The grass is growing green over his humble grave; but his memory must ever live in the grateful remembrance of that country in whose service he had lived, and for which he had died.—[Major Whiteworth's Life in the Trenches.

KINDNESS.—"What! Mr. Brown a brute! Why, he writes to his wife every packet!"

"Yes; he writes a parcel of flummery about the agony of absence, but he has never remitted her a shilling. Do you call that kindness?"

"Decidedly—un-remitting kindness."

A PLEASANT, cheerful wife, is a rainbow set in the sky, when her husband's mind is tossed with the storms and tempest; but a dissatisfied and fretful wife, in the hour of trouble, is like one of those fiends who are appointed to torture lost spirits.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, AUG. 23, 1856.

The New York Tribune At It Again.

THE Mormon of Saturday last rallies the forces of Joe Smith and polygamy against the people's candidate for the Presidency in the following terms:

"Many of the States are going to be very evenly balanced, and notwithstanding their noise and gasconade, Mormonism can yet control several thousand votes in a number of States of this Union, and we say to our friends, keep your weather-eye open, you may hear from us again. It we do anything, we want deeds, not words.

"We cannot, at any rate, vote for our enemies, and although the bayonets and pistols these fools talk about are all in their brains, yet if these whelps are not stopped their howling, we will give them a pill to swallow that will be difficult of digestion next November,"

The enemies whom the Mormons are thus called on to resist, are the Republican party, who have honestly declared against their peculiar institution of polygamy; and the friends they are to favor are the Border Ruffians, whose doctrine of squatter sovereignty involves the approval and legalization of that institution. How many votes can thus be brought up against Fremont, we have no means of knowing precisely, but fancy that there cannot be more than 500 of them. How many intelligent citizens will be induced to give their suffrages to Buchanan by the knowledge that his cause is that of the polygamists of Salt Lake City, remains to be seen.—[N. Y. Tribune, Aug. 15.

The above is about as fair a specimen of honesty as we are in the habit of witnessing by the party press of the present day, who feel somewhat in the condition of the man who said to his son, "Get money honestly if you can, but at any rate get money." We believe that the Tribune would rather tell the truth than utter a falsehood, if the excitement of the election was out of the way; but in its zeal to support Black Republicanism, truth and everything decent must be sacrificed; we have no doubt that after the election it will become sane.

Now we care very little about the present issues that are before the people; but deluded as we are, we yet have enough of brains to know when we are kicked; and when the leaders of a party, for party purposes, without cause or provocation, cry "mad dog," and then set all their whelps in the country howling the same threatening the Mormons with sword, bayonets and extermination, we have neither enough of piety to lick the paw of their whelps, nor enough of the nigger worshipping propensities to adore their colored deity. As we stated, we have no desire to enter into the political arena; but if forced to in self-defence, we may probably find more than the Tribune's "five hundred." Again we say, take off your dogs; or if you think their howl is of more use to you, go it, we ask no odds.

We have received numbers of letters from different parts of the Union of a similar nature to the one we published in our issue of August 9th, and we wish to inform all concerned that it was the mobocratic, diabolical nature of the course of the Republicans, and their wanton, unprovoked persecution of a people who never injured them, that called forth our remarks; and such proceedings from any other party would produce the same remarks from us. It is not as the Tribune says, "For the honest expression of the Republican party concerning polygamy," that we have those feelings; we believe all men have a right to their opinions and to the expression of them at proper times; but we object to their dishonesty, and without cause or provocation, wantonly, impudently and fiendishly persecuting and prosecuting a people who have been more peaceful and who have caused government less trouble, and who are better governed than other people of the United States, for the purpose of making a political issue and of pleasing long-faced religious hypocrites.

The following are the remarks referred to:

> The political excitement that is convulsing our nation, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the St. Johns to the Rio Grande, is but fulfilling the words of our martyred prophet, who, though dead, still speaks with warning voice to the nation; but his words fall upon leaden ears that hear not, and the harvest of blood and outrage now being reaped on the plains of Kansas does not satisfy, at least I judge so from the fact that in this vicinity the advocates of "free soil," "free speech," "free men" and "Fremont," are preaching a new crusade against the Mormons of Utah on account of their religious opinions. These precious "negro stealing scoundrels," who would rend the Union asunder to carry out their "pious intentions," promise the people of Iowa, that if Fremont is elected to the Presidency, that the Saints in Utah shall have Christianity taught them at the bayonet's point.
>
> Poor pious fools, too mad and blind to evil,
> To know the God they worship is the devil.
> These "fanatics," so zealous in reform,
> Would wrap the civil firmament in storm,
> And to procure some false imagined good,
> Of moral ills, unchains a noxious brood,
> And to the workings of their mental vice,
> Whole generations fall a sacrifice.

I do not speak of this matter as the advocate of any political party, but merely to condemn such conduct, and let you know what "issues" are presented in the name of Fremont in this part of the country.

If the Tribune thinks we can submit to such proceedings as these precious rowdies prescribe, he is for once mistaken. We have not interfered with any person or party, nor do we care anything about his politics; but we do mean what we say and will not be imposed upon with impunity. We say again to our friends, keep your weather-eye open.

Mr. Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

We have notified a number of our friends in different parts of the country, that we had furnished Mr. Leslie with a drawing of Salt Lake City, and that he was going to publish it in his Illustrated Newspaper; we also, furnished him with a copy of Piercy & Linforth's "Route to Salt Lake Valley," from which he expressed a desire to publish several of the views; he further wished from us a written description of, or any incidents associated with Salt Lake City, or its settlement. This we cheerfully complied with. We thought a thing of this kind would be interesting to our friends, and took a little pains in notifying them of it, and with the very best of feelings, on our part, had calculated to circulate them not only in the United States, but in Utah and Europe. We also ordered four or five hundred for a commencement to supply our friends in the immediate neighborhood. We have now just returned from an excursion in the country, and almost the first salute we had was an exhibition of the Illustrated Newspaper, containing a view of Salt Lake City, and in the same paper one of the most virulent, false, and vindictive articles, that we have met with for some time.

Mr. Dulin, the gentleman appointed to attend to this matter during our absence, felt at a loss how to proceed under the circumstances, he took some two hundred copies; but deferred taking any more until our return. We immediately on seeing this malignant attack upon Mormonism, told Mr. Dulin not to take any more, for we could not lend our aid to circulate such falsehood. We say therefore, to our friends, that the above is the reason why we have not forwarded your orders as we preferred leaving it to your own choice, as to the course you would pursue in relation to this matter; and we have given instructions to return all funds forwarded to us on this account. The plate itself with some few alterations of small import is tolerably correct, and a pretty fair representation of Salt Lake Valley. The views also taken from "The Route" are well executed; but there is no credit given for them, which we heard Mr. Leslie promise to Mr. Linforth the editor of "The Route" should be done. We are not disposed to be either captious or capricious about this matter, and care very little about it; but having spoken of it to our friends we thought an explanation was necessary. We are aware too of the heavy responsibility devolving upon the conductor of a paper like the Illustrated Newspaper, and have been almost inclined to think that the article referred to has been slipped in by some of Mr. Leslie's employes without his knowledge; for we have supposed that the editor was more of a gentleman than to step out of his ordinary course in the publication of his paper, to traduce and villify a people who never provoked or injured him, and had it been a private matter we should have gone to him personally; but coming out publicly as it has, we feel bound to meet it in the same way. We did not expect, nor wish Mr. Leslie to advocate Mormonism, nor to publish anything about, or in favor of our doctrines, institutions, or principles; but on the other hand we think we had a right to expect that we should not be traduced, nor abused by him, and furthermore that Mr. Linforth had a right to expect, particularly after being promised it, that he should have credit for the views taken from his route.

We extract:

> "Not the least strange thing connected with this rise of Mormonism is its relation to our own government. Within the territory of the United States—territory directly under the control of our Federal authorities, representing the different States of the Union—has the Mormon settlement been made, and principally by foreigners or unnaturalized citizens. The chief magistrate of these people combines within himself all civil and ecclesiastical authority. He exerts powers not known to our Constitutional laws, obtaining them from his relations as priest, and yet further sanctioned by the official appointment from the authorities at Washington of United States Territorial Governor."

It would seem from the above that our author has made quite a discovery, that "Mormonism has grown up in these United States, in full view, and under the auspices of the Federal Government." Now who did not know that Mormonism, so far as its late development is concerned, originated in the United States. Joseph Smith, his father and grandfather, and his friends on his mother's side were all Americans; and his progenitors were prominent and active members in the revolutionary war. Mormonism was proclaimed throughout the length and breadth of the United States and Canadas, and thousands and tens of thousands enlisted under its banner, before ever it was proclaimed in Europe. "Mormon settlements," therefore, have not "been made principally by foreigners, or unnaturalized citizens." Of late years tens of thousands have emigrated from Europe, as well as from the United States; but up to the time of the settlement of Nauvoo, foreigners were comparatively few among the Mormons. Mormonism is, therefore, eminently American, and we should be at a loss to know where a child had more legitimate right to parentage or nationality than where it was born.

Again, the chief magistrate of this people possesses no other civil powers than the chief magistrate of any other Territory of the United States, and such as are guaranteed by the Constitution and laws thereof; and the man who asserts anything to the contrary, is either eggregiously ignorant of the subject upon which he writes, or otherwise he wilfully misrepresents. In regard to his religion, it is not a state question. The Constitution of the United States knows no man's religion, and before our friend again drags it in with his politics, we would advise him to get the Constitution altered to proscribe religion:

> "The administration has throughout acted with timidity, and absolutely allowed an independent nation to exist in our midst, irresponsible to law, and utterly defiant to the restraints to which Kansas, Oregon, New Mexico, and other Territories necessarily submit—and this has been done with the clearly announced defiance of our Federal authorities, with the fact proclaimed that no appointment which would displace Brigham Young, the present Mormon ruler, would be respected or regarded by the authorities and people of Utah!"

We pronounce the whole of the above to be a base fabrication, and unqualifiedly false; and call upon Mr. Leslie for his proof.

> "A population already exists in Utah sufficient to make a sovereign State; and although asking admission to the Union has been deferred, and probably will be throughout this Congress, still the question must come up, and with it will come a full discussion of manners, habits, and customs of these strange people, now out of the way of observation, from their geographical location and isolation, so far as the immediate legislation of the country is concerned. When the discussion does come, there will be revelations which will take our sober attend-to-their-own-business people by surprise, and cause an excitement in the moral world, such as occurs only in the course of centuries."

We suppose the revelations referred to, will be manufactured to order, such as the above; and our "sober-attend-to-their-own-business people," so much engaged in the sublime art of vilification that they will for once forget their sobriety, and have to be reminded of the Mormon Creed "Mind your own business."

> "Aside from all other peculiarities, polygamy is sanctioned and practised, and there now exists in the city of New York a paper published under one of the most influential of the Mormon elders, that not only affirms the fact, but defends the principle and practice in its columns, which are set up and printed and circulated in communities where bigamy is punished by imprisonment, and polygamy looked upon as a practice heathen and benighted to the last degree. Can a State be admitted into the Union, the people of which are addicted to such a practice? Can the people of the State of Utah nullify all the laws of the other States regarding the most sacred relation of life, and by the sanction of State sovereignty be protected? If so, under the guise of religious toleration the moral restraints of society, as we understand them, will fall to pieces, society will become disorganized, the teachings of the New Testament and the sacrifice of Christ are all in vain."

In regard to the sanction and practice of Polygamy among us, it is no secret to the world, and as stated we defend it; and notwithstanding all the twaddle that we hear about it, and the grunting and whining, we have not met with a man who has attempted to refute it, either on the ground of Scripture or morality. We have stated over and over again, that we have stood prepared to defend it on these grounds, and we now state to Mr. Leslie that we are prepared to prove that Polygamy is a scriptural doctrine, that has never been annulled, and that the morals of the citizens of Utah are a great deal better than those of the renowned city of Gotham, which is under the sublime and renovating influences of Monogamy and false Christianity.

It would be much more honorable for gentlemen to meet the thing fairly, as men, than to give us so much Tweedledee and Tweedledum, and to nauseate us with so much cant about Christianity. It does not look well for men with the Bible in their hands which they profess to revere, to call the practices of its most prominent Patriarchs and Prophets "Heathenish and benighted," while at the same time their own ministers are permitting, sanctioning and advocating those very practices in evangelizing the heathen abroad.

> "Nothing will show the rapid increase of Mormonism so instantly to the mind as our spirited picture of the Great Salt Lake City, prepared expressly for this paper. Here is an evidence of an extraordinary increase of material wealth, which is the product of agricultural industry, and not of successful mining. It is evident therefore that the country presents great inducements for settlers; for if the conglomerated inhabitants of Utah, drawn as they are from all parts of Europe, and unused to frontier life, can in a few years build up such a vast metropolis, what might not be accomplished by a superior population, guided by a superior morality—a morality founded upon principles that must last until time shall be no longer?"

There is one principle which Mr. Leslie has evidently lost sight of among this conglomeration of people, he elsewhere states that:

> "The rise and spread of Mormonism is one of the most wonderful incidents of the nineteenth century, a century so prolific in startling discoveries and extraordinary revelations. Within the memory of those now in the prime of life, Joe Smith, the founder of this strange sect, was an obscure man in one of the little towns in Western New York, a person of limited mental powers, and one apparently least likely, of the thousands with whom he came in contact, to render his name famous as the founder of a religion and a State. The history in the Mormon Bible seems so absurd in its conception, its contents so crude in meaning, its first disciples so humble in their origin, that one cannot by the most diligent search find any satisfactory and justifiable cause for the spread of the doctrines taught; and yet it is evident that some great and heretofore unknown principle of the human heart has been touched. In this age of enlightenment, of burning effulgent Christianity, we see unimpeded by opposition, and unchecked by the intelligence of the times, this strange people increasing in numbers, and daily adding to their population and material wealth."

Now it is this mysterious principle after all that has touched the, to him, "unknown chord of the human heart," that has brought about those, to him, "wonderful results;" and until he can fathom this mystery he will be as much in the dark as he is at present. The pure religion of the Bible, has always been a mystery to the ungodly, and in Paul's day, "The preaching of the gospel was to the Jews a stumbling block, and to the Greeks foolishness; but to them that believed, it was the power of God unto salvation.

Touched by this mysterious influence, men of God in former days endured every kind of persecution and affliction, "They were tempted, tried, sawn asunder, wandered about in sheep skins and goat skins, destitute, afflicted, tormented, of whom the world was not worthy, they looked for a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God." And touched by the same influences, in these last days, the Mormons have endured afflictions, privations and difficulties only known to themselves and their God.

They have been driven from city to city, from State to State, by the very pious, meek, humble Christians, of whom our cotemporary speaks. They have been robbed, kidnapped, whipped, imprisoned, spoiled of their goods, their women ravished, and their flesh, after being murdered, has been cooked to feed their brethren in prison. They have been robbed of millions of acres of ground, for which they had paid; their hearths have been desecrated, their homes made desolate, their villages burnt and their cities destroyed; and that under the shade of the outstretched wings of the American eagle! and their present residence in Utah is owing to one of the most savage, relentless and barbarous persecutions that ever disgraced any country. But yet this chord has bound them together, and like the ancient Saints "they have endured, as seeing Him who is invisible." Talk of revelations! If, in the great assize, there are not some revelations that will make these craven, hypocritical, pious, groaning wretches tremble, and their knees smite together more tremulously than those of Belshazzar, then shall we believe that justice has fled the heavens as well as the earth.

We must confess that we have often been surprised that the abuse the Mormons have received from the hands of their persecutors, has not embittered them against the United States forever; but governed by nobler principles, and true to the chord and instinct of which our cotemporary speaks, they have remained loyal under all circumstances; and notwithstanding all their abuse, we do not believe that there is as orderly, as patriotic, and as loyal a people as can be found in Utah. Religious persecution they attribute to corrupt Christianity, narrow-minded bigotry and fanaticism, and governmental neglect to official corruption and a departure from constitutional principles; but they are firm in the belief that the United States, notwithstanding its corruption and degeneracy, is the best government under the heavens, and when all shall forsake it, they will rally round "The Flag of our Union."

In regard to the superior morality of which our friend speaks, the Mormons have been satiated to the full with monogamic Christianity; the bare reflection nauseates the stomach, and furthermore, if we are to have such a beastly corrupt and damnable state of morals as exists here in the city of Gotham, we shall call into requisition a prayer which is ground out every Sabbath in the Episcopal churches.

Mormons in New Jersey.

OCEAN COUNTY, Friday, Aug. 8, 1856.

APROPOS of your article on Catholicism vs. Mormonism, Mr. Editor, I suppose few of your readers are aware that we have a flourishing Mormon Church in full blast in New Jersey. It is nevertheless the truth, that such a church is in full operation at Toms River, the county seat of Ocean County. Their number is quite large and is increasing. They maintain all the tenets of the Mormon Church stoutly. They have preachers resident here, and priests of a higher grade frequently visiting them from Salt Lake City, and from New York. Although prevented by law from openly practising polygamy here, they warmly defend and advocate it, and that by a course and style of argument not at all calculated, I assure you, to elevate the morals of the place. Large numbers of both sexes attend their church, and they are proselytising very fast—particularly among the young men and women. They are unanimous for Mr. Fillmore for President, for the reason that by the appointment of their High Priest and Prophet, Brigham Young, as Governor of Utah—and by his official acts generally, in regard to that Territory—he has done more to build up their Church and creed than all the other "Gentiles" in the world.—[Cor. of The Newark Daily Advertiser.

We expect the Mormons at Toms River, when attacked, are like the Mormons everywhere else—ready to defend Polygamy or any other Bible principle: further than this they don't go very often. Being somewhat acquainted with the folks down there, we are not surprised that "their style of argument is not at all calculated to elevate the morals of the place." The morality of Moses and the Prophets is at a low discount with the present smart generation—and their style of argument anything but popular. We don't believe, however, in deserting friends, and as we think the world is considerably more indebted to the long line of illustrious prophets in Israel, than to fashionable preachers and scribblers, we purpose sticking, through thick and thin, to "the good old way."

We hear so much croaking about morality, we should be pleased to see something definite on the subject. Outsiders, brush the cobwebs from your brains, and give us something plain and easy to be understood, and shew us how much better your morality is than that patronized by the Great I Am.

The Advertiser's correspondent attributes one excellent quality to the Mormons—gratitude. Any man who shall administer justice to all, irrespective of their religion, as we believe Mr. Fillmore did while occupant of the White House, will live in our memory. It is immaterial to us who is President—we don't calculate on a "share of the spoils." All we wait for is the time to strike—and the gentleman who has the closest alliance with blind justice is our man in November. "A clear stage and no favor" will do for the Mormons.

Arrival.

Bishop J. L. Heywood arrived in this city from Washington on Thursday morning. Having two weeks leisure he has stepped out to see his friends here and in Massachusetts. We were much pleased to see him in good health and to learn from him that he has full confidance in the government at Washington meeting honorably his just claims in due time. He left for Boston the same evening.

Important Information.

Crooked Made Straight—Or Lies Made Facts.

Send an annoymous letter of wholesale abuse and unscrupulous falsehood, it matter-eth not how crooked and zig-zag, to the New York Tribune, and if the calumniated and abused are far enough removed from the office of the New York Ledger to warrant no apprehension of a cowhidding the story comes out the following week in that "trashy sheet" abridged and "straight as a gun barrel"—what is report with Greeley becomes fact with Bonner. Religious editors and political trucksters in want of such assistance will no doubt avail themselves of this—only to some—news. Our columns are too small to contain a tithe of the testimonials that might be adduced to satisfy the most incredulous and fastidious that the process may be relyed on, but in the absence of testimonials we may refer our readers to the Tribune's late letter from Utah and Mormonism in the Ledger of the 23d inst.

By-the-by we have just learned that the Utah correspondent who furnished the Tribune with some items of that said letter is that fellow P——l, who forged a certain judge's name to a note in order to steal his favorite dog for which P.'s covetous eyes had run wild for months. Salt Lake folks know who we mean; will some friend just read him his letter and get a Photograph of his confused face and we'll send it to Greeley that he may see how ugly a liar looks when found out at his dirty work in Utah. All such vermin are a pest to society.

The Beaver Island Strangites.

We publish on our front page, an interesting article relating to the expelled followers of the late J. Strang, from Beaver Island, Michigan. The writer in the Chicago Times is pretty hard upon the Black Republicans. If the conduct of the citizens of Chicago is there faithfully represented, and the result of that particular plank of their Philadelphia platform bearing upon Utah, it is a perfect vindication of our Iowa correspondent's statement, noticed elsewhere, and a justification of our remarks on the Tribune. We know of no possible excuse for such conduct as that heartlessness at Chicago. The persons in distress were not Mormons, but if they had been—"they were human beings suffering for food." How dark and corrupt must be the heart that would suffer helpless women and children to faint and famish, when plenty was at hand. And when the plea of opposition in religion is given as justification for that soulless indifference and neglect, it exhibits the utter apostacy of the parties, from the great principles of the Master who said: "do good unto all men—if thine enemy hunger give him to eat." The Times does not say whether others did better than the Republicans. We do not pretend to judge of the justice of sending the poor expelled back to Michigan; we do think, however, that while in Chicago they ought to have been fed and sheltered.

Congress.

EVERY one has been looking forward to the close of the present session of Congress. Senators and Representatives for the last few weeks have been doing something—whether of much value or not—for their money—and seemed desirious of finishing with last week. They labored till 4 1-2 A. M. on Sunday morning but had to adjourn till Monday morning. They met, did as much business as they could, but as will be seen from the Congressional report the Republicans were determined to defeat the Army bill, they broke up in a row, and were all ready for home, when President Pierce called them back like truant school boys by the following proclamation.

> Whereas, whilst hostilities exist with various Indian tribes on the remote frontiers of the United States, and whilst in other respects the public peace is seriously threatened, Congress has adjourned without granting the necessary supplies for the army, depriving the Executive of the power to perform his duty in relation to the common defence and security, and as an extraordinary occasion has thus arisen for assembling the two houses of Congress, I do, therefore, by this proclamation, convene the said houses to meet at the Capitol, in the city of Washington, Thursday, the 21st of August, instant, hereby requiring the respective Senators and Representatives then and there to assemble to consult and determine on such measures as the state of the Union may seem to require.
>
> In testimony whereof I have caused the seal of the United States to be hereunto affixed, and signed the same with my hand.
>
> Done at the city of Washington, the 18th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1856, and of the Independence of the United States the 81st.
>
> FRANKLIN PIERCE.
>
> W. L. MARCY, Secretary of State.

Congress meets again to-day (Thursday) for how long we can't say, but every thing prognosticates a short session.

The Lucy Thompson.

ELDER JAMES THOMPSON, who had charge of the small company of Saints who came by the above ship lately to this port, has handed us an account of the voyage. He speaks of "the Captain as a gentleman and sailor, attentive to his duties and kind to all; but he gives a terrible picture of Gentile life on board." Elder T. faced Anti-mormonism like a man, and had the support and approbation of the right-thinking portion of the passengers on board, for his exposure of the wickedness and prostitution that abounded during the voyage. He says:

> "Before we were long on board we were found to be the most clean in our habits. We kept our berths clean, washing them frequently. The Gentiles were annoyed, as the officers only gave them half allowance of water till they went and did likewise. Towards the end of the voyage the officers seldom visited us, as they considered it unnecessary.
>
> "I now come to what I consider the greatest of all evils on board; the system of berthing the passengers without respect to age or sex: so you form a good idea of the results in many cases. Picture the annoyance to any respectable young female to find herself berthed next to one, if not between two young men, with perhaps not the shadow of a screen or the means to make one. The Saints are seldom obliged to witness what fell to our share of observation, but to all, I would say appreciate the counsel of the authorities of the Church at Liverpool, and came by no ship without their direction, or your eyes may see what your tongues would refuse to utter."

Bro. Thompson, with his family, left this city to-day, for Pittsburg. His youngest child had been very sick, but was looking better before they left.

FOR THE MORMON.

Some Remarks

On Correct Reasoning and the Inconsistency of Letting the Misconduct of Injudicious Persons Interfere with the Principles of Truth.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

Every one that is familiar with ecclesiastical and profane history, knows it to be an established fact, that the greatest hindrance to the propagation of the Gospel in its native purity and simplicity, to a diffusion of that divine knowledge, and to consequently the general improvement of mankind, through a lapse of eighteen hundred years, has been owing to an obstinate adherence to preconceived notions, to false reasonings based on the most absurd and preposterous ideas, which had been either imbibed by the perusal of sophistical, fanatic works, or intercourse with men destitute of sound principles. Fallacious modes of reasoning are met with in all classes of society, but more so among those whose minds have not been properly trained by the cultivation of sound, philanthropic principles. Although God has endowed every one with intellectual faculties, yet there is quite as great a variety of gradations in the mental creation as there is in the physical one. The strength or vigor of the reasoning powers depends upon the improvement of the mind, the channel to which it has been confined, and the manner in which the cultivation of the intellects has taken place.

There is quite a variety of causes that will lead man to incorrect reasoning, as for instance, passions, affections, like selfishness, pride, envy, fear, &c. We have to try to divest ourselves first of those mental hindrances, before we can judge soberly and correctly, and above all not rely upon our own wisdom, or that of others, but rely on God. If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given to him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed to and fro. For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing from the Lord. Jas. 1. 5, 6, 7. From the passage of Scripture it is evident that we are to appeal to God with the greatest confidence, faith and firmness of mind for knowledge, and then we shall receive line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little.

If, by appealing with a contrite, faithful and sincere heart to the Most High, I have received a knowledge of the truth of principles, of their being an emanation of His divine providence, and furthermore, if I know from the peculiar institutions, blessings and privileges around us, that I am in the Church of Christ, what, if I have a mind of my own, if I have an honest and firm determination of working out my salvation, will induce me to deviate from the course of eternal truth, and listen to the whisperings of the adversary? The misconduct of some unruly member? Certainly not; it may be tempting and trying, but does not James say, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." The principle of trying, testing a person or thing, is one of the most important and wisest in the universe. Even our every day life shows that every thing, no matter what it is, has to be tried and tested, to ascertain its value, to see whether it will answer a certain purpose. If I have a so-called friend, I do not know him to be one in very deed, unless he has been tried and helped me in distress and sickness. How do I know a person to be virtuous or brave, unless he has been tried? It is very easy to possess good morals and a purity of mind, in the society of respectable people, but when moving among the offscouring or scum, and exposed main unspotted, and see whether the energy to manifold temptations, then try to re- of your mind is not put to the utmost test. The mind may be compared to fine gold, that has to be purified, yes, seven times before it is fit for the presence of the King, therefore the assay master subjects us all to such operations from time to time as he may deem requisite.

The Scripture reads, "It is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God." It appears from that passage, that mostly the poor and destitute are coming in; and it is a well-known fact that the Church of Christ both in ancient and modern times has been and is still moving in the outskirts of society, upon which the world at large is so apt to throw much odium. Hence the intelligent reader will easily imagine that the materials constituting the Kingdom of God are sometimes very rough, and require a great deal of moulding and polishing, and as the net gathers all kinds of fish, we have to expect to meet a variety of characters, good and bad, noble-minded and narrow contracted ones. Some, coming in from impure motives, will do wrong, and bring the Church in disgrace. But how is it, says one, "that reprobates can be found in the Church of Christ, and I thought on embracing this work that every member was holy and sanctified?" To which I reply, does not the Scripture read that there must be evil doers, but woe to him through whom it comes? and does not Paul, in his first epistle to the Corinthians, in the first and fifth chapter, bitterly complain of the misconduct of the Saints. The idea of expecting to see every one in the Church of Christ perfect in our mortal career, is absurd. Every principle in the different departments of God's creation is carried out gradually, and as it is in the physical creation, so it is in the mental creation; consequently the moral improvement of the Saints has to take place by degrees.

Does the misconduct of injudicious persons alter the doctrines of Christ? Certainly not. The principles of the Gospel are of an eternal truth, revealed from on High, through Holy Angels; they are laws made in the councils of heaven, for the purpose of saving and exalting fallen worlds, and are as immutable and unchangeable as their divine founder. Four times four make sixteen: this is a mathematical truth, no matter whether uttered by a good or bad man, and so it is in regard to the Gospel; it is always true, whether it is preached by an honest or dishonest person. The reader will infer from the above, that the principles of eternal truth have nothing to do with the conduct of individuals.

This is all very good and true, says one, but I cannot endure the trial of associating with bad members, and I do not know how to get comforted. Does not Paul write in his first epistle to the Corinthians, Whether we be afflicted, it is for your consolation and salvation, which is effected in the enduring of the same sufferings which we also suffer, or whether we be comforted, it is for your consolation and salvation. And how can I get comforted? Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you, and you will receive the divine Spirit which is the comforter. Those that judge rashly, without minding their own business, I refer to the 7th chapter of Mathew, "judge not, that ye be not judged. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, and considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?"

Every intelligent agent that reasons by the spirit of God knows that the miserable oscillation of the mind has to come to an end, in order to realize fully the blessings of the principles of Christ, principles which are as truly organic as progressive, and which are calculated to achieve a permanent triumph in the history of the world, an improvement, a regeneration of our intellectual, physical and social life. Every intelligent agent knows that he has to make the greatest exertions to restrain the encroachments of the Adversary, in order to make himself a prominent actor in the grand drama of general beatitude. Every consistent reasoner knows further, that he has to work out his own salvation in all its bearings, and that as long as he is endowed with mental faculties, he has to rely only upon himself, guided by the Spirit of God, and not upon others. Every man of sense knows further, or at least ought to, that he is responsible for his own actions, and not for those of others. Would it then be reasonble for me to stumble because my neighbor stumbles, to do wrong because another man does wrong? Certainly not. Shall we lose our eternal salvation on account of some little things, that wound our feelings, or cause a sore in the heart? No; never. Some people say, we are so shocked, it is revolting to our feelings, to see such a man and such a woman do wrong. If such persons, attend to their family duties, pray and fast, they will learn wisdom, and confine the delicacy of their feelings to a proper channel, and will never think of forsaking the path of eternal light, on account of others.

Brethren and Sisters, let us then exercise that intelligence which we possess; let us realize a portion of the Spirit of God, that we may feel that we have to take an important part in the grand scenes of the Last Days, that we are sons and daughters of the Most High, that the recording angel may write down our names on the scroll of immortality. Let us then steer our bark through the ocean of life, God is at the helm, his servants are the crew, and you, as the faithful passengers, need not be afraid, the sails are unfurled, the pennent of Mormonism is floating high in the air, the breeze is steady and the wind fair. Watch ye, then, stand fast in the faith, quit yourselves like men, be strong, and you will in the end receive the crown of eternal life.

Letter from a Missionary.

NEW YORK, August 6, 1856.

PRESIDENT TAYLOR,—Dear Bro:—Having just arrived from Iron Co., U. T., I take the liberty of addressing a few lines to you as I have crossed the plains with the discontented company reported in your city papers. I have been but a short time in Utah, but a few lines on last fall and winter may not be uninteresting to some of your readers.

I lived in Cedar City, Iron Co., during last fall and winter. When we could not work we enjoyed ourselves in various kind of amusements, in the theatre, in the ball-room, pic-nic parties, and singing meetings, as we had the best choir of singers in the Territory. The pieces performed were chiefly selections from Handel, Mozart, Ellis, Fawcett and Robertshaw, occasionally accompanied by the Cedar Brass Band. The Rocky Mountain Glee singers also gave us several rich treats of their beautiful harmony. Everything went off in first-rate style, the people enjoyed a good spirit, felt well towards each other, and labored to roll on the Kingdom of God practically. As soon as the weather would permit, amusements were put on the shelf, and every man went to his occupation, tilling the ground, making fences, ditching, laying out lots, building houses, &c., as a new city is being built at the mouth of Coal Creek Kanyon; they expect to have there the finest city in Utah Territory, (Salt Lake City not excepted). We did not suffer any in consequence of bad crops last year, for we had bread enough and to spare, which was sent to those who needed it in other parts of the Territory.

I started from Cedar City on the 25th of March on my way to England, and from Salt Lake on the 19th of April, in company and assisting Sister Russell, the late Capt. Russell's widow, who is bound for British America, after crossing mountains covered with snow, fording rivers, creeks, &c., we got safe to Fort Bridger on the 25th, there we overtook a company who were leaving Salt Lake for the States. The grasshoppers and crickets had been in battle array against them, and they were "Fleeing from the wrath to come." We had a slight snow storm on the 3d of May, another on the 11th, and a severe cold night: when I awoke in the morning I was buried in ten to twelve inches of snow, as I had the privilege of being an outside passenger. Our cattle had strayed off in the storm and no track of them could be seen for five miles, and when found they were fifteen miles from camp. We got them safe back to camp by sun down, and with the loss of only one ox. We traveled on as fast as the strength of our oxen would permit, and arrived at Fort Laramie on the 28th of May. Being on the road longer than we expected, we were in want of provisions and had to apply to the Colonel for rations, a sufficiency of which he gave to all who had not means to purchase to serve them to the next Fort. After leaving Laramie we met the California emigration over 350 wagons and about 25,000 head of cattle. From the 10th to the 19th of June we passed through a continual herd of Buffalos, if I say tens of thousands, I shall not go to an extreme culculation; as we advanced they retired like an army of soldiers. On the 22d of June, we met a band of 700 Pawnees who were going to the Buffalo country; they were friendly disposed; we gave them a little buiscut and they went away quite satisfied. We parted here for different parts of the States, and I landed on the banks of the Missouri on the 27th of June. While traveling with this company across the plains I had every opportunity of learning the various excuses some had for leaving Utah Territory, or the gathering place of the Saints. J. H. who resided there three years, said he was leaving because he could not get any cash there, he was as poor as a church mouse all the way, but accidentally on the road an Indian wanted to sell a horse for $36 and J. H. accidentally drew out an old stocking leg, filled with cash to pay for the horse, out of $250; he did not complain of there being no cash in Salt Lake Valley the remainder of the journey. An ould spud from the Emerald Isle came along in our company who never belonged to the church, but had lived there four years. I asked him what his excuse was for leaving Salt Lake. He said, "An sure I can't make a living there." "Why?" "Case I couldn't; so I could'nt." "What did you do for a living all the time?" "Sure an' I did'nt do nothin' at al; so I did'nt." "But you must have done something for a living—you could not live on the wind four years?" He lifted up his pants and looked wild and said, "An sure an' did ye think I robb'd ye's. An so I did work for my living as honorable as the firsht man, so I did." "What did you do?" "I traded for cattle, so I did, but the cattle all died off lasht winter, the crickets ate all the craps, so they did, so I concluded to lave before I was forsh'd to lave when I could'nt lave, so I did." Others had to leave by star light, on account of not being honest enough to leave by daylight. While some started with a good intention to back out, but their hearts failed them on the road, and wished they were back again in the valley, sometimes staying behind a few hours to see if they could not muster up sufficient courage to go back to Salt Lake. I am yours ever truly in the Kingdom of God. CHARLES FORD.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

OUR city was visited with a heavy rain on Tuesday afternoon and evening, which caused considerable uneasiness to the cellar occupants of back lanes, and some damage to the Hudson River Railroad Line; likewise several vessels in the rivers. Loss estimated $500,000.

The steamship Arabia on her passage from Boston to Halifax last week, struck on Blond Rock, on which there was above sixteen feet of water. The ship, drawing twenty-one feet, going at full speed, struck her bow on the rock; she then rose and slid over the rock, striking first at the bow, then under the boiler, then under the mainmast. Every means was tried to render her fit for the voyage, but on her departure from Halifax, she was making eighteen tons of water in an hour. About half of her Liverpool passengers left her at Halifax, and more would have done so at the last moment but could not get out their baggage. Prayers were said in the churches on Sunday for her safe passage.

On Monday morning two members of the House, Mr. McMullen of Va., and Mr. Granger of N. Y., while on their way to Washington, in an omnibus, got into a political dispute and having no time to think of Canada and Rifles, the former, with the consent of the latter commenced a set-to then and there. First blood for McMullen, and a separation by the other passengers. Lively times we live in.

On Tuesday, Charles Spencer, second mate of the ship Mary E. Balch, was brought before Commissioner Morton, on the charge of knocking down a boy of 17 years of age, named Ross, with a marling spike and afterwards throwing him into the sea. The man at the wheel, being an eye witness against him, and corroborative testimony from others, seem to warrant the hope of justice falling on his head. Decision not yet granted. Cruelty at sea is on the increase, and requires examples to arrest it.

The meeting of the American Association for the advancement of science, took place on Wednesday, at Albany. From the liberal offers of the Atlantic Steamship Companies, to give a certain number of free passages from Europe and back again to the men of science in the Old World, backed by the pressing invitations of two Albanians, sent for that purpose, a grand gathering was at first anticipated, but the meeting opens and of the literati none have crossed the briny deep.

From Kansas there are fresh reports of fighting. The town of Franklin inhabited by some twenty pro-slavery men was attacked on the night of the 12th inst., by about 200 Free State men, who succeeded in robbing the Postoffice, firing the houses, and carrying off the cannon of the town. From ten to seventeen persons are reported killed and wounded. The U. S. troops occupied the town the following day.

California seems about satiated with banishment and hanging from the Vigilance Committee. The Herald's correspondence of July 21st sends a lengthy letter that has more of water than fire about it. If credited, reaction is taking place everywhere. Fires and bankruptcy affecting the pockets of more persons than the interest they had in Casey, Cora and the long string of the banished, seem to have led to general reflection. The Vigilants don't know well where to leave off with safety for their own heads.

That correspondent says:

In the ranks of the opposition of the Committee are some of the most distinguished and worthy citizens of the State; men who before now, held back from public notice, and who come forward to condemn the movement that entails so many evils present and to come. * * * * * * *

There has been an unusual number of conflagrations throughout the State during the last fortnight, and one cannot help thinking that they have some connection with our present condition. Losses on the part of country merchants, revert on ours, and whether these are the work of incendiaries or not, they will have an injurious effect on the stability of many of our mercantile community. Yesterday the people were informed of the destruction of Nevada by the devouring element, making the third town blotted out of existence within a few weeks. Bankruptcy is so common that a day does not go over without one or more being added to the long list of insolvents. Since the twentieth of last May, not less than seven hundred thousand dollars in failures have occurred. These are sad evidences of the unsafe condition of affairs, and they are in the main attributed to the continued anomalous state of the country. The feeling of insecurity that from time to time prevailed, does not abate in any respect.

Judge Terry is still imprisoned and prohibited from holding intercourse with outsiders. It is expected he will be banished as Hopkins is in a fair way to recover.

The latest news from the South represent terrible damages by the late storm. The streets of New Orleans were literally overflowed and many of them presented the appearance of rivers.

Lake Pontchatrain rose rapidly, and its waters submerged the plantations along the Jackson Railroad for miles. At Last Island the water was five feet deep. The persons who were on it at the time of the overflow were mostly planters, who were in the habit of going there during the warm season. The steamer Star, it appears, was within four hundred yards of her destination, when she was driven ashore and wrecked. At the latest dates the clouds were lowering, and more rain was expected. The mails had been considerably disarranged by the storm.

Among the latest items of intelligence from Mexico are the passage of the article of the new constitution, guaranteeing the toleration of religion in the Republic, and the adoption by the Mexican government of the Ramsey route for an inter-oceanic railroad between the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific, at Acapulco. Col. Albert C. Ramsey is authorized to form the company and take charge of the works. There is to be an office in New York and one in Mexico.

The Cholera at last advices was committing fearful ravages at Porto Rico.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

ENGLAND.—The citizens of Norwich gave a banquet to Gen. Windham on the 2d inst., on his return from the Crimea.

An alarming accident had occurred at Goodwood races. A horse named Chevy Chase bolted from the track and sprang up a steep bank, where he lost his balance and rolled down among the other horses, five or six of whom fell over him. The jockeys were mostly severely injured, and the horses attacked each other with their teeth and heels. Chevy Chase had to be shot.

The Gazette publishes an order by the Queen, permitting persons decorated by the Emperor of the French to wear the insigina.

John Frost, the Chartist exile, who lately returned to England, announces that he is about to become a political lecturer, and travel on the Kossuth principle through the country to enlighten the darkness of his fellow Britishers.

Several Indians from Walpole Island had applied to the Mayor of London for the means of returning to their home, from which they had been led by a speculator named Baby.

FRANCE.—Reports are current that the Emperor is in a really critical state of health. His illness consists in a development of the malady of the spine, with which he has been long afflicted. He is able to attend to business, and is not in immediate danger. He was to return to Paris on the 5th or 6th inst., but would leave on the 10 or 11th, accompanied by the Empress, for Biawitz.

Marshal Pelissier and suite arrived at Marseilles on the 1st inst. On landing the Marshal found awaiting him a letter from the Emperor, conferring on him the title of Duke. All the French ships in port, as well as the British war steamer Caradoc, saluted the Marshal, who soon afterward landed to receive an address from the municipality of the city, and then departed for Plombieres to meet the Emperor.

SPAIN.—Saragossa has surrended to the government without fighting. The Queen's troops took possession of the city without resistance. The National Guard and militia were disbanded, and the municipality changed.

The correspondence from that country represent an awful state of confusion and intrigue in and around Isabella and O'Donnell. The end is not yet.

All the details that reach us of the proceedings at Barcelona concur in representing the fighting as desperate, and the conduct of the Queen's troops, after all resistance had ceased, as ferocious in the extreme. On the 24th, for instance, three days after the fighting had ceased in the city, two battalions of National Guards arriving to the assistance of the citizens were attacked in the plain by the Queen's cavalry and every man of them cut to pieces.

Seventeen individuals engaged in the insurrection at Barcelona have been shot; they were executed three by three.

AUSTRIA.—This despotic government affects alarm at the belligerent preparations of Sardinia, and has begged, it is reported, the French Government to represent to the latter that in order to preserve the tranquility of Europe, a change of its policy would be desirable. The French Government has, accordingly, made a communication of a confidential character to Sardinia, hinting that she might assume a less hostile attitude and tone toward Austria, without lessening the influence she exercises in Italy. The view which Sardinia will take of this monition remains to be seen.

LATEST.

The Africa arrived on Wednesday evening but brings no particular news. Russia having shown symptoms of backwardness in carrying out the Treaty of Paris—relating to the ratification of Kars and the isle of Serpents to Turkey. The English fleet had orders to remau in the Black Sea—Russia has caved in. Orders to the fleet have changed. It is rumored that King Bomba of Naples is coming to his senses is listening to the Western powers, and promises to behave better in future to the victims of his wrath. Lord John Russell is selling and letting out with the view of passing some length of time on the continent of Europe. Palmerston is expected to pay Louis Napoleon a visit shortly. Russia and France are so friendly that England is about making love to Austria to keep up "the balance of power"—How the apples swim!

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15, 1856.

Mr. Wilson introduced a bill to secure to actual settlers the benefits resulting from grants of lands for railroad purposes, reserving to them the alternate sections at $2 50 per acre.

The Senate made an amendment appropriating $650,000 for the Capitol Extension, and $500,000 for the continuation of the Washington Aqueduct.

Mr. Bayard's amendment, appropriating half a million of dollars for the contiuuation of the dome of the Capitol, was discussed and adopted.

The substitute of the House for the Senate's bill fixing the compensation of members of Congress was taken up.

Several Senators said it was a direct imposition to put two to three thousand dollars into the pocket of each member for past services while others argued that the present compensation does not enable them to pay the reasonable expenses of gentlemen. The substitute was adopted by 27 yeas to 12 nays. The consideration of the Civil bill was then resumed, and an appropriation of nearly a million dollars made to meet the requirements of the bill increasing the compensation of members.

Various amendments were acted on, and the bill passed.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed the Senate bill regulating diplomatic and consular salaries.

Fifty thousand copies of the report of Mr. Campbell of Ohio, for a modification of the tariff, was ordered to be printed.

The House passed a bill appropriating $200-000 for the establishment of a Naval Depot at Brunswick, Georgia.

The Senate bill regulating the pay of members was then taken up.

Mr. Orr offered a substitute. Instead of paying $2,500 per year he proposed $6,000 for the entire Congress, covering the present one, the mileage to remain the same as now, deductions to be made for voluntary absence, and the books for members to be paid for out of their compensation. He (Orr) said members were poorly paid, and if there was a desire to preserve anything like purity they must be placed beyond the reach of reasonable temptation.

Various ineffectual motions were made to lay the bill on the table, when the bill as amended by Mr. Orr passed by 100 against 98.

Much confusion prevailed throughout the proceedings, and occasional desperate efforts were made by crowds of members to have their several bills taken up under a suspension of the rules.

The presiding officer was frequently annoyed by a hundred voices crying, "Mr. Speaker," "Mr. Speaker," in order to secure an individual recognition, that they might move their respective measures.

The bill making appropriations for carrying the mail in ocean steamers was then considered.

An amendment was adopted in Committee authorizing notice to be given for the termination of the arrangement of the additional allowance for the transportation of the mails between New York and Liverpool in the Collins line.

Without disposing of the bill the House adjourned.

SENATE. Aug. 16

The Senate passed the House bill extending the time for Texas creditors to present their claims to the Treasury, and postponed till the third Monday in December, the House bill for the settlement of the claims of the officers of the Revolution, and the widows and orphans of those who died in service.

It was then resolved that when the Senate adjourns to day it be till Monday morning, at 9 o'clock, for the consideration only of appropriation bills, House bills, and those on which there may be disagreement between both branches.

Mr. Weller of Cal. submitted an amendment providing for the establishment of a semi-monthly overland mail to San Francisco for some point on the Mississippi River, the cost for the same not to exceed half a million per annum.

Mr. Iverson of Ga. said if California was going to cost the Union so much it would be as well to let California slide.

Mr. Weller replied, unles she had equal rights with the other States she would be compelled to slide.

The amendment was their adopted, and the bill passed.

Mr. Hunter of Virginia, from the Committee of Conference on the Civil Appropriation bill, reported that they were unable to agree, and he hoped the Senate would recede from all its amendments, except those in reference to Kansas, and for books to members.

Mr. Fish, of New York wanted the Senate to distinctly understand before voting on the question, that by insisting on the omission of the Kansas amendments, the loss of the bill was certain.

The other amendments were then receded from, but the Kansas and book amendments insisted upon.

The Post Route bill was then passed.

The Senate receded from its amendment striking out from the Legislative, Judicial and Executive bill the appropriation for the Kansas Legislature, and the bill was thus passed.

The Senate took up the Mail Steamer Appropriation bill.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed the bill making the usual appropriations for mail steam service, with an amendment, concurred in by 119 majority, providing for giving notice of the determination of the contract allowing additional compensation for the transportation of the mails between New York and Liverpool in the Collins line.

The House passed thirty-two Senate and private bills.

The Senate bill extending to dramatic authors the privilege of copyright was passed.

The bill introduced by Mr. Davis of Maryland, granting bounty lands to the crews of the private armed vessels who were engaged in the war with Great Britain was passed.

Great confusion prevailed in the proceedings, and messages were frequently interchanged between both Houses.

Many ineffectual motions were made to suspend the rules for particular objects.

Mr. Campbell of Ohio, from the Committee of Conference on the Army bill, reported that they were unable to agree, and asked to be discharged and another similar committee appointed.

The House then in accordance with the request of the Senate, appointed a second Committee of Conference on the Kansas amendment to the Army bill.

Mr. Cobb then made a report from the Committee on Conference, on the Legislative, Judicial and Executive Appropriation bill. He thought there would be a test vote on the disagreeing amendments to ascertain whether the House meant to maintain its position or lose the bill.

The House receded from the amendment for books to members, thus narrowing down the issue to Kansas matters.

The House receded, by four majority, from the proviso that "no money shall be drawn from the treasury till the persons charged with treason, or other offenses, for their connection with the Topeka Convention or under the enactments of the body claiming to be the Legislature, at Shawnee Mission, be released and the prosecutions abandoned."

The House also receded, by five majority, from the proviso that no part of the money appropriated shall be applied for the prosecution, punishment or detention of persons charged with treason or other political offenses.

The House insisted, by ten majority, on the amendment striking out the appropriation of $29,000 to defray the expenses of the next Kansas Legislature.

The House passed the bill for a steam revenue cutter at the port of New York.

Mr. Giddings from the Committee of Conference on the Army bill reported that they were unable to agree. He defended the "Republicans" from the charge that they desire to withhold the means of carrying on the Government. He would not vote to enforce bogus laws at the point of the bayonet.

Mr. Faulkner said that Gidding's arguments had been heretofore answered and his slanders refuted. The time for discussion was past, and time for action had come.

Mr, Campbell of Ohio contended that the House had yielded all it ought to yield, and the moment had arrived when they should assert their rights. There was nothing improper in the bill. The proviso merely provides that the army shall not be used by the President to enforce the alleged laws of Kansas. If the bill is defeated on the Senate rests the responsibility.

Mr. Faulkner moved that the House recede from the proviso.

Disagreed to by five majority.

At 4 1-2 o'clock on Sunday morning both Houses adjourned till 9 A. M., on Monday.

SENATE. August 18.

The Chair submitted a message from the President, in answer to the resolution calling for Colonel Fremont's accounts of his receipts and disbursements as an officer of the government.

The Senate passed several private bills.

Mr. Toombs, of Ga., from the Committee of conference on the Army bill, reported they were unable to agree. He moved that the Senate adhere to its disagreement and notify the House thereof. He thought there was no chance of an agreement, and was willing to let the consequences rest where they belong.

The word "insist" was substituted for adhere and the motion agreed to.

The Senate then agreed to extend the session till two o'clock—seven only voting in the negative.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Acker, elected to supply the vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr. Miller, of Missouri, was sworn in.

The Speaker laid before the House a letter from Mr. Richardson, of Illinois, saying he had resigned his seat.

Mr. Simmons, rising to a question of privilege, offered a resolution that a committee of five be appointed to investigate the assault on Mr. McMullen, this morning, and report their action to the House on the second Monday of December. The resolution was adopted, and the Speaker appointed Mr. Simmons, Mr. Smith of Virginia Mr. Pettit, and Mr. Fuller of Maine, as the committee to investigate the assault.

During the proceedings, messages between the two houses and the President, informed each, from time to time, of his approval of certain bills. The confusion occasionally was so great that it was next to impossible to understand precisely what was going on in the House. The galleries and lobbies were crowded, and were all excitement.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, from the Committee of Conference on the Army bill, reported they were unable to agree on the amendment restricting military operations in Kansas and disarming the militia there. He moved that the House further insist, and ask the Senate for a fourth Committee of Conference.

It was now half-past 11.

Mr. Campbell's motion was disagreed to, by 98 against 103.

Mr. Millson asked leave to offer a resolution (the Senate concurring), that the time for adjournment be extended two hours.

Objections were made, amidst great excitement.

Mr. Cobb, of Ga., moved for a suspension of the rules. He wished the majority to determine whether or not they would defeat the bill and let all their factious movements be exhibited to the country.

The House, at one minute to twelve o'clock refused to suspend the rules, by yeas 131, nays, 68—not two-thirds.

The bell was ringing twelve o'clock when Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, moved to take up the Senate resolution extending the time of adjournment in accordance with the joint resolution fixing the hour.

Members lingered in the hall, some lamenting and others rejoicing over the defeat of the army bill.

Destructive Conflagration in Pomeroy, Ohio—Loss $100,000.

Aug. 9, 1856.

About 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon a fire broke out on Front street, in the building occupied by William Mayhugh as a grocery and dwelling: from what source we cannot certainly say.

The wind was blowing up stream at the time, and the adjoining buildings being all frames and very dry, it was impossible to check the flames, and soon two entire squares were entirely consumed. Had not the wind charged providentially, nothing could have saved the remainder of the town.

Forty-two buildings were entirely destroyed and twenty-six families rendered houseless.

The Conflagration at Belize, Honduras.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 16 1856.

The conflagration at Belize, Honduras, heretofore reported, occurred on the 17th day of July. Nearly the whole north side of the town was laid in ashes. The bridge was partially burnt, and the large building on the south side, called the Usher House, destroyed. Over half a million dollars worth of property was consumed.

Affray between two Members of Congress.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18, 1856.

This morning, Messrs. McMullen, of Virginia and Granger, of New York, while riding to the Capitol, in an omnibus, got into a dispute about politics, when McMullen, seized and struck Granger in the eye.

The facts seem to be as follows:—The parties were riding in an omnibus, when a conversation arose on the Army bill proviso. McMullen said that the South would stand by the constitution. Mr. Granger replied that if they did not, a republican President would make them. Whereupon, McMullen said he would not be addressed in that way by a younger man. Granger replied—"I waive my age." McMullen then seized Granger round the neck, holding down his head, and struck him two blows, drawing blood under the eye and under the ear. They were then separated by Col. Chester, of the Philadelphia Inquirer. A committee of Investigation was appointed by the Speaker to report the facts to the House next session.

Fearful Railroad Accident.

PORTLAND Aug. 18, 1856.

On Saturday the Cumberland train of cars ran over a wagon, instantly killing two little girls, and fatally injuring a boy, all children of Mr. York, of Falmouth.

Another Railroad Accident.

BY the Philadelphia Bulletin of the 6th inst. we have received intelligence that a terrible accident, which had well nigh been attended with the most disastrous results, occurred on the Baltimore Railroad, two miles and a half below Gray's Ferry, the particulars of which are these:

The engine of the train, which was coming towards the city ran over two cows belonging to Charles Crothers, that were upon the track, and plunging into the earth in the bank, it stuck there a helpless wreck. The engine was much broken. The mail and baggage car was thrown over upon the opposite side of the track and broken completely to pieces.

There were five passenger cars in the train; these were driven into each other with great force, and all were more or less broken; three of them were completely splintered. The foremost passenger car was driven into the mail and baggage car, dashing in the rear of the latter and throwing the roof off.

It was at first thought that a great number of persons must inevitably be killed or badly wounded, and the utmost consternation existed for a time. But as soon as order could be restored and the passengers who were entangled in the wreck could be extricated, it was ascertained that no passenger had sustained any injury more serious than a few unimportant bruises.

The fireman had one leg fractured, the mail agent was badly bruised, and a man from South Camden, who was in the mail car with the agent, was considerably bruised. The passengers escaped almost without injury; they scattered over the fields near by, and were compelled to wait for some time before means could be procured to bring them on to the city.

Word was sent up to the city as soon as possible, and about one o'clock a train of cars was sent down to the scene of the disaster. Dr. Henry Y. Smith went down with the cars, and that gentleman and Dr. Harris of Baltimore attended to the wants of such as needed their services. Lieut. Gilbert and a detachment of the First Ward Police also repaired to the spot and assisted in clearing away the wreck and in getting the mails and the baggage together and upon the train. The latter did not reach the city until nearly daylight the following morning. There were probably one hundred and fifty passengers on the train, and the escape of the whole of them, under the circumstances, was almost a miracle.

[The Hon. G. A. Smith was a passenger by this train, but was fortunately, though unintentionally, left at a station about half an hour before the accident occurred. Being obliged to stay all night, he learned nothing of it till the next morning. He arrived in this city on Wednesday evening, and found, on sending for his trunk, that it had been completely broken to pieces. The above account was omitted last week.]—ED. MOR.

ROWDYISM OF THE THIRTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.—The following are some of the principal specimens of rowdyism affairs "of honor" which have distinguished this session of Congress:

First—Two attacks with a cane, same day, by the Hon. Mr. Rust, of Arkansas, upon Horace Greeley. Not much damage done. Greeley's head harder than it looks to be.

Second—Attack of Hon. William Smith, of Virginia, (called, for short, Extra Billy), upon Mr. Wallach, editor of the Washington Star.

Third.—The Herbert affair, at Willard's Hotel, in which the Hon. Mr. Herbert, of California, shot with a revolver, and killed upon the spot, the Irish waiter, Keating.

Fourth—The Colonel Lane and Douglas affair—no fight.

Fifth—The Sumner affair—in which the Hon. Mr. Brooks, of South Carolina, attacked with a gutta percha cane, the Hon. Mr. Sumner, in his seat in the Senate chamber, and left him weltering in his blood upon the floor. Recovery of Sumner doubtful.

Sixth—The Brooks and Gen. Wilson affair—no fight.

Seventh—The Brooks and Gen. Webb affair—no fight.

Eighth—The Brooks and Burlingame affair, in which Mr. Brooks declined to go to Canada to be shot at there and shot at all the way back again.

Ninth—The little omnibus flare-up between the Hon. Mr. McMullen and the Hon. Mr. Granger.

Talk of border ruffianism in Kansas! What else can we expect on the borders with such examples among our law-makers and law-breakers at Washington! We are progressing swimingly in the science of ruffianism; and if such are among the specimens of the Thirty-fourth Congress, what may we not expect from the thirty-fifth! Progress is the order of the day.—[N. Y. Herald, Aug. 19.

A Wonderful Magician.

A PARIS correspondent thus recounts the astonishing feats of a new hero of the world of magic: "The wonders of Signor Ragazzoni, whose approaching departure for London fills us with dismay, have been exhibited for the last time at the Tuileries. This wondrous magnetizer, called the 'man demon' in Italy, has produced more surprising effects in magnetism than have ever been witnessed before. The experiment of striking senseless was repeated the other night at St. Cloud, and filled the beholders with amazement. Signor Ragazzoni placed himself at one end of the long gallery of the palace, upon receiving the indication, in writing, of the person chosen from among the company to serve as an example of his power, outstretched his hand toward the victim, who instantly fell struck as with the lightning's blast stiff and senseless to the floor. So long as Ragazzoni so willed it did the patient remain thus stretched out before him, to all appearance dead—for it seems that this magnetizer is the first whose power has been strong enough to stop the pulsation of the heart. Another gesture, and the patient rises—wondering what has happened and why he is lying thus irreverently before imperial greatness on the ground. After the exhibition of these and other curious experiments, an Italian singer, just arrived from Florence, was introduced, under the auspices of the Princess Matilde, and and sang with great eclat the andante of Vaccai's bravora. 'Le Romeo.' The allegro followed, and the cantrice was, rushing from top to bottom of the cantatrice was, rushing from top to bottom of the clavier, sending out rockets and blazes of harmony, to the great delight and admiration of the company when the Emperor, who was seated at the further end of the room, made a sign to Ragazzoni, who was standing at a distance behind the singer: the 'man demon' stretched forth his hand towards her, when suddenly, as if some infernal power had seized, her in its grasp, the singer paused, with staring mouth and eyes wide open—the note, unfinished, died away: and, after two or three gulphing efforts, she gazed around terrified—then, falling forward on the piano, burst into tears. The audience, believing the effect to be produced by timidity, applauded, to the utmost, encouraging her by every means in their power; but to all the kind enquiries of the ladies, she could return no answer. Her voice was paralyzed, and all she could do was to point to her throat with a piteous expression of countenance, and shake her head in despair. At another sign from the Emperor, who had been much amused at the scene, Ragazzoni stretched forth his hand once more, and then the spell was unloosed—the poor cantatrice could thank, with all the volubility of her country, the courtly audience for the interest they had expressed, and give way to the pent-up words which came rushing in a torrent to her lips; but the emotion had been too violent; nothing could induce her to resume her cavatina, and the concluding notes of 'La tremenda necise spada' remain yet to be sung before we can judge of the power of her contralto notes, by the famous phrase of that air, which has been the stumbling-block of so many singers, and made the fortune of Giudita Grisi."

Dr. Kane and the Arctic Search.

WE published an article from the London papers relative to another expedition proposed by the Brtish Government to the Arctic regions, to make the final search for the remains or the official record of Sir Jonn Franklin and his party, of which traces have been found. Dr. Kane has by common consent, even among the English navigators themselves, been looked to as the head of the expedition, and has been tendered the command in the fullest and most flattering manner by the English Admiralty He has heretofore declined it; but the strong inducements held out in connection with lately renewed appeals from Lady Franklin, the officers of the British Geographical Society, and the Ministry, all combine toward inducing him to reconsider his answer, and it may be that he is destined to again venture upon the perilous enterprise of settling forever the geography of the North Pole, while he performs the last offices for the lost navigators.—[Washington Intelligencer, Aug. 16.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Curent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

HORACE E. DIMICK & CO.'S
GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM,
FOR SHOT GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, BOWIE KNIVES, AND SPORTING APPARATUS of every variety, is at
No. 42 Main Street, St. Louis, Mo., (at the Sign of the Deer in Windows.)
WE are now in receipt of our stock of Goods for the coming season, which enables us to say, that we have now in store, and for sale, the LARGEST and most COMPLETE assortment of Guns, Pistols, Sporting Apparatus, and Goods selected expressly for the arming of wagon trains, for crossing the plains, the markets of Santa Fe, Salt Lake, and Oregon, &c., that can be found in any HOUSE in the Western Country!
Among the most staple articles now on hand, can be found upwards of 2,000 Double and Single Shot Guns; 2,500 Muskets and United States Rifles, both new and second-hand, with flint or percussion locks; Colt's Revolvers, of all sizes, always on hand, in quantities to satisfy almost any demand, and at Eastern Prices. Also, all the most improved patterns of Revolvers and other Pistols now in use.
N. B.—We, the undersigned, being practical men in all matters appertaining to the arming and equipping of Emigrant and Merchant wagon trains for crossing the plains, renders our experience worthy of consultation, to make it the more easy for the emigrant and trader to supply themselves with the necessary articles, viz: Fire Arms, Fixed Amunition, Provisions and Groceries, of all kinds; Wagons, Tents, Horses, Mules, Oxen; in short, everything necessary for their comfort.
We also beg leave to call the attention of Eastern Hunting Parties, that wish to spend a few months on the plains, that we have all the necessary arms and equipments, and at prices as low as they can be furnished in any Eastern city.
We keep constantly on hand, (or make to order,) Target, Hunting, and Minnie Rifles, which we guarantee to be superior to any in the country.
We also keep constantly on hand the CELEBRATED SHARP'S PATENT RIFLE, which is the safest and most destructive weapon ever invented, for sale at the Manufacturer's prices, for cash.
Please call and examine for yourseles, as it is no trouble for us to answer questions, or show goods. Remember the place, No. 42 North Main street.

Poetry.

Lovely Zion.

SELECTED.

Zion! bright and fair, strong thy bulwarks are,
And thy towers majestic stand!
City of our God, now our blest abode
In this free and happy land.

CHORUS.

O Zion, dear Zion, lovely and fair,
Now arise and shine, for thy light has come;
In thy beautiful robes appear.

Now the isles of the sea look imploringly to thee
For the gospel's joyful sound!
And from heathen lands millions stretch their hands,
For the word which you have found.

O Zion, &c.

Let the word go forth to the south and north,
And thy light be seen afar,
Till the east and west with the rays are blessed,
Of the bright and morning star.

O Zion, &c.

Then the heavenly strain shall be heard again,
As it once o'er Judah ran,
And all nations join in the song divine—
Peace on earth, good-will to man.

O Zion, &c.

Newspapers and the Printing Press.

One of the peculiarities of the present age, and the main one, perhaps, by which its intellectual activities are quickened and the material progress of the world is so greatly promoted, is the enormous increase of newspapers, and particularly the remarkable growth of the editions of single newspapers. This has created a new power in civilized communities, a power so vast that, when properly directed in free countries, it is able to control even the action of government, and is the most potent engine which may be used either to arouse the popular mind to national danger, or to combine its elements against the mischiefs which affect social security and the happiness and well-being of mankind. The "power of the press" is a phrase frequently uttered, but very few entertain an adequate or definite idea of it. Its real power is not to be measured simply by the numbers of printed newspapers of various kinds and of different titles, which are daily issued from the press, each of which exercises an influence to an extent equal to its own particular circulation, ability and character, but it is in the enormous editions which a few newspapers attain, that this idea of the power of the press is most forcibly realized. In the latter class of newspapers are embraced the greatest combination and concentration of forces known in the intellectual world. A newspaper distributing daily its 60,000 copies, among all classes of readers, and impressing its own thoughts and feelings spontaneously and instantaneously upon as many thousand minds, proximate to each other, as in a large city like Philadelphia and New York, is a power of such magnitude that it is not surprising the public mind generally has no adequate conception of it, because it is so infinitely above and beyond any other popular medium of intelligence with which it may be compared. The orator who addresses a mass meeting is physically incapable of making himself heard by more than a few thousand persons at any one time, and the most popular divine is satisfied if his church is crowded with still fewer members. But the newspaper has no such limit to its auditory; its instructions may go simultaneously to a 100,000 readers, with nearly as much facility as to a 1000, restricted only by the amount of population which supplies readers, and the imperfect power of the mechanical agencies used to perform the vast amount of physical labor required to print the largest editions.

The power of the press, as implied and realized in newspapers with such editions as we have referred to, is entirely of modern growth. It is the result of a combination of causes co-existing and co-operative. Universal education, such as our system of popular instruction embraces, has created readers out of densely populated communities. Free institutions prevailing, have established free inquiry as necessary to maintain them. Our educational and our political establishments have, therefore, created new popular wants, and extended the desire and necessity for knowledge to the extremest circle of society where human intelligence exists. Consentaneously with these new wants have arisen the power and means of gratifying them. The intellectual activities of the age have vivified and enlarged the powers of the mind, and inspired its inventive faculties. The wants of an intelligent society suggested the penny, or cheap press, and was the means of its rapid and astonishing growth. With the increased editions of newspapers which grew out of the cheap press came the necessity for improvements in the mechanical agencies employed to print newspapers. Modern invention was equal to this requirement, and the mechanical genius of Hoe reached the highest principle within the grasp of inventive power or application. The "last fast" type revolving press, in which the rotary principle is so beautifully, simply and effectively applied, is the most perfect conception of mechanical adaptability to the requirements of a particular art that has ever been suggested. It does for newspapers what Fulton did for propulsion, and the mechanic arts in general, when he successfully applied steam to work the crank of an engine, and put into the hands of labor the unlimited power of a natural agent; it is the adoption of a leading principle of nature, the truest principle of automatic machinery, and upon which all the future improvements for the rapid multiplication of copies in the printing press must be based.

Since that period, about ten years ago, several of the cheap newspapers of New York have been compelled by their large editions, to procure four and six cylinder presses, and no leading newspaper can possibly do without them. Since seeing the operation in London of one of Hoe's six cylinder presses, the leading journal for England—the London Times—has just ordered of the Messrs. Hoe a ten cylinder "fast" press, its old machine, Applegath press, a very ingenious and meritorious invention, being found inadequate to print the daily edition of the Times. Causes in England similar to those in operation in this country, have contributed to largely increase the edition of that journal. The war has quickened the political life of the people, and the liberality of the Government recently in removing the stamp duty from newspapers, has placed it within the pecuniary ability of a greater portion of the population to indulge in the prevailing taste for newspaper information. The power of the press in England is now descending into masses of population where it has hitherto never been felt, because legislative restriction, the social condition and intelligence of the people, presented a barrier which it could not penetrate at first, but which is now rapidly dissolving in the dawn of a brighter intelligence, and the elevating influences of institutions becoming daily more liberalized and popular.—[Philadelphia Ledger, August 13.

The Russian Crown Diamonds.

The crown treasury of the Czars at Moscow contains precious stones of considerable amount. The two most considerable are diamonds, one the size of a pigeon's egg, cut in rose. The Russians have given it the name of the Orloff. The other has the form of an irregular prism, and is of the size and almost the length of a little finger; it bears the name of the Shah, and its history is as follows: it formerly belonged to the Sophis, and was one of the two enormous diamonds which ornamented the throne of Nadyr Shah, and which were designated by the Persians, by the names of "Sun of the Sea" and "Moon of the Mountains." When Nadyr was assassinated, his treasures were pillaged, and his precious stones were divided among a few soldiers, who carefully concealed them. An Armenian, of the name of Shafras, resided at that period at Bassora with his two brothers. One day an Affghan came to him and offered for sale the large diamond, the "Moon of the Mountains," as well as an emerald, a ruby of fabulous size, a sapphire of the finest water (called by the Persians, "The Eye of Allah",) and a number of other stones, for the whole of which he asked such a moderate sum that Shafras suspected that they had not been honestly come by, and told him to call again, as he had not the money in the house. The Affghan, fearing that Shafras was going to act treacherously towards him, left the place and could not again be found, although the three brothers made every search for him. Some years afterwards the elder brother met the man at Bagdad, who told him that he had just sold all his precious stones for 65,000 plasters and a pair of valuable horses. Shafras had the residence of the purchaser, who was a Jew, pointed out to him, and he went to him and offered him double the price he had given for them, but was refused. The three brothers then agreed to murder the Jew and rob him of his purchase, which they did, and on the following day poisoned the Affghan, and threw both the bodies into the river. A dispute soon after arose between the brothers as to the division of the spoil, which terminated in Shafras getting rid of his two brothers by poison, after which he fled to Constantinople, and thence to Holland, where he made known the riches he possessed, and offered them for sale to the different courts of Europe. Catherine II. proposed to buy the "Moon of the Mountains" only. Shafras was requested to come to Russia, and he was introduced to the court jeweller. The terms demanded by Shafras were, letters of nobility, a life annuity of 10,000 roubles, and 500,000 roubles, payable by equal installments in ten years. Count Panin, who was then Minister, delayed the settlement of the bargain as long as possible, and in the meantime had the Armenian led into such extravagances that he fell into debt, and when the Minister found that he had no means of paying what he owed, he abruptly broke off the negotiation. Shafras, according to the laws of the country, could not leave until his debts should be paid, and the court jeweller prepared to take advantage of his embarrassments, and intended that the diamond should fall into his hands for a fourth part of its value. Shafras, however, discovered the trap that had been laid for him, and disposing of some of the less valuable stones among his countrymen, paid his debts and disappeared. Agents were sent after him, who had even orders to assassinate and rob him, but he escaped them. Ten years after, while he was at Astraka, renewed offers were made to him, but he refused to enter into any negotiations, unless the bargain should be settled at Smyrna. Catharine accepted, and became possessor of the diamond for letters of nobility, 600,000 roubles, 170,000 paper roubles. Shafras not being able to return home, where he would have had to give an account of two homicides and two fratricides, fixed himself at Astrakan, where he married a countrywoman of his, and had seven daughters. One of his sons-in-law poisoned him for the sake of possessing his share of his property. The immense fortune which the murderer had acquired was divided, and soon spent by his successors, and several of the grand children of Shafras are now living at Astrakan in abject misery.

Beauty.

What is beauty, ladies and gentlemen? Can any of you define it, or say wherein consists its sweet charm?

Yes, cries the ardent lover, I worship perfect beauty. A tall stately form, face of untinged alabaster, hair black as night, and arranged with classic severity; and its potent charm is in the eyes, that beam like stars through midnight. Another lover, equally enthusiastic, says, beauty consists in a small delicate form, fair complexion through which the red blood is eloquent; a profusion of sunny brown curls, and liquid blue pleading eyes—and the goddess of every lover, may be ranged beside one, or the other of these models.

But we have learned to think that beauty is an attribute of the mind, or rather an exhalation through which we view those we love; and through which the young and ardent look upon all things and persons, except those who are for some reason offensive to them. Were it not so, how could so many persons be worshipped as beautiful. There are very few people who are really formed in the mould of beauty; and yet the number is less of those who have not been called beautiful. We used to imagine that there is a standard of beauty; a cast of form, features and complexion, so perfectly lovely, that every eye must at once acknowledge its excellence. We eagerly criticised those whom we heard spoken of as beauties, but we were always dissatisfied with the result. We heard faces spoken slightingly of that to our eyes were very beautiful; and we heard some called beautiful, who in our estimation were very plain. We knew a young girl of quiet manners and amiable disposition, whose figure was crooked, and face so very plain, that we often thought, it is a pity that one so gentle and good, should be so very repulsive in appearance. At length she was married to a man of mature age, good education, and judgement matured by extensive travel, in various countries; and we said, he had sense enough to appreciate goodness, despite its plain exterior. But when we heard him say, that he had seen many beautiful women of various nations, but never looked on one that wholly realized his ideal of beauty, until he saw Selina, we said, now we are sure that there is no standard of beauty, but that every eye invests its object, with the charms it seeks. Again, we were once astonished by hearing a man of eighty who was living with a third wife, appeal to a company of married men—whether any man ever married a woman, whom he did not consider handsome. We looked at his wife, one of the coarsest featured, dark, bearded women that ever lived. And as his auditors sustained his position, we let our eyes wander from one to another of the wives there present, and we have never since doubted that beauty is all in the eye that looks upon it. That there is no face so repulsive but that there is an eye formed to admire it. Every person therefore may be beautiful to one eye and heart, at least; and good nature will render a plain face beautiful to every one. We seldom deem our intimate friends ill-looking; the habitual kindness, and affectionate smile, render the face lovely. Who ever knew a young child to deem its mother other than beautiful? Are not affectionate brothers and sisters always handsome in each other's estimation? Did you ever see a woman neatly dressed according to her person and circumstances, with gentle eyes, or smiling lips, who appeared to you ugly or repulsive? Or did you ever discern beauty under a dirty or disorderly attire, or through a storm of angry invectives, frowns and unjust accusations? We are of opinion then, that correct taste, and gentle affectionate demeanor, constitute true beauty; and that the potent charm of beauty, is the spirit-light of love.—Woman's Advocate.

Cold.

For every mile that we leave the surface of our earth, the temperature falls 5 degrees. At forty-five miles distance from the globe we get beyond the atmosphere, and enter, strictly speaking, into the regions of space, whose temperature is 255 degrees below zero; and here cold reigns in all its power. Some idea of this intense cold may be formed by stating that the greatest cold observed in the Arctic Circle is from 40 to 90 degrees below zero; and here many surprising effects are produced. In the chemical laboratory, the greatest cold that we can produce is about 150 below zero. At this temperature, carbonic gas becomes a solid substance, like snow. If touched, it produces just the same effect on the skin as a red hot cinder; it blisters the finger like a burn. Quicksilver or mercury freezes at 40 degrees below zero; that is, 72 degrees below the temperature at which water freezes. The solid mercury may then be treated as other metals hammered into sheets, or made into spoons; such spoons would, however, melt in water as warm as ice. It is pretty certain that every liquid and gas that we are acquainted with would become solid if exposed to the cold of the regions of space. The gas that we light our streets with would appear like wax; oil would be really "as hard as a rock;" pure spirit, which we have never yet solidified, would appear like a rock of transparent crystal; hydrogen gas would become quite solid, and resemble a metal; we should be able to turn butter in a lathe like a piece of ivory; and the fragrant odors of flowers would have to be made hot before they would yield perfume. These are a few of the astonishing effects of cold.—Septimus Piesse.

German Silver.

As I know that very many of the readers of your valuable Journal who daily use German silver utensils, are neither able nor willing to plate them, I feel desirous of telling such, that by the simple process of washing spoons, &c., at once, instead of allowing them to remain soiled and dried, they will be always bright, clean and sweet. It is worth while to recollect and practise this; and also to observe that hot water fixes in stains, while cold or cool water, and a little soap, prevent them. If, by accident, an article should become tarnished, to rub it, while wet, with a pinch of fine salt, will restore the color better than any other remedy I have ever known. Finding that my silver was greatly abused by my servants, I put it away, and bought a set of German silver or Albata plate for common use; so that I speak from experience. After several years' wear, they still preserve the new look by no other management than the above.—[Chambers' Journal.

Nicknames.

It is said that the Turks—who, it is known, call the English Jonny, and consider the use of the word interrogatively, "Jonny!" as equivalent to "Are you an Englishman?"—style the French by the droll name of Didon, because is it the custom of the French soldiers, as it is of the lower classes in France generally, to be constantly crying after one another, "Eh! dis donc!" And when bono Turco wants to be particularly polite to a Gallic ally, he calls him gravely, "M. Didon." The French soldiers, on the other hand, it appears, call the Turks Banabas, because they say constantly to each other, Banaba, which signifies, "Look at me!" or "Pay attention!"

Recipe for Matrimonial Happiness.

Preserve the privacies of your house, marriage state, heart, from father, mother, sister, brother and all the world. You two, with God's help, build your own quiet world; every third or fourth one whom you draw into it with you, will form a party, and stand between you two. That should never be. Promise this to each other. Renew the vow at each temptation. Your souls will grow as it were, together, and at last they will become as one. Ah! if many a young pair had on their wedding-day, known this secret, how many marriages were happier than—alas!—they are!

Cure for Cholera Infantum.

The following is said to be the most efficacious remedy for the cure of this fatal and distressing disease among the children, which parents would do well to cut out for reference:

Take a pound of wheat flour, wrap it tightly in a cloth, and boil it for three hours. When cold, cut off the mucilage and a ball is left resembling chalk. This is to be given to the patient in boiled milk, mixed with a small quantity of good port wine. The milk must be pure, taken from swill fed cows. The remedy is a certain one and within the reach of all.

Another Railroad Accident.

An Engine, Tender and Baggage Car Thrown Into the Chemung River.

We are called upon again to record another railroad accident—one of the most narrow escapes from instantaneous death we have for years known. On Wednesday night, about 11.35, as the night express train from Dunkirk was about ten miles this side of Elmira, the engineer, named Peter Clow, discovered an unused telegraph pole lying directly across the track. He immediately blew the whistle to "break up," and was in the act of stopping the engine, but it was too late. The engine in an instant went over the pole, followed by the tender and baggage car, and in a moment more all three where whizing down an embankment, about 30 feet in height, into the Chemung River. As the engine struck the pole the couplings connecting the baggage to the passenger cars became suddenly loosed—thus, in all probability, saving the lives of scores of people, there being between 350 and 400 passengers. These cars were thrown in a zigzag course across the track, and might possibly have been thrown over the embankment, had it not been that the outer track was torn up some 200 feet or more, and the rails bent in various shapes.

The engineer and fireman were carried down with the engine under the water some six or eight feet, but fortunately both escaped with only wet skins, notwithstanding the fact that a whole tender full of heavy pine wood and half a car full of various kinds of baggage was thrown upon them. The baggage car caught its forward wheels in its descent, and now lies with but one end submerged in the river. The night being very dark, and most of the passengers asleep, some idea can be formed of the consternation that prevailed. The conductor, S. Bowles, was in the first passenger car at the time of the accident, and ran to render what assistance he could to the engineer and fireman, but was saved the trouble, as he found the two men scrambling out of the water and up the embankment as if for their dear lives. By this time the passenger cars were totally deserted, and upon inquiry, finding that none were killed or severely injured, the conductor despatched men with lanterns up and down the track to warn off all approaching trains. In the course of half an hour a freight train coming East arrived at the scene of the disaster. Two passenger cars were then procured from the town of Waverley, a few miles distant, and about 5 A. M. the passengers were brought on to New York.

Mr. Cowles, the engineer, informed the passengers that when about a mile from the scene of the accident he spied an individual walking quite fast. A number of the passengers, upon the receipt of this intelligence, went in search of the person, but all their efforts to find him proved fruitless, notwithstanding they scoured the track for nearly six and a half miles. It was conjectured by some of the passengers that the affair was a premeditated act, and surmised by others that the pole might possibly have been blown, during a high wind, across the track.

A Railroad Boiler Explosion—Two Persons Killed.

We learn from the Buffalo Express that the boiler of the engine of a freight train on the Buffalo and Erie Railroad exploded on the 14th inst., when the train had reached a point just east of the State line. The accident occurred just as the train had started after a stop of a few minutes. The engineer and fireman were instantly killed. The engineer stepped into his cab, and had his hand on the throttle; the fireman stood near him, and a brakeman was on the platform of the tender. The conductor says he was looking out for the centre of the train, when a sudden flash came, accompanied by a report, which was followed by confusion. The brakeman was also injured, but not dangerously. The body of the engineer was very much disfigured. The name of the engineer was Robert Willis. That of the fireman is not yet ascertained.

Smash up on the Central Railroad—One Hundred and Sixty Swine Slaughtered—Six Freight Cars Demolished.

An accident the result of miscalculation and want of perception, occurred at West Albany last evening, which, while it resulted in no personal injury to any one, caused great damage and loss. A freight train of 18 cars, coming east, was run into by another train, also coming this way, and with such headway that five or six cars were entirely demolished. One car contained swine, nearly all of which were terribly mangled. Some three or four, it is said have escaped injury, but they were so much frightened that they scampered off into the woods.

Five or six other cars, containing butter and produce of a perishable nature, were dovetailed together in such a manner that it is impossible to tell butter from cheese, and cheese from butter.

The hind cars of the foremost train, when the two trains come in collision, were piled one upon the other, in great confusion. The debris presents a sorry sight, as the produce is nearly all unfit for consumption. The swine were consigned to Mr. Potter, of Troy.

The accident, it is said, was caused by the miscalculation of the flag man, who, not thinking that the rear train was so near, did not get far enough around the curve to prevent a collision. The damage resulting cannot be less than $5,000 or $6,000.—[Albany Express, Aug. 22.

The Storm in Catskill and in the Mountains.

The fall of rain on Tuesday and Wednesday was enormous, we have had no such rain storm for many years in this vicinity. The Catskill creek rose some five feet higher than ever was known before, carrying away in its rage stores, dwellings, mills, tanneries, and everything that came within its reach.

In this village, E. Gilbert's store with its contents, and nearly all his lumber, was swept away by the flood. Loss about $3,000

Van Sternburgh & Bamrhyte's new ice-house, near the furnace, is a total wreck. Loss about $5,000.

Isaac Rouse's tannery is also completely destroyed.

Elliott Holbrook's brick kiln much damaged, and about 50 cords of wood swept away.

Tuzar Buckley lost about 100 tons of coal.

People's Ice Company's house is much damaged, and part of it completely down.

Kershaw & Co.'s new ice house at the Point, the whole end of the building was bursted out by the pressure of the ice within.

C. L. Beach & Co., and Pennfield, Day & Co., had some goods damaged in their ware-houses by getting wet; the doors were pressed open in their stores, and many goods swept away. Amount not known.

A. & B. Wiltse are damaged about $1,000.

The steamer Catskill broke loose from her fastenings, and was swept down the stream, but escaped without much damage. Four sloops that were lying at Johnson's dock broke loose; three of them went down the creek, and one is now lying high and dry near the road.

Aurtin & Austin's paper mill is damaged about $1,000. The water has destroyed many fields of corn, potatoes and buckwheat, on the flat lands in this vicinity.

At Leeds the woolen mills of Harris, Elting & Co., are partly carried away, together with the machinery; about half the factory building is gone, and full one third of all the machinery in the mill; even the engine and boilers were swept away. The total loss is about $20,000. The building and machinery were owned by John Farnum & Co., of Philadelphia. Harris & Elting lose from $6,000 to $8,000. The paper mill of W. R. Dingman is a total loss. The floom and nearly everything connected is gone; loss, about $5,000.

Cairo.—The dwelling house of Augustus Hill was swept away, with nearly all of his furniture and wearing apparel. The stone bridge at Cairo was also swept away.

The bridges at Cauterskill are both gone. The bridges on the mountain turnpike at Webber's, Britt's and Remsen's are also gone.

How Queen Elizabeth's Dinner was Served Up.

A gentleman entered the room bearing a rod, and along with him another, who had a table-cloth, which, after they had both kneeled down three times with the utmost veneration, he spread upon the table, and after kneeling again they both retired. Then came two others, one with the rod again, the other with a salt cellar, a plate, and bread; when they had kneeled as the others had done, and placed what was brought upon the table, they too retired with the same ceremonies performed by the first. At last came an unmarried lady (we are told that she was a countess,) and along with her a married one, bearing a tasting knife; the former was dressed in white silk, who, when she had prostrated herself three times in the most graceful manner, approached the table, and rubbed the plates with bread and salt with as much awe as if the Queen had been present. When they had waited there a little while the yeomen of the Guard entered bare headed, clothed in scarlet, with a golden rose upon their backs, bringing in at each turn a course of 24 dishes, served in plate, most of it gilt; these dishes were received by a gentleman in the same order they had brought, and placed upon the table, while the lady taster gave to each of the guards a mouthful to eat of a particular dish he had brought, for fear of any poison. During the time that the guard, which consisted of the tallest and stoutest men that can be found in all England, being carefully selected for this service, were bringing dinner, 12 trumpets and two kettle-drums made the hall ring for half-an-hour together; at the end of this ceremonial a number of unmarried ladies appeared, who, with peculiar solemnity, lifted the meat of the table, and conveyed it into the Queen's inner and more private chamber, where, after she had chosen for herself, the rest goes to the ladies of the court. The Queen dines and supa along with very few attendants, and it is very seldom that anybody, foreigner or native, is admitted at that time, and then only at the intercession of somebody of power.—Shakespere's England, by G. W. Thornburn.

Wild Beasts in India.—By a loose registry kept in the seven provinces of the Punjaub, from 1851 to 1854, it appears that the number of children that have been carried off by wild beasts amounts to 1,564, classified as follows: 1,106 by wolves, 334 by bears, and 124 by leoparda and chetahs. During the same period 919 wolves, 90 leopards, and 14 bears were destroyed. The Judicial Commissioner expresses his conviction that the above returns does not represent the actual extent of the evil.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, AUG. 30, 1856.

More Buncombe.

ON Monday the New York Herald furnishes his "new friends" with the following precious information:

"The Mormon, the organ of Brigham Young and the Latter Day Saints, and the champion of polygamy in this city, is strongly in favor of the nigger-driving democratic and Forney candidate for the Presidency."

We were wondering in what part of THE MORMON and at what time it had leaked out, that we had a preference for one or other of the presidential candidates, and couldn't recall to remembrance any more notice on our part of one than the others. We have published but little that either of them have said or that others have said about them, as in fact we have only seen a very little that we thought of sufficient importance to keep in remembrance; besides, Utah being at the door of the Union for admission, we considered it but justice to the candidates to give them their own time to say what was in them on that subject. While we were musing over what we wanted to do and how far we have been enabled to carry it into execution, the following note was handed us:

GREENFIELD, MASS., Aug. 21.

MR. TAYLOR.—Dear Sir: I cut the following from the Greenfield Gazette and Courier of August 18:

"The Mormons have a paper in New York, called The Mormon, which calls upon its friends in all the States to go against Fremont and the Republican party, and will in due time probably rally them to the support of the chief slavery ticket."

Being a reader of your paper and knowing the editor has charged you falsely, I have deemed it my duty to forward the above, as you might not otherwise see it. Yours, &c., J. C.

We thank our Greenfield friend for his desire to keep us posted, and we take this opportunity of inviting him and all other friends to send on all that outsiders publish about Utah and Mormonism, and we shall find time to look at their ravings.

We have never written one word "against Fremont and the republican party," nor one word in the "support of the chief slavery ticket." The Herald knows that quite as well as we do. Had we done so, he would not have confined his notice of our politics to four lines. Buncombe is too much in demand to have let a slice of that color pass; he would have supplied the words "strongly in favor" verbatim et literatim. The real truth is, the Herald, Tribune and the small fry in their leading strings have a work to perform, and they do their utmost to accomplish it, and are not over particular about the means. They know well there is no hatred so intense, malignant and fierce as that which rankles in the bosoms of the pious Gentiles against those whom they regard as innovators upon their time-honored customs and traditions; they therefore do their best to lash up the fury of every grandmother against the Mormons—and consequently, for balm to their lacerated souls, the enraged, maddened and infuriated bigots rush to the Black Republican platform that was framed with the view of such secessions. The Herald may call the foregoing "strongly in favor of the nigger democratic and Forney candidate for the Presidency," but we don't. When we have occasion to show up the shuffling, truckling of the Herald, it is by no means logical to conclude that we are in favor of the Tribune—or we should say, to be more marked in distinction, the Express, as the Tribune and Herald pass so easily now for chers frères. The cry of our adhesion to the Democratic candidate is simply a ruse de guerre, which may and probably will succeed in quickening the step of some nervous folks to the ballot-box; but men of sense perceive the game, and, by a natural feeling of reaction, lean to the injured side and take others with them.

We have nothing to apprehend from Fremont's occupation of the White House, but a good deal more to expect than some folks think. Needy politicians hasten to pile up their claims at the feet of anybody who has only even the "ghost of a chance" of sitting in the chair of Washington; but as we can live where others would starve, we are consequently never in such a hurry—furthermore the value of our claims is such that we have only to speak and the nation, if still possessed of one spark of gratitude and enough of sober leisure to exercise it, will hurra for the Mormon's loud and long enough to frighten the army of loafers that have got on the path to Washington before us.

Our eyes have glistened with delight when we have seen that the Colonel's friends in the States were awakening the nation to gratitude for pathfinding in the Rocky Mountains. We have anticipations of a big share of gratitude and glory when he enters the White House. Republican journals have evidently forgotten that the Mormons saved the life of the Pathfinder—and who knows they may by that same circumstance have saved the Union. The Colonel has surely not forgot when he and his expedition almost starved and utterly helpless came to the outside Mormon settlement in Iron County. 'Twas but the day after the expedition had purchased, for several blankets, the dog from Ammon the Utah Indian, to keep up exhausted nature an hour or two longer. It was only within twenty miles of that settlement that Mr. Fuller died in his saddle of sheer starvation, and as the Colonel and his comrades from extreme exhaustion had no strength left to bury him the Mormons went out and buried him decently and respectably. Talk of claims, if Bishop Tarlton Lewis, of Parowan, Iron county, U. T., the man who gathered up and furnished the expedition with means of existence while there, and when they left—all on credit, is not made, over the heads of all the other claiments, not even forgetting Kit Carson, Secretary of the Treasury, and feathered and painted Ammon not made Superintendent of Indian Affairs, when John C. Fremont enters the White House, then shall we think that the clamoring about Pathfinding has been nothing more than buncombe and fudge.

There have been so many pathfinders before John C. Fremont, that we little dreamed that either his services or ours, which by-the-by we have rendered to hundreds of would-be-gold diggers, would yet become such huge items in Uncle Sam's book of accounts. Surely our bread cast upon the waters is going to be seen before many days.

But what of the Black Republican Platform? Pshaw! that's nothing. The plank affecting Utah was only as we have already said designed to catch the very pious. Once in the White House that is an obsolete document: that don't disturb our claims. When we have Bishop Lewis and a good many more claiments like him along side of John C. Fremont in Washington, just watch if we don't clip the wings of some of these flying spouters that trouble the Union by their ungovernable tongues. We may say something further at a more convenient season.

Kansas.

THE Union is again deluged with reports of war in this unhappy Territory. The startling, uncertain announcements of the telegraph, the "information just received from a highly creditable and respectable gentleman from the seat of war, "the express that has just arrived" and the partizan tales of partizan papers are dancing in glorious confusion. What towns are taken or "not yet taken," and how many persons murdered, houses burned, or battles fought we can't say, and don't think anybody else can; one thing is, however, certain the Abolitionists have renewed the struggle, attacked the Pro-Slavery men and have, if report can be credited, succeeded in establishing Freedom in Kansas—Freedom to steal, plunder, burn, destroy and murder. The cries of the Abolitionists against the aggressive opperations of Southern and "Border Ruffians" are now heard in every direction against themselves. Report we never rely on, but at the "Appeal for Free Kansas" on Tuesday evening in the Broadway Tabernacle, that questionable gentleman Reeder said enough to confirm the worst that has been reported. Gen. Lane is the leader of the Abolition attacking forces whose proclamation is "no quarters will be given," "every Pro-Slavery man must be exterminated." The Pro-Slavery hosts are gathering in great numbers under the leadership of some daring and intrepid spirits. The "free fight" that Reeder says he wants is likely to be had very soon; we should recommend him to take part in it. The following is the last items:

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 26, 1856.

Advices from the border counties state that 2,500 men were ready to enter Kansas on the 22d inst.

Four hundred of Gen. Lane's men were on the north side of the Kansas river for the purpose of intercepting those who may go to the relief of Lecompton.

The Lexington Express of the 23d inst., says that Gen. Smith has gone to the defence of Lecompton with a large body of troops.

General Richardson, in command of a large body of Territorial militia, had gone to the northwestern part of the Territory to cut off the retreat of General Lane should he attempt to escape.

Ex-Gov. Reeder on Gov. Young and Utah.

ON Tuesday evening thousands of the curious were assembled in the Broadway Tabernacle to see and hear this great little man, notorious for many things. He began his one-sided story by alluding to the state of things in California, justifying the resort to revolution there, and passed on to Utah. Of that Territory and its government, the very antipodes of that over which Reeder was once Governor, he says:

"And, far off, to the west of the Rocky Mountains, we see a people who have proved themselves incapable of good self-government; who corrupt the stream of society in the most sacred family relations; who maintain a Governor of their own choice, in defiance of the President's authority, claiming to act by Divine right, and who turn away, baffle and defeat the officer sent to govern them."

We beg to inform Mr. Reeder that the above quotation from his speech, if a faithful report of what he said, lays him open to the charge of being a mean, contemptible, vile, calumniator of Gov. Young and the peaceful, law-abiding citizens of the Territory of Utah. We are sick of noticing the lying disposition of bankrupt politicians, and would-be public men. Those fire-brands that set men in deadly array against their fellow men by their calumniating libellous tongues. We have challenged every such person who has attacked Utah and its Governor to cite the act, the time, the place, to justify their accusations; but no one has replied. Oh! they would be glad to be able to do so.

For the information of Mr. Reeder—Gov. Young never granted legal certificates to members of a legislature, and turned round when it suited his interest, and declared the same legislature illegal; furthermore he never was dismissed by the government of the nation for illegal land speculation—perhaps Mr. Reeder knows some such person. Let the agitator refresh his memory before he speaks about Utah and its Governor again, and he'll find it to his advantage to keep a close mouth, as a comparison between men and Territories may not be so flattering.

Nicaragua.

IN spite of the influence springing from the recognition of Walker's government by President Pierce, the reappointment of Minister Wheeler near his government, and the abundant gas manufactured for him in New York and New Orleans, stern facts indicate that his star is presently waning. By the last mail from Nicaragua, the 9th inst., accounts of a very unfavorable character have reached this city.

San Salvador and Guatemala have sent a large body of troops to Leon under the command of Gen. Cabanano. By the previous mail ex-President Rivas was reported at Leon, with a considerable number of native troops and preparing for Walker's expected attack. Col. Salizar has been convicted of treason, to the new government and shot. Several natives on the same charge have shared the same fate at Masaya. Desertions from Walker's camp are numerous, one whole company is reported to have fled from his little army. It is likewise reported that Walker has revoked the exequator of the British Consul at Leon. It will take him some fine manœuvring to keep his head out of the loop.

The Southern States and Great Britain.

The Richmond Whig, speaking of the difficulties between the North and South, throws out some notions of annexing the Southern States to Great Britain:

"The time is not so remote but that it lingers in the memory and traditions of our people, when England was familiarly and endearingly spoken of as home. If the worst come to the worst—and we cannot find peace, justice or safety with our Yankee brethren—that time may come again!"

Reading the above reminded us of the prediction of a Great Prophet:—

"The Southern States shall be divided against the Northern States and the Southern States will call on other nations, even the nation of Great Britain," &c. Pearl of Great Price, p. 35.

It is possible that England from its avowed hostility to the principle of black slavery would repudiate the annexation, but facts justify the feeling in the South that England is indebted to her for cotton, and she reasonably may expect assistance in a dark day of confusion and general strife. Purse interest goes a great way in the politics of John Bull. Time reveals secrets.

Congress.

WE publish in this issue a more than ordinary share of Congressional matter, our object being to show our readers thereby the present disunion that exists between parties and the power of party strife to make otherwise honorable and intelligent men look like so many rowdies, battling for a share of the anticipated plunder. How long the North and South can continue to exist together in this fratricidal war heaven only knows, but one thing every body knows by experience that the house divided against itself cannot stand. Before the mighty earthquake comes that will scatter death on every side many must be the innocent victims of partizan strife. The army bill unpassed has forced President Pierce to order the discharge of men employed at the Springfield armory. The Superintendant of the Ordnance Office in writing to the foreman and employees there says:

"GENTLEMEN—I am compelled to communicate to you the purport of a circular which I have this day received from the Colonel of Ordnance. An extract therefrom is as follows:

ORDNANCE OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, Aug. 26, 1856.

SIR—In consequence of the failure of Congress thus far to make appropriations for the support of the army for the present fiscal year, and of the uncertainty of such appropriations being made, it becomes necessary to bring the expenditures at the armories, arsenals, and ordnance depots, within the available means of the department.

You will, therefore, on receipt of this, discharge all the workmen and other employees, not holding commissions from the President, whose pay, wages, or salaries are taken from the appropriation for the manufacture of arms at the national armories."

Sympathizing with the turned-out, he adds:

"You will permit me, gentlemen, to add that the War Department, as a whole, and that branch of it with which we are particularly connected, have to my personal knowledge used every honorable effort to arrest the calamity which so summary an arrest of the progress of our operations must entail upon the government, and to save you individually from the disappointment and loss which must accrue to you and those with whom you are connected."

The four principal officers and six watchmen are the only persons retained on the premises. Some journalists seem to think the above order a stroke of policy to cause outside pressure on the House. Be the results as they may, one thing is certain that many, many weeks were lost over the choice of a Speaker and there is quite as great a possibility of as many being lost over this army bill to justify the War office in taking this step. What a glorious union is ours! We can't help remarking that the most headstrong of the parties who labor to stop the wheels of government for their party purposes are the very men who prate so much about Utah's opposition to authority and incapacity for self-government!

Elder N. H. Felt.

AT the moment of going to press we have received a letter from Elder N. H. Felt, dated Missouri River, fifteen miles below St. Joseph, August 19th, by which we learn that he, together with President Richards, and the company with him for Utah, were all in good health. They anticipate being able to wind up all business and leave Florence on the 1st of September. We regret that time and space do not permit us to publish his letter entire.

A New Marshal for Utah.

WASHINGTON CITY, Aug. 27, 1856.

JOHN TAYLOR, Esq.—Dear Sir: The President has, by and with the consent of the Senate, appointed A. T. Haun, of Missouri, Marshal for the Territory of Utah.

Truly and respectfully yours,
JOHN M. BERNHISEL.

Judge W. J. Appleby.

The Judge arrived in this city on Thursday of last week, from Philadelphia, in tolerable health since his sea voyage—he delivered two discourses in our hall, last Sabbath and at present is engaged in assisting in the business of this office.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

The severe rain storm of last week caused an immense amount of damage. At Albany the piers were submerged and business brought to a stand still. The Central and other Railroads were much injured by the destruction of culverts and bridges, and the caving in of embankments, and in some localities the roads were quite impassible.

The Galveston News of the 14th inst. on the authority of an express just arrived says: We have the latest papers from Monterey, from which we learn that Northern Mexico is engulphed in another revolution against the general government. Gen. Vidaurri has issued a proclamation declaring the government under his control, "free and independent from the despotic powers of Mexico." Great rejoicing was produced, and many believe that the Northern States will unite with the revolutionists. Great excitement and alarm were at first produced, in consequence of the proclamation.

The citizens of New York, and the French residents have remitted to the sufferers by the late inundations in the South of France, 100,000 francs.

The young man John J. Fox, who was tried and convicted for the murder of John Henry, a wayward son of ex-Governor Henry of this city, in December last, near New Brunswick N. J., was executed on Wednesday, in the prison yard of New Brunswick. He maintained his innocency of that crime to the last, though no one can possibly conceive a shadow of doubt of his culpability. He was a young man of 22 years of age, left a young wife and infant child of two weeks old to bear the reproach of his name. "The wages of sin is death." Crime must be atoned for somewhere at some time or other.

On Thursday the 21st. the German Republicans had a "tremendous gathering" in the Tabernacle—"six thousand inside and outside." The same evening the Democrats held a "Mass ratification meeting of the National and State nominations"—"cannon, rockets and enthusiasm" with brilliant speeches on the late glorious union of the Hards and Softs marked the occasion, if we only could belive the folks, they seem very happy in the hopes of success. In the Tabernacle, Fremont is the winning horse, at old Tammany, "Buck" is a long way ahead.

A Vigilance Committee has suddenly started into existence at Mobile, Alabama. Messrs. Strickland & Upson, booksellers there, were reported to have sold some books exposing slavery. From an examination of their account books some 25 copies had one time been ordered and only one or two remained in the store. The inhabitants got irritated and wanted to do a good deal more than the committee, but from the assistance of the Mayor of the city and influential persons they were restrained, and the offending booksellers permitted to bolt privately.

It appears the mania for Vigilance Committees is increasing briskly. At St. Paul's, Minnesota, a public meeting has been held with the view to rid the city of noxious weeds—gamblers cut-throats and thieves.

From California there are advices up to the 5th inst. The Vigilance Committee, on the 29th of July, hung Joseph Hetherington for the murder of Dr. Sandall a few days previously; also a man named Brace, for a murder committed by him a year ago. Judge Terry was still kept a prisoner by the Committee. Mr. Hopkins, whom he stabbed, had recovered. Several attempts had been made to fire both San Francisco and Sacramento. The loss by the Sierra Nevada fire is set down at $2,000,000. Serious disturbances had occurred in different parts of the State between Americans and foreigners. The San Francisco papers say that three hundred recruits for Walker would leave in the next steamer for Nicaragua.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

Nothing of very great interest from Europe by the last mail. In England things are very dull. Her Majesty has been out on a cruise in the Channel, while all the world and his wife were at sea—bathing, or country house. The death of Dr. Buckland, Dean of Westminster, is announced. Madame Vestris died on the 9th inst. Miss Nightingale, the "angel of mercy" for the Eastern war, has returned home quietly, like an unassuming, virtuous lady. Louis Napoleon is back to Paris and Marshall Pelissier is dubbed Duke of the Malakoff.

Gen. La Marmora has, in the name of the King of Sardinia, invited Gen. Canrobert, who is at the Sardinian watering place, to visit Turin.

Correspondence from the Camp at Florence.

FLORENCE, N. T., Aug. 14, 1856.

ELDER J. TAYLOR—Dear Bro: Knowing you, as well as the Saints generally, feel a lively interest in the gathering of Israel, prompts me to write a few lines to let you know a little of the emigration at this point. Bro. T. Woolley intended writing to you, but I believe he has not done so, and as he has left here for Atchison to cross with Bishop A. O. Smoot's train, I will endeavor to give you the information he intended. The first, second, and third companies of independent emigrants, with their ox teams, left this camp with, in all, about 175 wagons, 1050 head of cattle, and 800 souls; they rolled out in right good spirits, rejoicing in their emancipation from gentile bondage, and with the flattering prospect of speedily testing the sweets of liberty in the bee-hive State of Deseret. Good health has universally prevailed in our midst, and I am happy to be able to state that very few deaths have to be recorded. We feel to acknowledge the hand of our God in preserving us from sickness and death. Among the 800, above referred to, were two deaths, both Danish brethren; they died from disease contracted in the old country. Elders Grant and Kimball, whom you appointed to purchase cattle for the emigration this season, have brought up several hundred head, and as far as I know or can learn have given general satisfaction in the discharge of their laborious duties.

The first and second companies of emigrants by hand carts, under the care of Captains Edmund Elsworth and David D. McArthur, assisted by Elders J. Oakley, William Butler, Truman Leonard, and S. W. Crandall, piloted by Elder Joseph France, who acted as agent and Commissary, arrived in Camp on the 17th of July, in fine health and spirits, (singing, as they came along, Elder J. D. S. McAllister's noted hand cart song—"Some must push and some must pull," &c.) One would not think that they had come from Iowa City, a long and rough journey of from 275 to 300 miles, except by their dust-stained garments and sunburned faces. My heart is gladdened as I write this, for methinks I see their merry countenances and buoyant step, and the strains of the hand cart song seems ringing in my ears like sweet music heard at eventide or in a dream. The first company had among its number the Birmingham Band, and though but young performers, they played really very well—far superior to anything to be found this far west. In giving you this discription of the feelings of the first companies, I give you in effect the feelings of the whole. This is the bright side of the picture, and is of those who may really be called Latter Day Saints; who have in continual remembrance the covenants they have made; who obey counsel, and may really be called Saints of the Most High God. There are others—for I have seen both sides of the picture—who are apt to forget the God who has delivered them from their gentile chains and task masters, and are allured by fine promises and high wages; others there are whose faith is not of that nature to stand the trials they are called upon to undergo, and back out from five to fifty in a company of 300; but the mirth of the one kind does not interfere with the gloom of the other; or, vice versa, each one does what suits him best. Those weak in the faith soon find those who will make them weaker; those who have backed out before them come up with their long faces, smooth words, and melancholy tone, prating away their words of comfort (?), and if they will only go away with them there is no end of the money and comfort they are going to have, and a team, ONLY NEXT SPRING, to ride in and go to the Valley. I will say that these apostates, who give their time, and horses, and wagons, to pick up the wavering, are right zealous, and I thought if they were only as zealous in assisting the widow and the orphan, instead of those who are already cared for, they would be driving a good team; but it is all right, the sort that are led away from the line of their duty by such spurious promises and oily tongues—well never mind that—are not wanted in the Valley, and by staying here they save themselves two journeys—one to Utah and one back. I am prolonging my letter longer than I had any idea of, and will shorten it as much as possible by just giving you dates of arrival and departure of companies; and as I have before said the companies are much alike; they do not need separate descriptions. The first hand cart company (Capt. Elsworth's) left the ground on Thursday, July 16th, went out three and a half miles and camped; on the 20th I went out to settle up with Capt. Elsworth, and saw them start off in good earnest to the tune of "Some must push," &c., (cant move without that.) The second company (Capt. D. D. McArthur's) started on July 24th, being the anniversary of the entry of the Pioneers into the Valley, and was rendered more memorable to that company from their exodus from winter quarters. The third company, under care of Capt. Edward Bunker, were nearly all Welshmen; they arrived on the 19th July, and set out on their journey across the plains on the 30th. The fourth company, Capt. J. G. Willie, President, assisted by Elders Atwood, Savage, Abinansen, Woodward, and Chislett, moved on the ground on the 11th August; part of the company moves out a mile or two to-day, and the remainder go on on Monday. The companies stay here longer than they otherwise would in consequence of their carts being unfit for their journey across the plains; some requiring new axles, and the whole of them having to have a piece of iron screwed on to prevent the wheel from wearing away the wood. Another company—perhaps of hand carts—have yet to arrive from Iowa City, in addition to the wagon companies. I will, if I have time and opportunity, give you an account of these companies. I will now conclude, by wishing you every good thing; and that you may be preserved in health and strength is the prayer of Yours truly, J. H. LATEY.

[FOR THE MORMON.

NEW YORK, August 25th, 1856.

MR. TAYLOR.—Dear Sir! As I have been frequently requested and importuned, since my arrival in the States, by my relatives and acquaintances residing in New Jersey and elsewhere, to give the particulars of the sickness and death of my beloved daughter Martha, which took place at Great Salt Lake City, Utah, I forward you the enclosed sketch and beg its insertion in your highly valuable paper. The following notice appeared in the Deseret News of November last:

[COMMUNICATED.]

DIED,

"In this city, at the residence of her father, on Sabbath morning, October 26th, 1855, after a short but severe illness of about forty hours, of acute inflammation of the stomach, MARTHA ANN, eldest daughter of William I. and Sarah B. Appleby, and consort of W. H. Bachelor, aged 20 years and 23 days.

"Few were her equals. Her kind and amiable disposition, her meek, humble, generous and sympathetic spirit, won the love, respect and esteem of all who knew her. Kind and affectionate to her brothers and sisters, obedient to her parents, always interested in their welfare—a faithful nurse in sickness—industrious, economical, watchful and prayerful—an honor to her parents, a blessing to the family, an ornament to society, a jewel and pearl above all price of a temporal nature to her husband. She lived her religion and died a saint.

"Daughter dear, thou art dead and gone,
Thy lovely form to earth's return'd,
But truth and light around thee shone—
And shall we then thy absence mourn?

Mourn? no! for thou art gone to rest—
Thy Saviour he has call'd thee home
To realms of bliss among the blest,
Where death and sorrow ne'er can come.

The gospel, it has made you free,
And so for ever will remain;
Resigned to heaven, we meekly say:
Our loss is your eternal gain.

O Lord! this lovely gem was lent
A short time with us to remain;
And then were holy angels sent,
And took her back to Thee again.

But oh! how truly was she loved,
(Her presence always did me cheer;)
As pure as angels from above,
So I did love my daughter dear.

Although her spirit's in the skies,
How hard it is with her to part;
Her image still's before my eyes,
And draws like cords around my heart.

I humbly bow, and kiss the rod,
And say: O Lord! thy will be done:
Give me thy grace, O righteous God,
Until my course on earth is run.

Then husband—kindred—mother—wife,
In gospel truths do persevere,
That we may gain eternal life,
And meet again our Martha dear.

[BY HER FATHER."

From her youth up she had been a lovely child—one on whom fond parents doted, (myself in particular,) because of her goodness and virtue; her calm, gentle and serene spirit produced a peaceful and heavenly influence on those around her, or with whom she associated. In company with her parents, brothers and sisters, she bid farewell to her native land, the home of her youth, the scenes of her childhood and associations, (New Jersey,) on the 7th day of April, 1849, for Utah, being a little over thirteen years of age. On her arrival at Philadelphia, together with three of her brothers, she was baptized, obeyed the gospel, and took upon her the name of Jesus, rejoiced in the truth and was happy. We pursued our journey—she bestowing all the care and attention to the welfare and comfort of the family her young, tender and guileless heart or age could impart. And when the direful pestilence (cholera of 1849) was so fatal on board the steamers on the Missouri River, and particularly the ill-fated steamers Monroe and Lightfoot, on which we were aboard, while day after day and night after night the destroyer laid his victims low by scores on board, with a sick mother and little brother, did she battle the destroyer, without fear or dread. Calm and collected she moved in that trying time amidst the dead and dying. The terror and amazement that seized and took possession of many of riper years, were unknown to her. Watchful and prayerful, she trusted in her God and really believed that He would protect her and the family, which was the case, not one of whom did the destroyer make his prey.

On the Plains, her care, industry and attention were the same, admired by all, and the beloved of the camp; and although a long tiresome journey, in storms, cold and snow, together with privations, over the Rocky Mountains, not a murmur or a sigh was heard to escape her lips. One day, in attempting to get out of the wagon while in motion, her clothing caught in the "tong-bolt" and threw her on the hard ground just before the front wheels of the wagon that her eldest brother had in charge. The front wheel passed over the extremity of her abdomen, when her brother rescued her before the hind wheel reached her. Every one that saw the accident expected she would be crushed to death, but she immediately got up and walked on, without any injury, not even lameness or a bruise, although the wagon was loaded with over a ton weight. When asked if she was hurt, she replied "No; the wheel passed over so light I scarce felt it;" and never experienced the slightest pain or inconvenience from the circumstance.

After our arrival at Great Salt Lake City she continued to grow in grace; her virtues and goodness expanded more and more as she bloomed into womanhood, admired by all who knew her or made her acquaintance—the comfort and joy of a father's heart, the faithful nurse and ministering angel around the bed of sickness at all times. In the beginning of April, 1855, she was married, and the following week her husband left on a mission, (to which he had previously been appointed,) some 300 miles distant, to preach the gospel to the Red Man—Flatheads and Bannacks—and teach them civilization. She continued to reside at home by my request. Soon after her husband left, though she had frequent correspondence with him, I observed there were times when she appeared to be cast down, under the impression, I believe, that she would never see her husband again in the flesh. Of this she had premonition, for she told two or three of her acquaintances she would never live to see him return, although enjoying her usual health at the time; the sequel will prove that her words were verified.

In the beginning of October last I was attacked with the billious fever, was very low, not expected to live, and continued so until the 24th of the same month, before I was able to sit up. During my sickness that beloved daughter scarcely left my room day or night, soothing, ministering and comforting me. At the midnight hour, when all nature was wrapt in slumbering silence, by the light of the flickering lamp could that beloved daughter and angel of mercy be seen sitting by the bedside of her sick father, bathing his burning temples, moistening his thirsty and parched lips, washing his face and hands, rubbing his limbs, endeavoring to ease and comfort him with all the anxiety and tender care of which the human heart is capable; and when a change for my restoration came, what joy and gratitude did her noble and generous heart portray.

About the 22d of October, when I began to recover, a sudden change took place in the weather, which produced very heavy colds, of which she partook, she having the yellow jaundice also; yet she kept about the house, slightly complaining of the cold and jaundice, to which we attributed her indisposition; she at the same time taking mild medicine, until Friday afternoon, (Oct. 26th,) when she was taken with violent vomiting, and continued at intervals until night, when she was put into a warm bath, which appeared to relieve her for a short period; but the vomiting re-commenced about two o'clock the next morning, (Saturday,) and all that could be done—medicine or otherwise—did not appear to have any effect. She soon became delerious, groaning and crying out in agony—sometimes calling the name of "Joseph," her little brother, and frequently the name of her father. Thus she continued, except at intervals, until about dusk of that day, when she appeared to fall into a kind of slumber, and continued in that situation until about midnight, (her violent vomiting having discontinued,) when she commenced groaning again at every breath, but did not appear to know any one; neither had she spoken since the evening before. She remained in this situation until about two o'clock Sabbath morning, when she opened her eyes, looked steadfastly up to heaven with the most sweet and angelic countenance, straightened herself in bed, placed her arms across her breast, closed her eyes, and her pure and holy spirit took its flight to the realms of eternal bliss, without a struggle or a groan.

Her violent vomiting and straining brought on a premature accouchment, and just previous to her death she was delivered of a full-formed female child of nearly seven months conception. It died about the time of its mother. We named the child Mary, and buried her in the same coffin with her mother.

On Sabbath scores of persons came from every direction of the city to see her, lovely in death, and truly mourned her loss. Indeed, the bereavement was nearly too much for me to bear up under in my weak and debilitated condition.

On Monday following a large concourse of persons attended her funeral. Presidents B. Young and Grant preached her funeral sermon at the house, bearing testimony to her worth, and imparted words of comfort and consolation to her parents and friends, for she had made her calling and election sure. Her remains were interred in G. S. L. City Cemetery.

It being impossible to inform her husband of her death, he knew nothing of the circumstance until the 29th day of November following, when an Indian came to where he was, and presented him with a notice some one had given the Indian concerning her death. As soon as he was informed of her death he returned to Salt Lake City, remained with us during the winter, and last spring returned again on his mission, mourning the loss of her he dearly loved, yet not in despair, for he knows he will meet her again, if faithful, where parting scenes will be no more.

I have thus been particular in giving a brief history of the sickness and death for the satisfaction of her relatives and friends in New Jersey and elsewhere. I have written the sentiments and feelings of a father's heart, but have not overrated her virtues.

Farewell, my dear and beloved daughter, once almost the entire pride and joy of my heart! your virtues, goodness, love, and kindness are engraved upon the tablets of my heart! your memory will live and be cherished there while your father's heart continues to beat, or reason and intellect sits upon their throne. You have paid the debt of nature—fallen asleep in the arms of your Redeemer, and gone down to your grave in peace, there to await the summing of the First Resurrection, when thou shalt come forth again, clothed with power, immortality, and eternal life! Thou hast obeyed the gospel of truth, lived thy religion, died a saint, and among the mighty and loved ones is thy spirit mingling in a higher and nobler sphere. We mourn not as those that have no hope. We know we shall meet thee again, if we are faithful, in a celestial world, where parting scenes will be no more; where sorrow, pain, and death will be unknown, and sin have no admittance; where tears are wiped from every eye, grief from every bosom, and eternal life blooming in one continual and eternal spring. Farewell.

Yours in the Gospel,
WM. J. APPLEBY.

The Congressional Compromise Act.

An Act to Regulate the Compensation of Members of Congress.

BE it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That the compensation of each Senator, Representative and delegate in Congress, shall be $6,000 for each Congress, and mileage, as now provided by law, for two sessions only, to be paid in manner following, to wit: On the first day of each regular session, each Senator, Representative and Delegate shall receive his mileage for one session; and on the first day of each month thereafter, during such session, compensation at the rate of $3,000 per annum during the continuance of such session; and at the end of such session; he shall receive the residue of his salary due to him at such time, at the rate aforesaid, still unpaid; and at the beginning of the second regular session of the Congress, each Senator, Representative and Delegate shall receive his mileage for such second session, and monthly, during such session, compensation at the rate of $3,000 per annum, till the 4th day of March, terminating the Congress: and on that day each Senator, Representative and Delegate shall be entitled to receive any balance of $6,000 not theretofore paid in said monthly installments as above directed.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the President of the Senate, pro tempore, when there shall be no Vice President, or the Vice President shall have become President of the United States, shall receive the compensation provided by law for the Vice President; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, shall receive double the compensation above provided for Representatives, payable at the times and in the manner above provided for payment of the compensation of Representatives.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That this law shall apply to the present Congress, and each Senator, Representative and Delegate shall be entitled to receive the difference only between their per diem compensation already received under the law now in force and the compensation provided by this act.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That in the event of the death of any Senator, Representative or Delegate, prior to the commencement of the first session of the Congress, he shall be neither entitled to mileage or compensation; and in the event of death after the commencement of any session, his Representatives shall be entitled to receive so much of his compensation, computed at the rate of $3,000 per annum, as he may not have received, and any mileage that may have actually accrued, and be due and unpaid.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That if any books shall hereafter be ordered to and received by members of Congress, by a resolution of either or both houses of Congress, the price paid for the same shall be deducted from the compensation hereinbefore provided for such members: Provided, however, that this shall not extend to books ordered to be printed by the public printer during the Congress for which the said member shall have been elected.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of every Sergeant-at-Arms of the House and Secretary of the Senate, respectively, to deduct from the monthly payments of members, as herein provided for, the amount of his compensation for each day that such member shall be absent from the House or Senate, respectively, unless such Representative, Senator or Delegate shall assign as the reason for such absence the sickness of himself or of some member of his family.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with or repugnant to the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

RETURN OF THE GREAT COMET.—The astronomer, M. Babinet, member of the Academy of Sciences, and M. Bomme, of Middleburg, Holland, have been making some investigations in respect to the return of the great comet which appeared in the years 104, 392, 682, 975, 1264, and 1556. The result gives the arrival of this rare visitor in August 1858, with an uncertainty of two years, more or less.

Of this number, as the table shows, 2012 are P. E. Fund Passengers, of whom 333 were ordered out by their friends in Utah, also 788 Members, of many years standing in the Church, have been forwarded to Utah under the P. E. F. Co's arrangement, and 28 are Elders returning home from missions. We have not the means of ascertaining definitely, but the approximate number of those who started to go through to Utah on their own means is 385, making the total, of those who started from here with the intention of going through to the Valley this season, about 2397, which will leave 1998 who have located for the present in various parts of the United States, in order to obtain means to complete their journey whenever circumstances will permit. The numbers of natives of the various countries may be classified as follows.—From the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; English, 2611; Scotch, 367; Welsh, 667, Irish, 54; Americans, 19; from the French Mission (Channel Islands), 9. The total number from the Scandinavian Mission is 615, of which there are, Danes, 502; Swedes, 67; Norwegians, 46. The total number from the Swiss and Italian Mission is 50, viz., from the Swiss Cantons, 19; from Piedmont, Italy, 31. There are also 2 from the East India Mission, and 1 from Germany—making a grand total, as per table, of 4395 souls.—[Millennial Star Aug. 22.

Thirty-Fourth Congress.--Extra Session.

SENATE.

Washington, Aug. 21, 1856.

Thirty-eight Senators were present.

The President's proclamation was read.

On motion of Mr. Hunter, of Va., the Secretary of the Senate was ordered to acquaint the House that a quorum of the Senate had assembled, and were ready to proceed to business.

The President's message was then received and read. It is as follows:

Fellow Citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

In consequence of the failure of Congress at its recent session to make provision for the support of the army, it became imperatively incumbent upon me to exercise the power which the constitution confers on the Executive for extraordinary occasions, and promptly to convene the two houses in order to afford them an opportunity of reconsidering a subject of such vital interest to the peace and welfare of the Union. With the exception of a partial authority vested by law in the Secretary of War to contract for a supply of clothing and subsistence, the army is wholly dependent on the appropriations annually made by Congress. The omission of Congress to act in this respect before the termination of the fiscal year had already caused embarrassments to the service, which were overcome only in expectation of appropriations before the close of the present month. If the requisite funds be not speedily provided, the Executive will no longer be able to furnish for transportation the equipments and munitions which are essential to the effectiveness of a military force in the field. With no provision for the pay of the troops, the contracts of enlistment would be broken, and the army must in effect be disbanded—the consequences of which would be so disastrous as to demand all possible efforts to avert the calamity. It is not merely that the officers and enlisted men of the army are to be thus deprived of the pay and emoluments to which they are entitled by standing laws, but that the construction of arms at the public armories, the repair and construction of ordnance at the arsenals, and the manufacture of military clothing and camp equipage must be discontinued, and the persons connected with this branch of the public service thus be deprived suddenly of the employment essential to their subsistence. Nor is it merely the waste consequent on the forced abandonment of the seaboard fortifications and of the interior military posts and other establishments, and the enormous expense of recruiting and reorganizing the army and again distributing it over the vast regions which it now occupies. These are evils which may, it is true, be repaired hereafter by taxes imposed on the country, but other evils are involved, which no expenditure, however lavish, could remedy, in comparison with which local and personal injuries or interests sink into insignificance. A great part of the army is situated on the remote frontier or in the deserts and mountains of the interior. To discharge large bodies of men in such places, without the means of regaining their homes, and where few, if any, could obtain subsistence by honest industry, would be to subject them to suffering and temptation, with disregard of justice and right most derogatory to the government. In the Territories of Washington and Oregon numerous bands of Indians are in arms, and are waging a war of extermination against the white inhabitants; and although our troops are actively carrying on the campaign, we have no intelligence as yet of a successful result. On the Western plains, notwithstanding the imposing display of military force recently made there, and the chastisement inflicted on the rebellious tribes, others, far from being dismayed, have manifested hostile intentions, and been guilty of outrages which, if not designed to provoke a conflict, serve to show that the apprehension of it is insufficient wholly to restrain their vicious propensities. A strong force in the State of Texas has produced the temporary suspension of hostilities there; but in New Mexico incessant exertions on the part of the troops are required to keep in check the marauding tribes which infest that Territory. The hostile Indians have not been removed from the State of Florida, and the withdrawal of the troops therefrom, leaving that object unaccomplished, would be most injurious to the inhabitants, and a breach of the positive engagement of the general government.

To refuse supplies to the army, therefore, is to compel the complete cessation of all its operations, and practical disbandment, and thus to invite hordes of predatory savages from the Western plains and Rocky Mountains to spread devastation along a frontier of more than four thousand miles in extent, and to deliver up the sparse population of a vast tract of country to rapine and murder. Such, in substance, would be the direct and immediate effects of the refusal of Congress, for the first time in the history of the government, to grant supplies: the inevitable waste of millions of public treasure—the infliction of extreme wrong upon all persons connected with the military establishment by service, employment or contracts—the recall of our forces from the field—the fearful sacrifice of life, and incalculable destruction of property on the remote frontiers—the striking of our national flag on the battlements of the fortresses which defend our maritime cities against foreign invasion—the violation of the public honor and good faith, and the discredit of the United States in the eyes of the civilized world.

I confidently trust that these considerations, and others appertaining to the domestic peace of the country, which cannot fail to suggest themselves to every patriotic mind, will, on reflection, be duly appreciated by both houses of Congress, and induce the enactment of the requisite provisions of law for the support of the army of the United States.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

Washington, August 21, 1856.

Mr. Hunter, of Va., submitted a resolution suspending so much of the twenty-first rules as requires six days to elapse from the commencement of a session before resuming the consideration of any bills, &c., remaining undertermined at the close of the last session, so far as it affects the Army Appropriation bill.

Mr. Seward, of N. Y., said as he had no desire to expedite the passage of that bill in such a way as to interfere with the free action of the House, he should call for the yeas and nays on the resolution, and would remark that he had paired off with Mr. Toombs, and should not, therefore, vote.

The resolution was then passed, by 35 against 6.

A resolution was adopted continuing the standing committee of last session.

The House resolution providing for the signature of such bills as failed to receive the signature of the presiding officer of each house or the President of the United States was concurred in. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Speaker announced that the House had assembled in pursuance of the President's proclamation, which was read.

The roll was then called, and 179 members answered to their names.

On motion of Mr. Phelps, of Mo., it was ordered that the Senate be informed that a quorum was present, and that the House was ready to proceed to business.

On motion of Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, the Speaker was directed to appoint standing committees similar to those of the late session.

A joint committee was appointed by both houses to wait on the President and inform him that each had assembled and were ready for any communication he might be pleased to make.

Mr. Smith, of Va., made an ineffectual effort to introduce a resolution looking to the employment of Mr. Vanderbilt's proposed line of steamers between New York and ports of Europe, for carrying the mails.

The proposition was objected to, and several members expressed the hope that no new business would be introduced.

The President's message was then received and read.

On motion of Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, it was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. Phelps wished to introduce an Army bill without a Kansas proviso.

Mr. Washburn, of Me., objected.

The House here took a recess for one hour.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, on the re-assembling of the House, asked leave to report the same bill which died on Monday in consequence of the disagreeing amendments of both houses.

Mr. Stephens, of Ga., would not yield his consent to report a bill with the Kansas restrictive proviso in it.

Mr. Campbell—If the House wish to vote it in, on them rests the responsibility.

Mr. Stephens—I want a proper Army bill.

Mr. Cobb, of Ga., was anxious to concur with the Senate on suspending the twenty-first rule. The House could then proceed to vote at once on the contested question.

After some further conversation Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, reported the bill, when the Committee on Ways and Means called for reports in regular order.

Mr. Orr, of S. C., raised the question that the proviso proposed to exchange existing laws, and therefore was not germain to the bill.

The Speaker overruled the point, and Mr. Orr's appeal from his decision was tabled by 95 against 79.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, by a vote of 101 against 75.

Mr. Campbell made an ineffectual attempt to have a substitute for the bill adopted; containing a section, declaring the laws of the Kansas Legislature void, and providing for the reorganization of the Territory by a new election, as entirely as if no effort to that end had heretofore been made.

The bill, precisely the same as when lost on Monday, including the Kansas restrictive proviso, was reported from the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, and passed by 93 against 85. Adjourned.

SENATE. Aug. 22

The Army bill was received from the House.

Mr. Hunter, of Va, said there was no necessity for its reference, as it was precisely the same as that lost on Monday. It was not his purpose to enter into a debate, and he thought the question at issue should be decided to-day. He moved to strike out the Kansas restrictive proviso.

Mr. Seward, of N.Y., agreed with Mr. Hunter that the subject was perfectly understood. He had heretofore said what he wanted to say, and contented himself by demanding the yeas and nays, stating that he had paired off with Mr. Toombs.

The motion to strike out the proviso prevailed, by 35 against 7, and the bill was passed.

A message was received from the House stating that they "adhere."

Mr. Hunter thought under the circumstances the bill should be allowed to fall. He moved that the Senate "adhere" also.

Mr. Bell, Tenn., said the House had taken a very unusual, unparliamentary and inexcusable course. The proviso, after all, was but an abstract idea, since Congress could never control the Executive in the discharge of his duties. He hoped the bill would not be allowed to fail, and suggested asking a Committe of Conference.

Mr. Hunter replied, if he believed a Committee of Conference could agree, he would consent, but the action of the two houses on the former bill, and the vote of the House of Representatives to adhere now satisfied him that there was no hope of passing the bill in a proper form. He would preserve the constitution, and let appropriation bills fail if necessary.

Mr. Cass, of Mich., regarded this as the most solemn crisis that had ever occurred in the history of the country, and he expressed the hope that the people would awake to the sense of their danger before it was too late.

Mr. Wade said instead of the House trying to dictate to the Senate, the Senate were in fact trying to dictate to the House. He urged the propriety of receding, so as to pass the bills.

The Senate without coming to a conclusion on the subject, then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

On motion of Mr. Kelly, of N.Y., a resolution was adopted requesting the Speaker to draw his warrant in favor of Thomas Childs, for mileage and per diem for the last session, during which he had not appeared in the House in consequence of illness.

A message was received from the Senate relative to its action on the Army bill.

The question was taken on striking out, and was lost by yeas 94, nays 96.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, moved to re-consider the vote, and lay that motion on the table.

Carried by two majority.

A message was then received from the Senate with reference to the Army bill.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, moved that the House insist on their proviso and ask a Committee of Conference.

Mr. Cobb, of Ga., allow me to make a motion, that the House recede and regard this as a test question.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, I will not yield my point at this stage of the game.

Mr. Campbell's motion was lost by three majority.

Mr. Cobb, of Ga., moved that the House recede.

Motion lost by 44 against 96.

Mr. Washburn, of Me., moved the House adhere to its disagreement.

Mr. Orr, of S.C.—What will be the effect of adhering?

Cries of "Order," "Order."

The Speaker—Debate is not admissable.

Mr. Cobb, of Ga.—You reject the bill.

Mr. Washburn's motion was agreed to by 97 against 93.

Mr. Washburn, of Me., moved to reconsider the vote by which the House adhered to its proviso, and to lay that motion on the table.

Motion carried by one majority.

Mr. Sherman, of Ohio, asked leave to offer a resolution for an adjournment, sine die, at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Milson, of Va., made an ineffectual effort to have reconsidered the vote by which the House refused to insist on the Kansas amendment, and asked a Committee of Conference.

Mr. Orr, during the proceedings, said the House would doubtless, to-morrow, be under the necessity of proceeding with general legislation.

Repeated unsuccessful motions were made to adjourn, when the House took a short recess to await the result of the Senate's proceedings.

On reassembling, the Senate having come to no conclusion the House adjourned.

SENATE. Aug. 23.

Mr. Jones, of Tenn., rose to a personal explanation. He read an extract from the Philadelphia Ledger containing a sketch of a speech made by Mr. Trumbull in that city, in which he (Jones) was represented as being a man who had never told a political truth in his life. He had been informed by Mr. Trumbull that he had been misreported, and he (Jones) therefore took this opportunity to have the correction made public.

Mr. Trumbull, of Ill., stated that he had used no such language in relation to Mr. Jones.

The Army bill was called up.

Mr. Clayton, of Del., said he was bound by no party ties, and had no other object for remaining in public life but the good of his country. He deeply deplored that the House had resolved to adhere to their amendment, as thereby the Senate was driven to the necessity of either receding or adhering. At a proper time he would introduce a resolution for the appointment of a committee of seven members on the part of the Senate and eleven on the part of the House, to take into consideration the disagreeing votes of the two houses on the Army bill, with the view of arranging the details and settling the differences between them, and report to their respective branches. The Senate had agreed to adhere to their amendment striking out the Kansas restriction, but, notwithstanding, he believed his proposition could be made acceptable. It would compromise the honor of neither, and might save the army a disastrous blow, preserve peace in the Territory where now civil war prevails, and perhaps preserve the Union.

Mr. Hunter, of Va., said no such resolution was now in order. By the Senate's adhering this bill would now be lost, but that which failed on Monday was now on the table of the House and might be taken up. To adhere would merely be to express an opinion relative to this bill. He understood, furthermore, that it was probable that a new bill would be introduced into the House by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. Toucey, of Conn., spoke in strong terms of condemnation of the action of the House in sending to the Senate an army bill declaring they would stop the wheels of Government unless the Senate would yield their opinion and concur in the legislation of the House. He regarded this conduct as not simply unconstitutional, but in the highest degree revolutionary. If the House could enforce obnoxious legislation and coerce the Senate upon one subject they might upon another. They might refuse appropriations for the Judiciary or Executive, unless the action of those departments of Government were satisfactory to them.

Mr. Benjamin, of La., said the House have nothing to act upon, and expressed the hope that by general consent the Senate would take a vote first and let discussion go on afterward.

The motion to adhere was then agreed to by—yeas 35; nays 9.

Mr. Clayton then submitted the resolution of which he had given notice.

Mr. Seward objected.

The Chair said the resolution must lie over one day.

Mr. Clayton earnestly appealed to Mr. Seward to withdraw his objection and allow the matter to be discussed. This, he said, was an alarming crisis, and all possible means should be used to avert the loss of the army appropriations.

Mr. Seward said he was satisfied his course was right, and he therefore persisted in his objection.

No further business coming up, the Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, in view of the news from Kansas, and the differences between the two Houses, asked unanimous consent to offer a resolution that a Select Committee of thirteen be appointed by the Speaker to confer with a similar one of the Senate, to consider affairs in Kansas, and that they report by bill or otherwise. Objected to.

Mr. Campbell then gave notice that he would move to suspend the rules on Monday for its introduction.

Mr. Mace of Ind., made an ineffectual motion to proceed to the election of a chaplain.

Mr. Matteson, of N. Y., offered a preamble and resolution, setting forth that the joint resolution on the annexation of Texas is irreparable by either of the contracting parties without the consent of the other, that it is not repealed by the Kansas-Nebraska act, and therefore slavery, except for crime, in all that part of the former province of Louisiana north of 36 degrees 30 minutes is and remains prohibited; farther asserting that the resolution on the annexation of Texas, besides being a compact with Texas, is a compromise between the free and slave States, and that any attempt for the admission of a greater number of slave States north of that latitude is a violation of said compromise and a direct attack upon the harmony and stability of the Union.

Mr. Dunn, of Ind., moved that the preamble and resolutions be laid on the table.

Motion agreed to by 101 against 83.

The House, on motion of Mr. Cobb, of Ga., concurred in the resolution of the Senate, suspending the 21st rules, in order that the former army bill might be taken from the table.

Mr. Cobb, of Ga., moved the House recede from the Kansas proviso.

Motion negatived by 97 against 100.

Mr. Washburn, of Maine, moved that the House adhere.

Motion agreed to by 98 against 97. Adjourned.

SENATE. August 25.

Mr. Weller, of Cal., gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill to abrogate certain laws enected by the Legislature of Kansas.

It is the same as the eighteenth section of Senate Kansas bill, abolishing test oaths, providing for freedom of speech and the press, and for the security of the people in person and property, in accordance with the constitution, &c., &c.

A message was received from the House announcing the death of the Hon. James Meacham, of Vermont.

Mr. Foote, of Vt., dwelt with much eloquence on the learning and public and private usefulness of the deceased, who was removed hence at the age of forty-six years. He traced him from the time that he was a poor orphan boy in a cabinet maker's shop, up to the high position that he occupied at the time of his decease.

Mr. Douglas, of Ill., said he was born in the same county with Mr. Meacham, and was acquainted with him in early life. He bore testimony to his honesty of purpose and elevated character.

The usual resolutions of respect were adopted, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Clingman, of N.C., asked leave to offer a resolution directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest and bring before the bar of the House all such absent members as are in the city, and that the Clerk cause a copy of this resolution to be telegraphed to the capital of each State, and published in two papers there of the largest circulation, paying the expenses of the same out of the contingent fund.

Disagreed to by 87 against 99.

Mr. Morrell, of Vt., announced the death of his colleague, the Hon. James Meacham, passing an eloquent and feeling eulogy on his public and private character, and offering the usual resolutions of respect.

Mr. Howard, of Mich., said for more than a quarter of a century he had had the acquaintance of Mr. Meacham. He paid an eloquent tribute to the memory of his departed friend.

Mr. Etheridge, of Tenn., said his heart yielded a ready response to the remarks of the gentleman who had preceded him. Though solemn the hour, it was pleasant to know that under the many conflicting influences which control the conduct and opinions of members, there was not one here to withhold the tear of sympathy.

Messrs. Dickson and Giddings severally bore testimony to the high character of Mr. Meacham, as a statesman and honest man.

The resolutions of respects were then adopted. Adjourned.

SENATE. Aug. 26.

Mr. Crittenden, of Ky., asked leave to introduce a bill to alter and amend the Kansas Nebraska act.

Mr. Biggs, of N.C., objected to its reception, when Crittenden gave notice that he would introduce it to-morrow.

Mr. Weller, of Cal., introduced the bill of which he gave notice yesterday—a bill, "To annul the obnoxious laws passed by the Territorial Legislature of Kansas."

The session was passed in the Discussion of the Bill, making amendments and motions and withdrawing them after some had an opportunity of speaking about the quagmire in which the Congress finds itself presently. No action taken. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Simmons, from the select committee to investigate the alleged assault committed by Mr. McMullen, of Va., on Mr. Granger, of N. Y., made a report, setting forth the testimony and every particular of the occurrence, the reading of which produced occasional laughter.

The majority of the Committee were inclined to censure Mr. McMullen but his conduct was extenuated, however, by circumstances to such a degree as to require on the part of the House, in its exercise of sound discretion, no further action.

The minority of the Committe sustained Mr. McMullen.

The reports were laid on the table and ordered to be printed, and the committee discharged.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, moved that the House adjourn, but withdrew the motion at the request of Mr. Lecher, of Va., who said, as assaults and batteries were grave matters, he wanted the facts in this case to go to the world, and for that purpose he moved that 10,000 extra copies of the report and evidence be printed. Met with laughter.

Mr. Harris, of Md., made an unsuccessful attempt to have the House proceed at once to the consideration of the unfinished business of the last session.

The House by 43 majority, refused to adjourn, and by 2 majority refused to call the House as moved by Mr. Orr.

Mr. Wakeman, of N.Y., offered a resolution proposing to make a proper deduction from the pay of members who, by reason of pairing off, shall decline to act or vote in the House.

Pending the subject the House adjourned.

SENATE. Aug. 27.

Mr. Cass, of Mich., presented letters from Gen. Persifer F. Smith, which he obtained at the War Department, giving an account of the movements of the United States troops in Kansas.

The letters were read.

General Smith states that the reports which have been going the rounds of the newspapers are gross fabrications, and that the troops have not done anything to interfere with the citizens except to guard the prisoners charged with treason.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill introduced yesterday by Mr. Weller, to repeal certain laws of the Kansas Legislature.

Mr. Hunter, of Va., stated that the Senate had already passed bills containing the same provisions as this and sent them to the House. He would therefore move in order to get up the Army bill, now on the table, that this bill be laid on the table.

After some explanations by Mr. Weller the motion was agreed to by 28 against 11.

The Senate then proceeded to consider the army bill.

Mr. Hunter stated that this bill was the bill upon which the two houses disagreed at the adjournment of the last session. There had been conferences upon it which were unsuccessful; but although the last vote of the House was to adhere to their disagreement to the Senate amendment, he was willing to give the House as many chances to vote upon this question as they could have, and he therefore moved that the Senate insist, and ask another conference.

After a great deal of talk, the motion was agreed to by yeas 33, nays 6.

Messrs. Hunter, Crittenden and Bigler were appointed the Committee of Conference on the part of the Senate.

Mr. Benjamin, of Iowa, desiring to address the Senate on the subject, of the resolution submitted by Mr. Clayton for a Select Committee of Conference was taken up for consideration.

Here began speechifying.

The Hon. Mr. Seward spoke in a style that brought out Mr. Douglas upon him and his clique not soon to be forgotten.

Mr. Clayton's resolution was tabled. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Mc Queen, of S. C., asked, but did not obtain leave to offer a preamble declaring it manifest that no Army bill can be passed, and concluding with a resolution providing for the adjournment of Congress on Thursday next, at four o'clock.

The session was occupied with honorable members trying to be heard with some favorite resolution; but without success. At last, a message was received from the Senate, further insisting on its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the Senate amendment, striking out the Kansas proviso to the army bill, and asking a Committee of Conference.

On motion of Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, the House further insisted on its amendment, and a Committee of Conference was appointed, consisting of Messrs. Campbell of Ohio, Stephens of Georgia, and Sherman of Ohio.

Adjournment till to-morrow, at 10 A. M., in order to afford ample time to finish the business of the session.

Of Dr. Kane's new work, we have some facts which will be interesting to his admirers and the country generally. Dr. Kane entrusted its Publication to Messrs. Childs and Peterson, choosing Philadelphia as it was his native place. The work will consist of two volumes 8vo, of nearly 400 pages each, illustrated by 300 electrotype cuts, 21 steel plates, and four maps. So great has been the advance demand, that the work intended for immediate publication will be delayed until the latter part of September, and this delay in spite of the fact that 30 presses driven by steam have been constantly employed in getting out the first edition. To give some idea of the demand, it is interesting to state that Phillips, Sampson & Co., of Boston, have ordered 5,000 copies, and expect to increase their order to 10,000 before the work is issued. Messrs. Lippincott & Co., take the same number. Messrs. Applegate & Co., of Cincinnati, take 5,000. In our own city an agent has received orders for 2,000 copies, and in Baltimore another for 1,500, the prospect being that 100,000 copies will be demanded upon the first issue of the work. Messrs Childs and Peterson have also purchased the plates of Dr. Kane's first Arctic expedition, and are issuing it with new plates, much improved, together with a portrait and biography of Sir John Franklin.—[Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper Aug. 30.

Another Affair of Honer.

St. Louis, Aug. 25.

B. Gatz Brown, editor of the Missouri Democrat, and Thomas C. Reynolds, the defeated candidate for Congress on the national Democratic ticket, left for Selma, 30 miles below here, this morning, to fight a duel. The affair grew out of strictures made by Mr. Brown on Mr. Reynolds during the course of the State canvass.

Fatal Accident.

Easton, Pa., Aug. 26.

One span of the Lehigh Valley Railroad bridge across the Delaware River at this place, gave way this morning, while two engines were passing over it. One of the engines was precipitated into the Morris Canal, a distance of 60 feet, and the other caught on an abutment. There were five persons on the engines at the time of the disaster. Two of them escaped injury, two were seriously hurt, and one was killed.

Origin of the Turkish Crescent.—When Philip of Macedon approached by night with his troops to scale the walls of Byzantium, the moon shone out and discovered his design to the beseiged, who vigorously repulsed him. The crescent was afterwards adopted as the the favorite badge of the city. When the Turks took Byzantium, they found the crescent in every public place; and believing it to possess some magical power, thy adopted it themselves.

The Difference of a Letter.—An orator, perspiring freely, in a husky voice, said: "In short, ladies and gentlemen, I can only say I wish I had a window in my bosom, that you might see the emotion of my heart."

The newspapers all printed the speech leaving the "n" out of "window," He was taken somewhat aback when he read it.

A man who is furnished with arguments from the mint, will convince his antagonist much sooner than one who draws them from reason and philosophy.

United States Mails Salt Lake City.

Post Office Department, May 31, 1856.

PROPOSALS for conveying the mails of the United States from the first day of December, 1856, to the 30th day of November, 1860, on the following route, will be received at the Contract Office of this Department until 9 A. M. of the 15th of October, 1856, to be decided the next day, to wit:

No. 8911 From Independence, (Mo.) via Fort Kearney and Fort Laramie, in Nebraska Territory, to Salt Lake City, in Utah Territory, 1,150 miles and back, once a month.

Leave Independence the first day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Salt Lake City on the last day of the month at 8 a m;

Leave Salt Lake City on the second day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Independence by the last day of the month.

NOTES.

Bidders are required to inform themselves of the actual distance, the weight and bulk of the mails to be carried (the whole mail required to be taken each trip,) and all other points essential to a correct understanding of their liability for the proper performance of the required service, before making their proposals, which must be guarantied by two responsible persons, certified to as such by a postmaster or judge of a court of record; and contract must be entered into by the successful bidder, with surety, before the 1st day of December, 1856.

No pay will be made for trips not performed, and for each of such omissions not satisfactorily explained three times the pay of the trip may be deducted. For arrivals so far behind time as to break connexion with depending mails, and not sufficiently excused, one fourth of the compensation for the trip is subject to forfeiture. Fines will be imposed, unless the delinquency be promptly and satisfactorily explained, for neglecting to take the mail from or into a post office; for suffering it to be injured, destroyed, robbed, or lost; and for refusing, after demand, to convey the mail as frequently as the contractor runs, or is concerned in running, vehicles on the route. The Postmaster-General may annul the contract for repeated failures to run agreeably to contract, or for disobeying the post office laws or instructions of the Department. The Post master-General may alter the schedule; he may also order an increase of service by allowing therefor a pro rata increase on the contract pay; he may also curtail or discontinue the service in whole or in part, of pro rata decrease of pay, allowing one month's extra compensation on the amount of service dispensed with. Bids should be addressed to the "Second Assistant Postmaster General," superscribed "Proposals for Salt Lake City Mails."

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "The Mormon." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the transgression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Prejudice—What Is It?

BY MISS E. R. SNOW.

'Tis not an orb, dispensing light,
Like that which shines in yonder heaven:
'Tis not a star that glitters bright,
Like those that deck the crest of even'.

'Tis not a fountain, full and free,
Whence moral beauties sweetly flow:
'Tis not a harp whose minstrelsy
Can intellectual charms bestow.

'Tis not a pinion, form'd to bear
The mind where Reason's hosts resort:
'Tis not a chart, directing where Investigation holds his court.

'Tis not a knight, inspir'd to win
The highest mental prize, forsooth:
'Tis not a monitor within,
Which prompts a search for every truth.

It is a clog, prepar'd to hold
The noble powers of reason down—
A curtain, whose thick, sable fold,
The strongest vision seems to bound.

It is a charm, infusing deep
A deadly soporific spell;
Which lulls the faculties to sleep,
And softly whispers, "All is well."

It is a bolt, whose massy weight
The strength and skill of truth defies—
A prison wall, before whose gate
Bold common sense affrighted flies.

It is a fetter, made to bind
Inquiry's impulse from the soul;
While ignorance sways the human mind
And every power of thought controls.

Reminiscences of Battle.

The Times correspondent has revisited the Alma, and thus describes the memories it recalled:—"A huge mound, composed of 15 or 16 gigantic graves, at the distance of 400 or 500 yards from the river on its north side, denotes the resting place of those who fell before the army crossed the stream, or who died after the fight in the ambulances. The road by which we advanced to the bridge is just as it was on the 20th of September, and on the right, close to the stream, are the blackened ruins of the village of Bourliouk. It will be remembered that the enemy partially destroyed the bridge, but that it was repaired during the action by Captain Montagu, of the Royal Engineers, and a party of Sappers and Miners. The bridge has been substantially rebuilt by means of a strong wooden way thrown across the stone arches, and supported by beams and uprights. The old post-house, on the right of the road before you come to the bridge, is about being reconstructed, and a guard of soldiers were loged in its ruins. It will be, to all appearance, a handsome house, of fine white freestone, when it is finished. I surveyed its ruins with peculiar interest, for I know a person very intimately who took shelter in this house, part of which was on fire, to get out of a fire still hotter, till he was driven out by a shell falling through the roof, and it was at the wall outside, which is yet torn by shot, that I met the first two wounded officers I saw that day—two officers of the 30th, one hit through the chest or side; the other wounded, I think in the leg or arm. They were helping each other from the river, bleeding and weak, and I was fortunate enough to be able to bring to their aid a Staff-surgeon, belonging, I believe, to the Cavalry Division, who kindly examined their wounds under fire. Close to this I had previously seen the first man killed—a drummer, who was carrying a litter, and who was struck by a round shot, which bowled slowly along the road and hit him, with a peculiar squashing sound, on the hip. He fell broken in two, and never moved: nor did his comrade, who was carrying the other end of the litter, stop to mourn over his death. After the intrepid rush of the Light Division up the hill, its wavering, its slow and broken and unwilling halt, the bold advance of Pennefather's Brigade, and the billow-like march of the Guards, I was happy again in being able to warn Colonel Waddy, as he approached at the head of the 50th, that he was moving right along the line of fire of the enemy's guns, and, as there was a very conclusive proof given of the correctness of the statement, just as I spoke, that gallant officer moved off his men, who were in dense columns a little to the left, and got off the road to the fields, when he rapidly advanced towards the heights. All these things and many more came back upon me as I looked around. I could recall that narrow road filled with dead and dying—poor young Burgoyne going past on his litter, crying out cheerily, "It's all right—it's only my foot;" Billy Fitzgerald shot through both legs lying up against the wall, and chatting away as if he had just sat down after a quadrille; a white-haired field officer (of the 55th), whose name I don't know, badly wounded through the body, who could only moan bitterly. "Oh my poor men! oh my poor men! they hadn't a chance;" then the river, stained here and there with blood still flowing from the dead and dying, who lay on the shallows and the banks, lined nevertheless by hundreds, who drank its waters eagerly; the horrid procession of the dripping litters going to the rear of the fight; the solid mass of Adams' brigade, halted by Lord Raglan's orders, as it emerged from the smoke of Bourliouk; the Staff itself and the Commander-in-Chief, gathered on the rising ground close by; that ghastly battle-field, where so many lay in so small a place, putrescent with heat and wounds; the gray blocks of Russians melting away like clouds, and drifted off by the fierce breath of battle; the shriek and rush of the shells from the brass howitzers in the battery the patter of the rifle, the rattling roll of the musketry, the frantic cheer of our men as they stood victors on the heights, drowning the groans and cries which for a moment succeeded the roar of battle; the shrill flourish of the French bugles and the joyous clamor of their drums from the other side of the ravine,—all came back upon the ear again, and the eye renewed its pleasure as it gazed from the ridge upon the plain where it had before seen the Russians flying in disorder, with their rear still covered by the threatening squadrons of their cavalry. Then one recalled the spot where one had seen some friend lying dead, or some one—friend or foe—whom it were no mercy to strive to keep alive—Watkin Wynn, stretched on the ground in front of the trench, with a smile on his face—Colonel Chester, with a scornful frown, and his sword clenched in the death grasp—Monck, with the anger of battle fixed on every feature—these and many another friend in the camp of Aladyn or Devno rose up as they lived in the memory. The scowling Russians who glared so fiercely on their conquerors, and seemed to hate them even as they supplied their wants, then seen for the first time, left an impression respecting the type of the Muscovite character which has scarcely been effaced now that they have ceased to be "messieurs nos amis l'ennemi." I recalled the two days past as no enemy ought to pass two days—on the field of battle, amid the dead—the horrid labors of those hours of despondency and grief where all should have been triumph and rejoicing, and the awakened vigor with which the army broke from its bivouac on the Alma and set out with no certain aim, no fixed project, on its chance march which fate has made so successful and so prosperous.

Dissolution or Submission—What Will the South Do?

From the Charleston (S. C.) Mercury.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8, 1856.

The growing probability of the election of Fremont in November, by the united voice of the Northern people, and the certainty of the final triumph of the Black Republican party, even if defeated now, suggest, and suggest powerfully, the immediate importance of considering the issue which must, sooner or later, be presented to us. The crisis which Calhoun predicted is at hand!

Are we prepared for it? Have we, while defending the outworks—the constitutional barriers which surround us—been preparing also for the assault which is, sooner or later, to be made by the invaders? Has the wisdom of Calhoun been as good seed even in his beloved South Carolina—that noble old State of noble men and noble fame—bringing forth tenfold in due season? I will not ask if we have a united South. But there is a united North. This anti-slavery sentiment, so long denied by Southern national men (God save the mark,) and so long diverted from its course at the North, for local reasons, is at last up and determined to do or die. The question has changed in the last two weeks. It is no longer asked: "Will Fremont be elected?" but "Will the South resist his election?" The Baltimore Clipper has launched forth on this question, and asserts that the South would submit, and appeals to the good sense, the sober second thought of the people.

Government is based on one of two principles—mutual interest or force. Mere affection has no more to do with Government than with banking. A people, to continue together in a purely political Union, must have, as the law writers have it, mutual interest. There must be a consideration, or the contract cannot stand. Where is the unity of interest between Iowa and South Carolina?—between Maine and California? If the Union were dissolved to-morrow, on what basis of Government would Illinois and Vermont form a compact? The European systems are all based on force, emanating from some sufficient central power, and represented in the ramifications of each department. The American Union was formed for the common welfare and the common defence. This is the written consideration. The distinction of RACE, in antagonism to the distinction of CLASS, is truly an important element in our Republic; but it was purely accidental, and is even now the excuse for the sectional purposes of the Northern States. The people there cannot see that this anti-slavery crusade must either annihilate us or Africanize themselves. The first would be represented by servile war, blood, fire and the desolation of the fairest portion of the Continent; the other would thoroughly debauch and reduce to a condition of menialage the whites of the North. With such results, just as inevitable as that the sun will rise in the East and set in the West, in November, what is the common bond to bind us, as a people, longer together? The election of Fremont would certainly (if anything ever will) unite the South. And yet it is a very grave question whether the man's success, accompanied by all the degradation of the principles and platform avowed by his party, would drive the South where she should have gone in 1850, and where she must go eventually to preserve her equality and rights—that is, into a separate, compact, united Southern Confederacy.

It is not a step to be hastily taken, and yet the necessity may come on us as thunder from a clear sky. In time of peace prepare for war.

ROLYAD.

From the New Orleans Bulletin.

We have honestly expressed our opinion of the consequences that are to follow the election of Mr. Fremont, should such a deplorable contingency occur. The Northern press have derided, and contemptuously commented upon the remark made by Mr. Fillmore, in his Albany speech, that the South would not submit to the election of Fremont. It is, nevertheless, the stubborn truth; and every Southern man, reluctantly and fearfully, is constrained to admit the fact. The election of Mr. Fremont per se is not to be the immediate and direct cause of a disruption between the North and the South, but the measures of public policy that will inevitably follow such an election will occasion the dreadful rupture. The election of Fremont and nothing more would be to the Free Soil party but a barren triumph. Personally, he is a cypher, and so the party regard him; but his election will be the success and triumph of his principle. It secures the ascendency forever of Free Soilism, and, as a natural consequence, the division of the Union into anti-slavery and pro-slavery sections.

We are just as well satisfied in our own mind that the election of Buchanan, and in the same way, but perhaps not as precipitately, will be followed by the same results.

Gen. Cass gave it as his solemn conviction the other day, in the Senate, that the days of the Republic are numbered! We believe the old doughface is right for once. Let all the people say, Amen!—[National Anti-Slavery Standard, Aug. 30.

A Scene in San Francisco.

We learn from the Alta Californian of July 29, that the subjects Hetherington and Brace were condemned by the Vigilance Committee, the former, for shooting Dr. Randall at the St. Nicholas Hotel on the 24th, the latter, for the murder of Capt. West, and other crimes committed some time since. The execution took place on the 28th.

THE APPROACH TO THE GALLOWS.

At about half past 5 o'clock, the preparations at the gallows being completed, the Executive Committee were escorted from their rooms to the vicinity of the gallows, where they occupied a separate position in a body. The prisoners were then brought down from their cells, and placed each in a carriage, accompanied by a guard of officers, and were driven to the execution ground. A death-like stillness prevailed among the spectators and the soldiers as the carriages approached, and many of them stood uncovered. Both of them ascended the scaffold with a firm step, and were to all appearance little affected by the scene before them. The Rev. Mr. Thomas, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, also went upon the scaffold, accompanied by two or three officers, who officiated as executioners. The arms of the prisoners were pinioned when they ascended the gallows, and their lower limbs were firmly bound as soon as they reached the platform. Both aided the officers in adjusting the noose to their necks. With great coolness they took off their neck-ties, and loosed their shirt collars as unconcernedly as though they were about the most ordinary affairs of life. When the ropes were placed upon their necks, Brace turned to his companion and extended his hand, which was taken by Hetherington, when a few words passed, as though they were bidding adieu to each other, and Hetherington proceeded to address the assemblage.

Hetherington then spoke as follows:

GENTLEMEN—You may think me a hardened sinner, but I appear before you cool, unconcerned and free. I am now about to meet my Maker. To the best of my knowledge here, I have not lived one day in my life—to the best of my knowledge I have not lived a day in my life that I was afraid to meet my Maker that night. [To the reporter. Have you got that?] Do not think that I am boastful or bragging; such is not my case. The Rev. Bishop Kipp has been with me all day—not all day, but nearly all day.

Brace—Go on—go on with what you have to say, (the executioner checked him.) Away, you d—n son of a b—h.

Hetherington—I am no more penitent to-day than I have been any day in my life.

Brace—Go on, old hoss.

Hetherington—In a conversation which I had with Mr. O'Brien two weeks ago, our conversation turned upon religion, and I assured him that there never was a day in my life——

Brace—Hurry up, and not stop so long. Do you think I want to stand here and be stared at by these ignoramuses? I wish to meet my doom immediately.

Hetherington—They tell me to stop. (Several voices in the crowd, "Speak on; go on, Hetherington.")

Hetherington—I have not disobeyed any of the rules of that house (pointing to the Committee Rooms.) I should be very sorry to do it; if you will say go on, I will go on.

Brace—Go on, and brave it out. Don't talk about Dr. Kipp; they don't want to know anything about him.

Hetherington—(after a pause)—Where did I leave off? What was I saying? (A voice—"About Dr. O'Brien.")

Hetherington—Our conversation turned upon religion.

Brace—(laughing)—Ah! ah! I am drunk, so I am all right!

Hetherington—I told the Doctor I was prepared to meet my God at any moment; and further, that I never lived one day in my life that I was not prepared to meet my God at the night. Dr. P. O'Brien will make an affidavit to that, I think, if called upon.

Brace—You have your vengeance, gentlemen to your hearts' content. I don't care a d——n. I want you to understand that clearly, fully and distinctly, gents.

Hetherington—The gentlemen have given orders to go ahead. I will change my note, and will merely say, as orders have been given to stop, that in the first difficulty I had with Dr. Baldwin, I had to shoot him in defence of my own life.

Brace—I shall die murdered by the Vigilance Committee, July 29, 1856; I wish that clearly and distinctly understood on the house-top there.

Hetherington—I was acquitted of that, but still it hangs upon me. I must stop: but I will first add, that so far as killing Dr. Randall is concerned, I merely asked for a conversation with McCorkle, when he turned round and drew his pistol immediately. I merely shot him to save my own life. I have lived a gentleman all my life, and will die a gentleman, though on the gallows. I defy any man in the whole world to prove that I have done one dishonorable act in my life. I have been abused by the public press of this city, where I have resided five or six years, for some cause unknown to me. I am now in a few minutes to be launched into eternity. You may please yourselves, nothwithstanding I have no bad feeling towards any person living. I forgive every man freely, as I expect my Redeemer to forgive me. Lord have mercy on my soul!

Brace—God d——n it, dry up! What's the use talking to them!

Hetherington—I was going to remark that very few people——

Brace—Go it, old hoss!

Hetherington—I have led a life pure, mild, and above all reproach. As to how I have been treated, I will say for Mr. Gillespie, that he insulted me very much, but I freely forgave him. T. J. L. Smiley has been a friend towards me.

Brace—Come, dry up! What the b—y h—l is the use of keeping me here just waiting on you! I want to go through with it.

Hetherington—My witnesses were never put before a jury. I protested against several things that had been done. I am satisfied that no jury on the face of the earth would have convicted me. So far, a fair trial I have not had. I am not afraid to meet my God. I hope the Lord will have mercy on my soul. I hereby forgive every man living on the face of the earth. I ask every man living to forgive me as I freely forgive them. Gentlemen, I am here before you all. Do not believe that I am hardened; I have prayed from the day of my birth to the day of my death.

The executioner here stepped up behind and gently drew on the white cap.

Hetherington—The Lord have mercy upon my soul. I will meet my Saviour. I should like to have seen Fletcher Haight, but it was denied me. Remember me to Fletcher Haight and Henry Haight. Lord have mercy on my soul.

Hetherington spoke with a strong North-of-England accent, and occasionally referred to a memorandum which he had in his hand.

THE EXECUTION.

While Hetherington was yet speaking, and Brace going through with his most wonderful and revolting performances, the caps were drawn over their faces, a signal was given, followed by one deep tone from the bell on the Vigilant buildings, which was another signal for the executioner, who stood upon the ground, and with a mallet and chisel parted the cord that sustained the drop, and at once the two murderers were ignominiously suspended between heaven and earth, to pay the penalty of their crimes. The noose was well adjusted upon both, and the bodies were almost instantly lifeless. The body of Brace was not observed to move at all, not even a muscle, and that of Hetherington, after three or four minutes, was seen to move slightly, once or twice, then all was over.

An Awful Disease.

There is a terrible, and often fatal disease, now fiercely raging in portions of the United States. As near as I can make out the symptoms and character of which indicate it to be a class of negrophobia, differing from hydrophobia in some respects, as those laboring under the latter disease are fearfully affected with contortive convulsions at the sight of water, whilst the former go into spasms, froth at the mouth, show evident signs of madness at the sight, hearing or smell of a negro. Not having specially consulted our latin, we are not positive that we have been technically precise in the selection of a name for the disease, but doubt not it will answer for all ordinary purposes.

Negrophobia is now raging in Kansas, and all portions of the Eastern and Northern States, sometimes carrying off multitudes of indolent, meddlesome people, together with many who have previously been troubled with negromania. By attentive observation, I have discovered that the most positive premonitory symptoms of this disease is, fanaticism, churchmania, and a kind of can't mind-one's-own-business disorder—a disposition to hypocrisy and lying are also sometimes quite frequently evinced in this terrible disease, which sometimes forms so dangerous a complication that the unfortunate and pitiable victim never recovers from the fierce attack. When the attack is severe, the victim is seized by a strange forgetfulness of country, friends, family, business, former relations to the world and are swallowed up, soul, body and mind by niggers—or as they term them, gentlemen and ladies of ebony shade. In these ravings little else is heard but nigger!—nigger!—nigger!—Kansas!—Douglas!—Pierce! and until they sink and perish ingloriously.

By much research and scientific experiment I believe I have discovered a remedy for those who are but slightly attacked by this terrible disease, viz: In the morning, a draught from Andrew Jackson's letter to the Governor of South Carolina; at noon, take a few sips from Gen. Washington's Farewell Address; after the evening meal, smoke from the Pipe of Peace, filled with the leaves of the Book of Common Sense and Practical Honesty, then for a few days mind your own business, shut your ears against political priestcraft; go to work and court the fair Goddess of Honesty, and, nine chances out of ten you will get better and finally recover.

Fayth is a sure confydence of thynges which are hoped for, the certayntie of thynges which are not sene. By it the elders were well reported of.

Cranmer. 1539.

Fayth is a sure confydence of thynges which are hoped for, and a certayntie of thynges which are not seen. For by it the elders obtayned a good report.

Geneva. 1555.

Fayth is that which causeth those things to appeare indeed which were hoped for, and sheweth evidently the things which are not sene. For by it our elders were well reported of.

Rheims. 1582.

And fayth is the substance of things to be hoped for, the argument of things not appearing. For in this old men obtained testimonie.

King James. 1611.

Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. For by it the elders obtained a good report.

A Good Deliverance.

Madame Augustine R—, a pretty blonde of from 20 to 25 years of age, embarked lately from Calais to Dover. Her invalid appearance excited the interest of the passengers, who felt great anxiety lest sea-sickness should bring on a crisis which evidently could not long be deferred. She crossed the straits, however, safely, and upon landing was placed in an arm chair; and salts were held to her nose while an occasional groan went to the hearts of all her travelling companions. On the wharf, a custom-house officer observed the disembarkation, and seemed to feel a warm interest in the pretty French woman. He approached and offered his assistance, informing her that he had some knowledge of medicine, and though the lady assured him that she felt much better, and begged to be carried immediately to an hotel, he protested that it could not be done without danger, and by his philanthropic authority she was taken to an apartment of the custom-house and a midwife sent for. As the officer had foreseen, after begging to be released for a quarter of an hour, she was safely delivered of 2 pelerines, 15 scarfs, 17 pieces of lace, 12 pairs of silk stockings, 38 pieces of cotton, 6 reticules and 48 Lyons handkerchiefs. The mother and offspring are doing well.—[Southeastern Gazette.

The Dog that had no Owner.

We were traveling through Canada, in the winter of 1839, and after a very long day's ride, stopped at the Lion Inn; and the contents of the stage, numbering about nine persons, soon gathered together around the cheerful fire. Among the occupants of the room were observed an ill-looking cur, who had shown his wit by taking up its quarters in so comfortable an apartment. After a few minutes, the landlord entered, and observing this specimen of the canine race remarked:

"Fine dog, that. Is he yours, sir?" appealing to one of the passengers.

"No, sir."

"Beautiful dog! Yours sir?" addressing himself to a second.

"No," was the blunt reply.

"Come here, pup; perhaps he is yours sir?"

"No," was the answer.

"Very, sagacious animal; belongs to you I suppose sir?"

"No he dosen't."

"Then he is yours—and you have a treasure," throwing the animal a cracker.

"No, sir, he is not."

"Oh! (with a smile) he belongs to you, as a matter of course, then?" addressing the last passenger.

"Wouldn't have him as a gift."

"Then, you dirty, mean, contemptible, whelp, clear out!" and with that the host gave him such a kick as sent him howling into the street, amid the roars of the company.

"Is is true that a certain amount of muscular action which is accomplished quickly, is not as fatiguing as the same exercise extended through a longer period of time by slowness?—and if so, why?" We quote the following philosophical explanation for your benefit: "As animal power is exhausted exactly in proportion to the time during which it is acting, as well as in proportion to the intensity of the force exerted, there may be often a great saving of it by doing work quickly, although with a little more exertion during the time. Suppose two men of equal weight to ascend the same stair, one of whom takes only a minute to reach the top, and the other takes four minutes; it will cost the first but a little more than a fourth part the fatigue which it costs the second, because the exhaustion has relation to the time during which the muscles are acting. The quick mover may have exerted, perhaps, one-twentieth more force in the first instance, to give his body the greater velocity, which was afterwards continued; but the sloth supported his load four times as long. A healthy man will run rapidly up a long stair, and his breathing will scarcely be quickened at the top; but if he walk up slowly, his legs will feel fatigued, and he will have to wait some time before he can speak calmly. For the same reason, coach-horses are much spared by being made to gallop up a short hill, and being then allowed to go more slowly for a time, so as to rest at the top."

The following from the Cincinnati Enquirer is one of the best things of the kind ever printed:

Contempt of Court.—Hon. Thomas F. Marshall, late Member of Congress from Kentucky, was defending a man charged with murder, in Jessamine County, Judge Lusk presiding.

The testimony against the prisoner was strong, and Tom struggled hard on the cross-examination, but to little purpose, for the old Judge was inflexible in his determination to rule out all the improper testimony offered on the part of the defense.

At last, Tom worked himself into a high state of excitement, and remarked that "Jesus Christ was convicted upon just such rulings of the court that tried him."

"Clerk," said the Judge, "enter a fine of $10 against Mr. Marshall."

"Well, that is the first time I ever heard of anybody being fined for abusing Pontius Pilate," was the quick response of Tom.

Here the Court became very indignant and ordered the clerk to enter another fine of $20.

Tom arose with that peculiar mirth-provoking expression of countenance that no one can imitate, and addressed the Court with as much gravity as circumstances would permit, as follows:

"If your Honor please, as a good citizen, I feel bound to obey the order of this court, and intend to do so in this instance; but as I do not happen to have $30 about me, I shall be compelled to borrow it of some friend; and as I see no one present whose confidence and friendship I have so long enjoyed as your Honor's, I make no hesitation in asking the small favor of a loan for a few days, to square up the amount of the fines that you have caused the clerk to enter against me."

This was a stumper. The Judge looked at Tom, and then at the clerk, and finally said:

"Clerk, remit Mr. Marshall's fines; the State is better able to lose $30 than I am."

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, SEPT. 6, 1856.

To the Saints.

DEAR BRETHREN: As time rolls on, and new events are daily transpiring to test our faith, animate our hopes, excite our curiosity, and try our virtue and fidelity, it is necessary that we should, from time to time, look well to our position, cast up our accounts, and see how matters stand in relation to us, our association with our brethren individually, with the Church, and with our God. As one of the ancient prophets told the people with whom he was associated to "remember the pit from whence they were dug, and the rock from whence they were hewn," so it behooves us casually to reflect upon our true position in relation to these matters, especially under the circumstances in which many of us are placed; a great majority of us being in a state of transit from one part to another, and frequently from one country to another on our way to Zion. Associated with the Church and kingdom of God, in possession of principles the most elevated, pure, virtuous, and holy, emanating from God, and calculated to save and exalt us, our progenitors, and posterity, in time and throughout eternity, there is a great danger, from our contact with men and associations with the world, of our becoming contaminated with their evil conversation and practices, drinking into their spirit, yielding to their corruptions and vices, forsaking our God, and "making a shipwreck of faith and of a good conscience."

Let us, therefore, pause for a moment and reflect upon our true position. Some time ago we heard the gospel of Jesus Christ, as made known unto us, by the Elders of His Church, in this last dispensation. On hearing, upon examination, we found it to be strictly in accordance with the Scriptures of Divine Truth. This gospel came to us not only in word "but in power, in demonstration of the spirit, and with much assurance;" we believed we had found the ancient truth, the "pearl of great price;" and in the face of enemies and false friends, before a mocking world, and an all-seeing and all-wise God, we went forth in obedience to its dictates; we were "baptized in the name of Jesus, for the remission of sins, and had hands laid upon us for the gift of the Holy Ghost." We felt as though we had done right; the sweet, peaceful influence of the spirit of God brooded over us; our hearts were filled with joy and rejoicing; we felt that we had secured the approbation of the Most High; we had peace in our bosoms, peace in our families, peace at home, and peace abroad; we felt at peace with all the world, and the "love of God was shed abroad in our hearts, by the Holy Ghost, which was given unto us;" we felt that we were breathing another atmosphere, and that the Lord God was our God, our friend and benefactor; we delighted in the company of His Saints, and were glad to associate with them on all and every occasion. The words of life, and the testimony of his servants, were sweet to our taste, and we felt that we were moving in a new existence; the words of truth "distilled upon us like the morning dew;" they were "sweeter" to us than the honey and the honey comb; we compared our then present feelings with the past and rejoiced in the contrast; we contemplated our relationship to God, and rejoiced in the hopes of the future; we talked of the gathering of his saints, and sung the songs of Zion; we rejoiced in the hopes of the day when we should assemble with the people of God, the redeemed of all nations, when we should help to erect a Temple and partake of the ordinances in the House of the Lord; we struggled, and labored, and toiled for this, and God only knows how many privations many of us endured for the accomplishment of this object, and when the day of our partial deliverance came, and we saw a prospect of our going to the land of Zion our hearts bounded with joy, and we shouted Hosannah to the God of Israel. We bade adieu to our friends and parted with our associates; we forsook home and country, and mingling with other saints embarked on the "ships of Tarshish" with the Elders of the Church, whom we believed were gathering the elect of God; "we sung the songs of Zion with our faces thitherward," and rejoiced that God had opened up our way to the home of the Saints, the city of our God. We had confidence in the Elders of the Church, and relied on the teachings of the Holy Priesthood. Our prayers ascended to God, morning and evening we asked his blessing upon us, upon our wives and children, upon the Elders of His Church, upon the Presidency in Zion, upon the Twelve, and upon all the Saints. "Our peace then flowed as a river, and our righteousness as the waves of the sea." It was then well with us.—How is it now? Are our hopes and aspirations as strong? Do we delight as much in the company of the good saints? Do we take as much pains to attend meetings; and do we enjoy ourselves as much when there? Do we assemble our families and pray with them, and for them, as frequently as before, and dedicate ourselves and households to God? Are we as anxious to find out our duties now, as then, and as dilligent in the performance of them? Are we as zealous in the cause of God as we were, and as anxious to promote the interests of Zion? Do we respect and honor the authority in God's Kingdom as formerly, and do we uphold them, by our prayers, influence, and means? Holding the Holy Priesthood, do we magnify it; or are its duties becoming irksome and tedious? Do we rejoice as much in the blessings of the Gospel; and are we as anxious and zealous to promote the welfare of others as formerly; or what is really our position? Do we rejoice in the hope of gathering to Zion now, and are we making every effort for the accomplishment of that object? Or are many of us cold, heartless and dispirited, having lost our first love, have we become engrossed with worldly cares, and suffered the good seed to be choked? Having run well for a time, have we put off the armor and halted in the race? Have we substituted the world for God, and become earthly, sensual and devilish? Are we honest and truthful in our dealings, or truckling dishonest and fraudulent? Are we following the example of those around, bartering our virtue, and making shipwreck of faith, and of a good conscience? Let us ask ourselves what is really our position.

These, and a thousand other questions, might be asked, and it is well for us sometimes to sit down and commune with our own hearts; to be honest and deal frankly with ourselves, and to find out how matters stand between God and us. We may deceive one another, but we cannot deceive God, and "if our hearts condemn us, God is greater than our hearts." Let no man deceive you, brethren, by false assumptions, false principles, or a false gospel. The gospel that you first embraced is pure, virtuous, and holy; the principles that you then received were of God, and from God; those principles have not been changed, they are as enduring as the everlasting hills, as unchangeable as the Great Jehovah. Other principles may be communicated, and further light given, but the Lord will never give anything to contradict, or destroy what he has heretofore given; and it is now as necessary to avoid all pollution and contamination of the flesh and spirit as it was when first the Holy Commandment proceeded from the mouth of God. We believe in the doctrine of polygamy; but the marital relations when acceptable to God were always under the strictest law, and they are no less rigid and circumspect at the present, and any departure from those laws will incur the displeasure of the Almighty, and all lasciviousness, adultery, and corruption, will be visited by the withdrawal of the Spirit of God, and the wrath of the Almighty; and that word has not been revoked that says, "whoremongers and adulterers God will judge." Don't be deceived, therefore, by any false pretences, but preserve your bodies and spirits pure; let things alone that you do not understand, and go to Zion, where you will learn the law of the Lord in regard to these matters.

In regard to your religious duties they are just the same here as they were in any other place, and you require as much prayer, as much faith, as much patience and long suffering, and as much dilligence as ever: there is no relaxation of duty in His Kingdom, we have not learned how, and cannot serve two masters; we must "either serve God or Mammon;" neither is there any standing still in the Kingdom of God. Furthermore it is as necessary that we should be under the direction of the Priesthood as ever; for that is God's authority or medium of communication to men on earth, and as Jesus said, "He that receiveth you receiveth me, and receiveth him that sent me, and he that rejecteth you rejecteth me, and rejecteth him that sent me;" so is it now, and so it always was when there was a Priesthood on the earth, and so it always will be, this is an eternal principle, and as the principle is living and abiding, seek for the words of life, as they emanate from his servants, that you may be fed and enriched on the principles of eternal truth, and live "by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God." Seek to fulfill and magnify every duty and calling that may be placed upon you wherever your lot may be cast, "that you may be the sons of God without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation." Do this and keep your bodies and spirits pure, and magnify your calling and you will still be enabled to sing—

"O, its good to be a Saint, O, its good to be a Saint,
It is good to be a Saint of Latter Days."

Your peace will flow as a river, and your righteousness as the waves of the sea. Clouds may gather around and darkness may envelop you for a while, you may pass through scenes of affliction as all servants of God have done; but you will come off victorious, your way shall be made plain before you, you shall go to the land of Zion and rejoice among his people, your "path shall be like that of the just which shineth brighter and brighter, until the perfect day." You shall know how to save yourselves and families, progenitors and posterity in the Kingdom of God, and when you have finished your work on the earth, be crowned with glory, honor, power, might, majesty and dominions in the eternal world.

Our Visit to Connecticut and Haverstraw

THROUGH the multiplicity of business in the office, arising from the large emigration that has passed through to Utah this season, we have been prevented from visiting the Churches under our watchcare as much as we could have desired. That business being over for the present season, and being favored with the company of our worthy and esteemed colleague, Col. G. A. Smith, we concluded to visit as many of the Churches as possible before the summer was ended. The Friday following our return from Toms River we left for Connecticut, accompanied by the Colonel and Elder E. R. Young of Westport. In the evening, we arrived at Elder Young's, and were kindly received by his interesting family. The following day Bro. Young took us over his cotton factory and gave us considerable insight to all the changing scenes through which the "raw" passes till it comes out in fabrics. Our host being of the Whig stamp, confirmed the cry of many other manufacturers for a protective duty, as the great cotton lords of England had too many advantages over the American manufacturer.

On Sunday morning Elder Young drove us in his carriage, with his family, to Mr. Price's, about two miles and a half from Norwalk, where we were agreeably and hospitably entertained. We attended a "wood's meeting" in the afternoon, where we found a very respectable audience awaiting our arrival in a very pleasant grove; the meeting throughout was very agreeable and we trust profitable. In the evening, according to the previous arrangements of our friends, we addressed a congregation in the court house at Norwalk. Some respectable persons conducted themselves in a very becoming manner, and were quite attentive while we spoke, but there was a good sprinkling of "Border Ruffians," whom we think beyond the necessity of taking lessons in Kansas, and over whom the more sober had not sufficient moral energy and influence to control, which forced the conviction upon our minds that rowdyism prevailed in other places besides Washington, California and Kansas. If what we have heard and read of the "land of steady habits" can be relied on, the conduct of the company we saw forms a sad contrast to that of their puritanic fathers and seems to justify the almost established maxim that every generation is worse than its predecessor. The Saints with whom we had direct intercourse manifested a good spirit, were rejoicing in the faith, and desirous of progressing in the Kingdom of God.

On Monday morning Mr. Young drove us to Bridgeport. We passed through a very pretty country, and saw many old continental farm houses that reminded us of olden times, whilst here and there the scenery was relieved by buildings of a more modern style, and holding greater pretensions to architectural beauty. The great variety of trees dressed in their rich autumnal foliage, rendered the whole scene beautifully graphic and picturesque. We passed over the Piquot Swamp, and had pointed out to us the place where the celebrated King Phillip, after eluding the pursuit of his enemies for some time, was killed. We could not but ejaculate: There fell a hero, a patriot to his country, and a true friend to his nation, who, had he lived in other days, and figured in other scenes, would have been immortalized as a great general, and a successful warrior; he has, though an Indian, left a name and a fame that never can be obliterated. We say peace to his ashes; for he stood nobly in the defence of his country and friends. In passing through Fairfield, and viewing the beautiful habitations and scenery surrounding it, we could not but be reminded of the great change that had taken place since it was burned in the year 1779, by the ferocious and relentless British troops under Tyron.

The entrance to Bridgeport is certainly picturesque and beautiful abounding in splendid villas and magnificent mansions. The genius of Barnum is evidently manifested here in drawing around him so much wealth, taste, elegance and beauty. Every variety of architectural design is introduced, from the ancient Gothic and the classic Grecian down to the most modern chaste, and beautiful improvements of the present day. Bridgeport may emphatically be called the city of palaces. Iranistan, the seat of the celebrated Mr. P. T. Barnum, is certainly a magnificent structure, said to be a fac similie of a Pavilion erected by George IV, at Brighton, England, and the only specimen of Oriental architecture in England or America. It certainly is a magnificent structure so far as we could see it; but being under the lock and key of the Sheriff we could not examine the grounds, summer houses, water works and other outbuildings; our memory may be at fault, but we think we were informed that Mr. Barnum used a steam engine of twenty-four horse power to elevate the water for his own purposes. Here likewise dwells in a beautiful mansion, the celebrated Gen. Tom Thumb. In viewing the magnificence of the building and scenery around, we could not but reflect upon the go-a-head-i-tiveness of Young America. Here we find an American showman vieing with an English king and copying his richest architectural designs, and an exhibited "pigmy prodigy" living in a mansion that would outvie those of some European Princes. In regard to Mr. Barnum's private character, we find that he stands A No. 1 in Bridgeport, where he is best known, which certainly speaks well for him as a man. Our host and other parties confirmed Mr. Barnum's report, that his failure was owing to his good nature and the rascality of other men. That he did not pretend to that high standard of morals that some did and was a showman; but that he was strictly honest and in his late failure he had secured against loss every person to whom he was personally indebted, and furthermore he had offered $100,000 to be free from the responsibilities fraudulently imposed upon him by others.

We returned to our friend's house very much gratified with our visit. Next morning we took the rail for Gotham.

ON Saturday last in company with Col. G. A. Smith, and Judge Appleby we concluded to make another short visit into the country to see our friends, and inhale the pure air, and invigorating breeze, up the Hudson. We left the city about half past three o'clock P.M. by the steamer Isaac P. Smith. We had a pleasant trip and enjoyed the view of the delightful scenery on both sides of the river. We arrived at the Haverstraw pier about sundown, and found Bros. Henry Druce, and G. H. Taylor, at the steambost landing, with a carriage to convey us to their residences, after a short pleasant ride we arrived at Bro. John Druce's, where we were kindly received; supper was soon prepared, of which we heartily partook, and passed a pleasant evening. Next morning we attended the meeting of the Saints, addressed them, partook of the Sacrament, confirmed two persons who had been baptized, and blessed one child. We had a good time, enjoyed the spirit of God, and rejoiced with our brethren and sisters in the truth and blessing of the Gospel. In the afternoon, in company with the brethren and sisters we took a pleasant walk to a mount near by, from the summit of which we had a splendid view of the beautiful and enchanting surrounding scenery up and down the Hudson, as far as the eye could reach. While on the mount we enjoyed ourselves much, and partook of fine plums, apples, cakes, and elderberry wine, that the brethren had conveyed thither for our comfort. After enjoying the scenery, to our heart's satisfaction, we retraced our steps, and passed a very pleasant evening, teaching the Saints their duties, and joined a couple in the holy bonds of wedlock.

We tarried with them until Tuesday morning, and returned well pleased with our visit, and with the Saints there, who treated us with every possible kindness and attention, administering to our wants and necessities, for which we feel grateful, and say, may God bless the Saints at Haverstraw, and in the name of the Lord they shall be blessed if they continue in their good works. The Saints there are under the presidency of Elder John Druce, a good and faithful man—formerly of Manchester, England—they pay their tithing, and contribute to other church funds regularly. Their hearts are always open to assist in rolling on the work of God.

On Sunday we purpose being with the Saints in Philadelphia.

Utah.

AT the moment of going to press, and after the printer has in his most polite and most agreeable style informed us that he has already too much copy, we find the Deseret News of July 2, 9, 16, 23 and 30 lying on our table, teeming with big accounts of the preparations for the celebration of the 4th and 24th of July, and the still bigger accounts of the glorious celebrations, after they had transpired. We are forced to confine ourselves now to a few words. Let these be, then: Deseret is, what the nations will yet acknowledge her, the blessed of the Lord. Long life to her valiant, patriotic sons and virtuous daughters.

Voyage of the Missionaries by the New World.

Elder James Beck has forwarded us, from Wolverton, England, Aug. 8th, a very interesting account of his voyage in the New World, with the other missionaries, from this port to Liverpool. He says:

"We have been thirty-three days on board from New York to Liverpool. Twenty-eight days, I may say, at sea, and the remainder lying in the rivers before we started and landed. We all enjoyed the trip across the Atlantic first-rate—had no sea sickness of any consequence, save Bro. Doremus who was considerably sick all the way. We were united and strong in the faith of Israel's God. We met together, morning and evening, for singing and prayer, and truly the Lord heard and answered our prayers and the spirit of our missions rested upon us and we have been blessed."

Bro. Beck gives us an account of the kindly reception he and the brethren received from Prest. Pratt and the brethren at Liverpool together with notice of his appointment published elsewhere. We shall ever be glad to hear from our brethren in their fields of labor.

England.

As many of the Saints in this country enjoyed opportunities of making the acquaintance of the last company of missionaries from Utah en route for England, and have a warm interest in the land of their fathers, we publish the following order of appointments.

President Orson Pratt is assisted in the Presidency of the Church in Great Britain and adjacent countries by President Ezra T. Benson, one of the Twelve Apostles, and Eld. James A. Little, who has been intimately associated with President F. D. Richards in the office at Liverpool during his late Presidency. President Benson is likely to devote a goodly share of his labors in visiting the Churches, and Elder Little will labor in the editorial department of the Star. We extract the following from the Star, Aug. 16:

Elder Phineas H. Young is appointed to travel among the Saints in Great Britain, to preach the Gospel and instruct the people of God, according to the written word of God, and as he shall be moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and to act under the counsel and direction of the respective Pastors and Presidents of the several Conferences which he may, in the providence of God, be permitted to visit; and we humbly invoke the blessings of our Heavenly Father upon his ministry, that the same may be crowned with abundant success.

Elders Truman O. Angell and John Kay are appointed to travel in all places and countries, within the jurisdiction of our Presidency, which they may feel disposed to visit, and, in all places, to preach the Gospel and comfort the Saints, as they may be led by the Holy Spirit, and as circumstances shall admit; and, while tarrying in any Conference or mission, they are to be under the counsel and direction of the President of such Conference or Mission. We humbly trust that their testimony and wise counsels may prove a lasting blessing to thousands in their extended field of labor; and may their hearts be filled with the wisdom of God, to search out hidden knowledge for the benefit of the present and future generations of Zion.

Elder James Marsden is appointed President of the Liverpool Conference.

Elder William Miller is appointed to labor under the direction of Pastor William S. Muir, of the Birmingham Pastorate.

Elder Lorenzo H. Hatch is appointed to labor under the direction of Pastor William C. Young, of the Sheffield Pastorate.

Elder Amos M. Musser lately from the East Indies is appointed to labor under the direction of Pastor Henry Lunt, of the Newcastle-on-Tyne Pastorate.

Millennial Star, Aug. 23:

APPOINTMENTS.—Elders James Beck, James Ure, and William Pace, are appointed to labor in Scotland, under the direction of Pastor James P. Park.

Elder Peter Robison is appointed to labor in the Sheffield Pastorate, under the direction of Elder William G. Young.

Elders Elijah E. Holden and Thomas R. King are appointed to labor in the London Pastorate, under the direction of Elder James D. Ross.

Elder Isaac Higbee is appointed to labor in the Nottinghamshire Pastorate, under the direction of Elder James Carrigan.

Elders Miles Romney and James Taylor are appointed to labor in the Manchester Pastorate, under the direction of Elder Charles R. Dana.

Elder Thomas Binden is appointed to labor in the Birmingham Pastorate, under the direction of Elder W. S. Muir.

Elder Henry I. Doremus is appointed to labor in the Cheltenham Pastorate, under the direction of Elder David B. Dille.

Elder Jesse Hobson is appointed to labor in the Bedfordshire Pastorate, under the direction of Elder James Lavender.

Elder Almeria Grow is appointed to labor in Ireland, under the direction of Elder John Scott.

By the Star, August 30th, we learn that President Pratt has commenced to issue a new series of tracts on the First Principles of the Gospel. The two first numbers—"The True Faith" and "True Repentance"—are already in circulation. Elder P. expects to issue a number every two weeks till the series is completed. We look forward to a great increase to the work of the Lord in the British Isles and adjacent countries. May the Almighty bless Presidents Pratt, Benson, and Little, and the mighty host of Elders under their presidency.

Central and Southern Utah.

BY letter from Elder Lucius N. Scovil, Provo City, July 1st, we learn that the crops are favorable there and the inhabitants had began harvesting. He adds:

"It is a general time of health in this City. Provo is certainly on the increase in good works. Prest. Snow is gaining influence over the people, and things move off more as they ought than I have ever seen them before. His council (the circle) meets regular and a first rate spirit prevails in every bosom: they have taken measures to supply the wants of the needy. All is peace with the Indians, Tintic sent word to Geo. W. Armstrong a few days since, that he wanted to come in and get fish and make a treaty.

Elder James Lewis writes from Parowan, July 8th.

"Presuming you would like to hear from this part of the country I will send you a few items. The people of Iron county are progressing as usual, and cheerful and happy; our crops never looked better excepting potatoes which suffered from worms. The improvements will be considerable, many good buildings will be erected here this season. The water failed considerable at Cedar, but they will be benefitted by the rains. We celebrated the 4th July in our usual style and with our enjoyment the heavens gave us rain plentifully and we truly had a time of rejoicing. The Saints are enjoying the good Spirit and all goes well. The Iron Works have discontinued operations till after harvest."

The Herald Approaching Zero.

IN Monday's issue, the Herald comes out with a short, cold, lifeless article, headed "Want of Stamina in the Republican party." The triumph of the Senate on Saturday is the circumstance which called forth the following friendly remarks:

"From Speaker Banks down to the latest converts to Republicanism, they all lack courage and self-confidence. They can talk and jabber and write by the hour or the day or the week; but when it comes to action, they are weak in the knees, and a very slight contest wears them out. The least clamor scares them out of their senses, and they are ready to retreat, and wheel about and beg to be forgiven. * * We have watched the course of these republicans for some time, and all along we have seen symptoms that they were as a body deficient in courage; hence we have inferred that when the final tussle did come between themselves and their opponents, they would, unless they altered their character materially, inevitably go to the wall. Saturday's debate abundantly confirms our impression."

Instead of holding on, showing good pluck, and obtaining the certain success before them, he says:

"Instead of this, they have given way at the first onset, and by thus suffering a defeat have without question injured their prospects of success in the greater contest that is at hand.

"We have a misgiving that many of the men who flourish as republican leaders are not fitted for the stormy life of politics. They are essayists, philosophers and literary men; afraid of strife, and easily frightened. If these are to be the leaders of the party throughout, all ideas of success may be abandoned. Hitherto, the universal popular revulsion against the imbecile and demoralized regime of which Franklin Pierce is the last expression, has given to the republicans a strength which has surprised no one more than themselves; but they will never be able to retain or make use of this strength unless they find more courage than they have hitherto shown. It will be as easy to ruin as it was to raise them."

Spirits from the Vasty Deep.

THE Herald of yesterday contains the following astounding information:

"The venerable Judge Kent, known throughout the legal world by his commentaries on the Constitution, and as one of the greatest constitutional lawyers in the Union, goes heartily for Fremont. He presided at a recent meeting at Fishkill Landing, New York. Is the Judge a disunion sectionalist?"

No. He is too grave a man for that. This venerable Judge having been in his grave about ten years, it was a little too bad to call him forth and compel him to preside over a disunion Black "Republican" meeting. Had Fremont vs. The People been brought before him while living, he would have decided for the defendants very quickly. These sectionalists, unable to draw in to their support the quick, resort to the dead to fill up their ranks. Dead men's bones will be plenty the day after the election.—[Daily News, Aug. 26.

A JUROR and a joking lawyer were conversing about the doctrine of transmigration of souls of men into animals. "Now," said the Judge, "suppose you and I were turned into a horse or an ass, which one would you prefer to be?" "The ass, to be sure," replied the lawyer. "Why?" asked the Judge. "Because," was the reply, "I have heard of an ass being Judge, but a horse, never."

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

About 1 o'clock on Saturday morning, August 30th, a fire was discovered in a cooper's shop in Forty-third street, in this city, which, before any aid could be brought, spread to the Latting Observatory and Forty-second street on one side, and to Forty-fourth street on the other, totally consuming the Observatory building and thirteen other buildings in the neighborhood. The Crystal Palace was on fire in three different places, as were other buildings in the vicinity, but owing to the exertions of the police and firemen they were saved from destruction.

The wind blew strong toward the Battery, and the flakes of fire from the tall Observatory were scattered southward in all directions, making light the whole upper part of the city. Large flakes of fire fell on Fifth avenue, as far down as Thirtieth street, and on Thirty-eighth street the roof of a wooden house on the Waddell property was burned by them.

The Observatory was about 300 feet in height, base 75x35, and 35 feet across the top, overlooking the whole city and surrounding country. It was built at a cost, including the apparatus, of $180,000. The loss above the insurance will probably be about $80,000. The fire, as it crept along toward the top of this tower, and finally reached that giddy height, made a most grand and magnificent appearance. The city was lighted from what appeared a solid column of living fire reaching almost to the very clouds.

The sub-National Kansas Committee had a conference with the President on Saturday, and report that he justified his general policy, expressing his belief that if the inhabitants of Kansas had been more anxious for peace and less anxious about their institutions, there would have been no trouble. He pledged himself that the invasions of the Territory should be prevented, come from whatever quarter they might; declared that actual settlers should have a fair election, though it should require the entire force of the Government to secure it.

On Wednesday of last week, a melancholy accident occurred at Bellport, L. I., by which six lives were lost. A small party of thirteen persons were sailing about a quarter of a mile from the shore and opposite the village of Bellport, when, by some mismanagement in tacking, the boat was upset. A large number of persons on shore witnessed the sad affair, but could render no assistance. The greater portion clung to the bottom of the boat and sails for some time, but it was half an hour before assistance could be rendered, and by that time, six out of thirteen were drowned. A Mr. Harriot was supporting his daughter in his arms from a watery grave, but in his effort to save his wife, he had to lose his daughter.

Through the exertions of George Ebbett, a boy about eleven years old, the lives of two of their party were saved. They had, it appears loosed their hold of the boat, and were about sinking, when young Ebbett left his place of safety, and swimming off to them, assisted them in regaining the boat.

On Thursday the Dudley Astronomical observatory at Albany was inaugurated. There were from four to five thousand persons present. A great portion of whom were members of the scientific Congress and the learned and curious drawn to Albany during its sittings. The Hon. Edward Everett delivered the inauguratory oration—subject, the Uses of Astronomy; an oration worthy of Everett.

The Illinois arrived on Friday evening with the California mails, bringing the particulars of two more executions. On our front page will be found the scene at the gallows which, is we should think, and hope, unique. The legal authorities held a Coroner's inquest, not over the bodies as they were in the keeping of the Vigilants but upon the bodies of Brace and Hetherington and did their best to find out who did officiate, but Knownothingism was the order of the day on every thing that might criminate.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

Valparaiso was visited in July by a destructive storm. As the barometer indicated the approach of the storm, the shipping had time to prepare, and thereby avoided severe disasters. The damages throughout the Republic are estimated at $500,000.

The cholera has been severe in Costa Rica. The El Nicaraguense of Aug. 9th, says: "The town of Guanacaste is reduced in population fully one-third. The cholera and dysentery have swept the people away by scores. The best idea that can be given of its prostration is the fact that while the epidemic raged most powerfully, Gen. Canas himself engaged in digging graves and his adjutant acted as cartman."

The Honolulu Advertiser of July 2d has the following items: "His Majesty of Hawaii, King Kamehameha, the fourth of that name, was married, at Honolulu, on the 19th June, to Miss Emma Rooke, daughter of Dr. T. C. B. Rooke. The ceremony was performed according to the ritual of the Church of England, in the Stone church. Some three thousand persons were present on the occasion. A salute of artillery was fired on the event. In the evening there was a grand ball at the palace. The King is 22 years old; the Queen, 20."

"The old goddess Pele, who rules among the craters of Hawaii, is becoming again quite restless. On the night of the 8th of June, a severe shock of an earthquake was felt at Kaeaikaa, which cracked stone walls and roused everybody from bed."

RUSSIA.—The Emperor was to leave St. Petersburg for Moscow, on the 25th ult. On the 29th, he was to make his solemn entry into the ancient city and take up his residence in the Palace of Petrowski. The coronation ceremony for which great preparations have been made, takes place on the 7th inst. On the 11th, the Emperor leaves for St. Petersburg, for the purpose of being present at his own fete, on St. Alexander's day.

Sir Charles Napier, the conqueror that-was-to-be of Cronstadt, has been on a visit to the Imperial city and renowned fortress. He was kindly received by the Emperor and the Grand Duke Constantine. Report says, that they tried some cutting jokes on old Charley, but he gave as good as he received.

After showing the old tar the entire strength of Cronstadt, the Duke asked him, in a chuckling sort of manner, "Well Admiral, and why didn't you come in?" Sir Charles replied, "Pray, why didn't your Imperial Highness come out?" The old man hastened back to England, and immediately communicated to the journals how terribly great was Cronstadt.

The Representatives of France and England have both arrived at St. Petersburg: the former—Count de Mormy cuts a big figure and spares no expense in impressing the Russians with great ideas of la grande nation.

The ceremony of the coronation and its adjuncts will, apparently throw into the shade every former proceeding of a similar kind in Russia or elsewhere. The magnificence of the preparations are something fabulous. There will be present no fewer than ten European princes, besides representatives of Powers and Principalities unnumbered.

The Russians have sent in a claim of 400,000 franks for damage done to the Russian palace at Constantinople, from its having been converted into a French hospital.

A quantity of treasure, valued at $150,000, was buried by the Russians in the church of Sebastopol, and they have just dug it up, in safety, although the French slept in the edifice for some considerable time.

FRANCE.—On the occasion of his fete, on the 15th ult., the Emperor Napoleon remitted the remainder of their sentences to 274 soldiers undergoing punishment, and 310 other cases reduced the period of imprisonment. The Imperial clemency was also extended to 492 civilians—240 being pardoned and the remainder having their sentences commuted or reduced. To this announcement the Moniteur adds "the gracious decisions prompted by the Keeper of the Seals on the occasion of the delivery of the Empress, the baptism of the Imperial Prince, and the fete of the Emperor, will have extended to 2300 persons."

The Emperor of the French received in a private audience the same day Baron de Brunow, Envoy Extraordinary of the Emperor of Russia, who, on the part of his Sovereign, presented to his Majesty the Collar and the Order of St. Andrew. Prince Gortschakoff, Commander-in-Chief of the Russian armies, and Captain Lisianski, Aide-de-Camp of the Grand Duke Constantine, were also presented to his Majesty.

ENGLAND.—At a Privy Council held at Osborne, Aug. 21st, the Imperial Parliament was ordered to be further prorogued from the 7th of October to the 13th of November.

Dover and Brighton were visited by a terrible gale on the 20th. At Dover the wind blew with such fury that it was almost impossible to stand up against it. The spray dashed with great violence against the hotels on the seaside, almost covering them entirely. No particular damage was done save in the destruction of the small boats of poor fishermen and the battering in of a part of the railway depot. At Brighton the gale was more destructive to the small shipping, and eight persons were drowned. The accounts of the disasters and the narrow escape of numerous persons from a watery grave are truly affecting. All along the sea coast the gale was very destructive.

A serious accident occurred at the bleach and dye work, Hampson Mills, near Bury, by the explosion of a steam boiler. Upwards of twenty persons were scalded and injured in various ways, and nine persons killed at the explosion. There were nearly 200 workpeople connected with the establishment, but the explosion having taken place early in the morning, the full complement of hands had not, fortunately, arrived, or the damage to human life must have been much greater.

Murders and executions are becoming more frequent in England of late.

The Queen Dowager of Oude arrived at Southampton on the 20th, by the Indus. She is accompanied by the brother and son of the ex-King with one hundred and sixty followers. The Queen Dowager is a good looking woman of dark complexion, fifty-five years of age, and very intelligent. She is very sanguine as to the success of her mission to England for the restoration of her son to the throne of Oude. She has £60,000 for current expenses, and lost Jewelry on her voyage worth £50,000. Some portion of it was intended for presents for the Queen of England. The brother of the ex-King is a fine tall man, and is a general in the Oude army. The son of the ex-King is a very handsome youth. They dress in the most magnificent style, their head dresses being covered with diamonds and emeralds. Many of the followers are small, poor looking men, and exceedingly dark. They are shoemakers, tailors, cooks, and of other trades. They worked all day long on board. The cooking apparently never ceased. The Queen of Oude and suite occupied the whole of the fore part of the ship, where a cooking galley was fitted up. The party lived upon rice, curry, sheep and lambs between Alexandria and Southampton. The dishes were usually served up of curries and pillaus. The Queen of Oude occasionally sent into the saloon for the English passengers a curry of pillau, and such dishes were found to be delicious. A eunuch is with the party; he is an extraordinary personage. He has long hair, and a feminine bust and voice. There are six maids of honor in attendance on the Queen every day. A screen was erected on deck, the enclosed part was carpeted, and the Queen and ladies were escorted up behind the screen, and guarded by the eunuch, who behaved with remarkable severity in keeping all persons from gazing on the ladies. He is a general of infantry in the Oude army. Five houses in Regent's park, London, have been taken for the Queen Dowager. One of the party—a moonshee or writer—died on the voyage. He lived for a long time entirely upon opium. It is believed that the box of jewelry which has been said to be lost was stolen. The ex-King of Oude is expected to leave Calcutta shortly for England, with 150 followers. The treasures which the Queen has bought consist chiefly of the most costly Cashmere shawls and jewelry.

Correspondence of Joel M. Berry.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 27, 1856.

PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR:—DEAR BROTHER,—Having a desire that you should know there is such a man living, I embrace the present opportunity of introducing myself to you, and in so doing, will give you a short account of my past life.

I was born in Belmond Co., State of Ohio, in 1832, and spent the most part of my life, till within a few years, in farming occupations. In the spring of 1854 I was taken very ill, with what is called the gold fever; accordingly I started for some of the medicine suited to my case, and on reaching Fort Leavenworth, I found Lieut. Col. Steptoe there, about ready to start (as he said), for California. Requiring a few more teamsters, I engaged with him for the trip. All went on first rate until we arrived at Salt Lake, when we received orders to halt for the winter. Being disappointed in not going straight through, I told him that if he had no objections I would be glad to withdraw my engagement, to which he willingly consented. Not being able to see my way through that fall, I had to content myself for the winter, during which time I began to investigate Mormonism.

Getting a good start, and keeping it, I soon became satisfied of the truth of the work, and on the 3d of March I was baptized, and confirmed a member of the Church of Jesus Christ, of Latter day Saints.

From that time until the 6th of April, 1856, I labored in and for said Church in the Valley. I was called upon to take a mission to my native State; and on the 21st of April took up my line of march, walked across the plains, arrived in St. Louis on the 23d of July, where I met with Bro. E. Snow, who gave me instructions respecting my mission, and on the 30th of July I found myself in Cincinnati. After resting a few days I proceeded to my labors. There are about 150 Saints in this place. Since I have been here I have baptized six, and there is a good prospect for more soon. A good spirit prevails here amongst the Saints.

On the 18th of this month I went out in Delaware county, where I have been successful in baptizing ten persons at one place, and organizing a branch of thirteen members. I have ordained several brethren, and set them to labor in the vineyard. I believe much good can be done in that place and the surrounding country. The house where I preach is crowded full every time; so you see my gold hunt has turned out something like to Peter and Andrew's fishing. I want to bear my testimony to the world, that I know that this is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter day Saints, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and that Brigham Young is his successor. I also believe in the apostles of the last days, and that the work will prevail, because it is true, and I am determined by the help of God, to do all I can in its behalf. I am ready and willing to assist in anything that I can do: praying the blessings of Heaven to attend you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

I remain your brother in the New and everlasting Covenant, JOEL M. BERRY.

Letter from a Pacific Missionary.

HONOLULU, Oahu, Hawaiian Islands, May 2, 1856.

ELDER JOHN TAYLOR—Dear Bro: Knowing that you are desirous of obtaining correct information of the state of the work in different countries, I forward you a copy of the minutes of our last General Conference, by which you will learn something of our situation upon the Sandwich Islands.

The work continues to prosper amidst all difficulties, the Saints are being more firmly established in the faith, and are realizing more fully, than they did at first, the great difference between the Gospel of Christ as taught by our Elders, and the gospels taught by the other missionaries.

We had an excellent conference, all was peace and union. The Elders seemed to enjoy a rich abundance of the spirit of their mission, and separated with strong faith, nerved and invigorated by the spirit of the Lord. Their voices may now be heard from the volcanoes of Hawaii to the shores of Niihau sounding the testimony of the gospel in its fullness as revealed to Joseph Suith the great Prophet of the last dispensation.

Oh! Bro. Taylor, it would do you good, if you could only hear the Sons of the Martyrs and Fathers of the Church who are now on this mission, raising their voices in this strange language in defence of those same principles for which their Fathers have died, and who, although young and inexperienced when they left their mountain home, are now, valiant champions of the truths of the everlasting gospel.

I have been again appointed to Oahu: I shall reside mostly in Honolulu as my engagements will be partially of a secular nature, beside preaching to foreigners in the English language, for which there seems an opening. I continue to enjoy good health as a general thing, and feel greatly blessed in my mission.

Please remember me to Elders Felt and Robbins, and receive for yourself an assurance of my continued love and respect, and believe me as ever, your Brother, JOHN T. CAINE.

P. S. THE MORMON is a welcome visitor to our shores. Please continue my subscription for another year, the means will be forthcoming soon. J. T. C.

[We have received the interesting minutes of the Conference referred to in the above letter, and feel truly grateful to the Lord for the abundant success with which He has crowned the labors of His servants in the Pacific Islands and rejoice in the faithfulness of the Elders who have been sent to labor there.—ED. MORMON.]

FOR THE MORMON.

Purity of Heart.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

What is nobler, what is more beautiful and consonant to the doctrines of Christ, than to remain pure, unspotted before God and man, proving thereby that we have paid the greatest attention to the practical requisitions of a true religious philosophy? Whether being subject to the painful vicissitudes and oscillations of our political, social, and domestic life; whether sitting on the downy couch of a gorgeous palace, surrounded by all the luxuries wealth can command; or whether, as champions of injured innocence, in a gloomy dungeon, with irons clanking round our legs, in the midst of the most degraded wretches, where only the sounds of infamy grate harshly on the ear; always let us be pure in heart, a pattern to our fellow-beings, and then we will realize those harmonious and beneficent effects emanating from that divine principle; to us the memory of the past will be a ray of light, illuminating the inmost chambers of our souls, and filling them with joy and satisfaction. Our life is a reality, not a dream; it is a series of interesting and useful ramblings through a labyrinth of trials and difficulties; it is an ordeal to see whether we are able to withstand the siren attractions and temptation of the world; it is a precurse to higher and nobler fields of intelligence. We are anxious to occupy a prominent position in society by which we can earn fame, estimation and respectability, but beware, oh beware, not to overrun our race and gain the glittering baubles of vanity and ambition on the grave of ruined virtue. That enchanting idol of fortune, gold, power, at the shrine of which the prince and the peasant are bowing their knees, never brings real happiness, when got illegitimately. After a brief season of bewildering enthusiasm, the spell is broken, and the value of the tempting brass is discovered. Let us then not follow those false lights of worldly splendor; they will, like an ignis fatuus, lead us from the right path, till we are lost in the abyss of destruction.

The assurance of being pure in heart, of having done every thing that is compatible with religion and morality, is something that will buoy us up in the midst of the greatest trials, our souls will be serene and calm, and our exit from this sphere of action will be a glorious one. Let us be pure and virtuous, and we are sure to meet the approbation of the better part of society, we will be esteemed and respected on account of our private virtues, however opposed the world may be to our religious views.

We realize by a purity of the mind, blessings to which all the treasures of the earth sink into utter insignificance. Who would exchange the serenity of a pure heart for the agonies of a depraved mind? Who would exchange a happy life in a cottage to a miserable existence in a palace? Echo answers who?

In order to understand better the necessity of cultivating a purity of the mind, we will contrast the movements and results of a pure heart with those of an impure one.

The man who has from his childhood endeavored to remain unspotted, to keep in the path of virtue, will generally appear satisfied and content. His eyes beaming with happiness, he will be well in mind. After the discharge of his every-day duties, he will at home in the midst of his family circle feel at ease and comfortable, no fear nor anxiety will brood over his mind; knowing that he has done his duty, and acknowledging the hand of God in all things, his mind will be settled and prepared to meet every event with the devotion and resignation of a true Christian. He will be the sun or the circle of domestic happiness, the rays of which will make every member of his family light up with satisfaction, contentment, and with a firm determination to follow the pathway of their father. Strife, animosity, and every kind of ill-feeling will have shrunk unnoticed away like the degraded pariah from the midst of a brilliant assembly of Nobles, and only affection, truth, piety, charity and every other emanation of divine principles will spring up in such a family compact, like from a well of living waters, filling the mind with the beautiful and the good, surrounding their humble cottage with a halo of loveliness, encircling their enjoyments with purity and filling thus their souls with unutterable joy and unalloyed happiness. When having retired with his family to rest, no dismal memories, no twinges of conscience will dispel the sweet slumber from his eyes; no frightful dreams, the results of evil thoughts and actions, will haunt his peaceful sleep; in serenity and peace he will enjoy his rest, while angels are watching at his couch and keeping every danger off. Next morning, when the warbling of birds and the humming of bees show that all nature has awakened from its nocturnal rest, the man pure in heart will rise from his bed and join the feathery choir of the air, in singing praise to God for his protecting care during the preceding night. And then, full of life and vigor, he will resume his usual avocation. Thus his life is gliding smoothly and quietly down the stream of time, till the spirit is released out of his earthly prison, and soars into fields of higher intelligence.

The man, however, who has sacrificed all his better feelings, in order to occupy, in his mad career of ambition and power, a place in the temple of fame; who has drunk deeply out of the cup of sins for the purpose of lulling his conscience to sleep, and who has taken possession of the nature of a Satyr, is miserable and wretched. He has to surround himself with hired menials, the companions in his shameful revelries, the partakers of his unprincipled, licentious pleasures. He dares not to be alone, for his better self that lies hushed up in slumber, might arise with fearful reproaches, and therefore he tries to suffocate the voice of reason, religion and morality for ever. Ah, short-sighted wretch! it is only for a time that thou succeedest in suppressing every feeling of rectitude and purity. But the hour comes when the film drops from his eyes, his conscience is awake. Even the mind of the most degraded has a green spot, that, like a little oasis in the desert, is capable of retaining and bringing forth some good. Feelings that have been suppressed for many years bubble up suddenly as it were from the deep, secret well of the inner-man; those feelings become thoughts; the brain being in a fevered whirl, those thoughts assume vivid forms; yes, those persons whom he has ruined seem to rise like avenging furies from out of their graves, out of the womb of oblivion; the unhappy man becomes subject to the greatest terror; wringing his hands, he cries, Do the dead rise out of their sepulchres, do they speak? yes, the dead speak often with a more expressive eloquence than the living; thus a picture of perfect misery, he sees the yawning gulf of destruction, and tries to atone for his former sins. The agony of his soul causes him to fall on his knees and invoke the mercy of Him whom he had so long forgotten. He exclaims with the despair of a drowning man, who tries to save himself by grasping a floating stalk of straw, "Give me back my innocence, restore the purity of my mind; I am willing to part with all the wealth I possess, and to undergo every punishment Thou thinkest proper; but let me once more realize the happiness of guiltless childhood, enable me to look with new hope in the future and with satisfaction at the past."

From the above illustration we see the advantages of cultivating a purity of the mind, in order to realize that happiness which the Creator has assigned to every intelligent being. As remarked above, there is no mind so depraved, no heart so adamantine, but what has a sensitive spot, an untouched chord of its better self, that when touched at a right time and by the proper person, may bring back the outcast to the path of virtue; therefore it behoves us to exert ourselves in our intercourse with men to throw a good, salutary influence around us, to try to find the untouched chord of the heart of him who has fallen, and to endeavor to arouse him from his state of degradation. In order to prevent the youthful mind from becoming corrupted by the blasting atmosphere of loose morals, the young should be carefully guarded against every impure principle, and habituated to scan everything either by themselves or with the assistance of wise, experienced mentors, and thus ascertain its true value before admitting it as a truth. The young ought to be early trained to the proper use of their intellect, that they be accustomed to entertain clear and well-defined ideas on every thing coming within the reach of their observation—that they feel the importance of prosecuting truth and purity of mind—that they understand that the light of nature and the dictates of revelation both conspire to prove the eternal destiny of mankind—that both appeal forcibly to our hearts and minds, not to have the folly and infatuation of those who prosecute with the greatest avidity every trivial object, who set the merest trifles in competition with happiness and misery, that is the natural result of a wise or imprudent conduct through the multifarious scenes of this life.

History has recorded the names of those whose impure minds produced by degrees the most baleful, the most pernicious effects, both upon themselves and everyone moving within the sphere of their existence. The characters of such persons as Tiberius, Caligula, Nero, Hamillcar, Epiphanes, Lucrezia Borgia, Tamerlane and others, show that the first impure impulse in actions may often be the connecting link of an endless series of the most revolting crimes; in fact, it may lead to destruction. As the mind, by proper training is capable of improvement and refinement, so also is it liable to a retrogression in morals, through the effects of an impure atmosphere. Individuals having such diabolical passions, often bring the greatest misery upon the human family, till an overruling providence sets restraining bounds to their fiendish actions.

Let us then strictly avoid the indulgence or cultivation of an impurity of the mind, and always remember that when once deviated from the path of virtue, man is often lost in the abyss of destruction.

Scene on Board the Hudson Steamer Isaac Newton.

ON Thursday evening, shortly after the steamer Isaac Newton filled with passengers previous to starting from Albany for New York, some noisy persons took up a position in the saloon on the stateroom deck, and began to talk and discuss, in loud tones, such subjects as spiritualism, the Christian miracles, &c. The most prominent disputants were Mr. Prince, of Flushing, and a talkative Irishman. After a while—the boat still lying at her dock—it was discovered that Governor Reeder, of Kansas, was on board, and the noisy persons aforesaid set up a loud cry for him. He accordingly rose upon a chair, and began to make a speech on the wrongs of Kansas. As he was proceeding, some gentlemen rose and protested against the noise, as they had wives and children, some of them in ill health, in close proximity to this turbulent crowd. A policeman, even, was procured from Albany, and repeated appeals were made to the captain and officers of the vessel by the quiet persons who were inconvenienced by these riotous proceedings. But neither policeman, captain, nor officers made any effective interference, and the Governor held steadily on his way, setting forth the shocking character of the Missourians, the beautiful resignation of the men of Kansas, the heroic fortitude of the free State men, &c., &c. He was frequently interrupted. Mr. Prince assailed him on various occasions, and there was a good deal of Tammany Hall fencing between them. An Irishman, the same who had insisted on talking with Prince, became very violent and abusive. Some Yankees proposed to eject him, but a man, seemingly from Missouri, and with the appearance of a butcher, volunteered to protect him, and for some ten minutes there was a fair prospect of a row. After speaking some thirty minutes Gov. Reeder gave way, and Mr. Prince mounted the chair. Directly he began to speak, Gov. Reeder made a dash at him and for the chair; a scuffle followed, during which both Reeder and Prince were seen together on the chair, and the noise of groans and shouts, hisses, cheers and laughter was infernal. After a time Reeder was knocked off the chair. He then made a charge to fight his antagonist with his fists; but was fortunately arrested in midway. He then withdrew to an other part of the saloon, where he prepared for a second speech. Meanwhile Prince was continuing to lecture amid a chorus of noises that would have waked the dead, while the father of the sick children, and the husbands of one or two ladies in ill health, were going about imploring some one to stop the riot and remove the meeting a little further off. When Reeder's preparations were made, he began to speak again, to ask money for Kansas. The father of the sick children went to him and entreated him to remove to the forward cabin, but he was understood to say that he must have "his contribution," and accordingly spoke for some minutes longer, making his audience roar, and stamp and shout. After him Professor Daniels, of Wisconsin, also made a speech; while the Southerners around were asking the audience if any one would fight them, and the Irishman was shouting hurrah for Buke and Breck!—[*N. Thirty-Fourth Congress.—Extra Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28, 1856.

Mr. Crittenden asked leave to introduce the bill of which he gave notice on Wednesday, to amend the act of 1854, organizing the territories of Nebraska and Kansas. He explained its various provisions and made remarks on the general subject, wipeing down the Kansas agitators.

Mr. Hunter, from the Committee of Conference on the Army bill, reported that they had been unable to agree, and as he saw no prospect of any agreement unless the Senate would consent to admit abnoxious legislation with regard to Kansas, which they would never do, he moved the Senate adhere to its disagreement.

Messrs. Wilson and Crittenden had some warm words about telegraphic dispatches being used in the Senate to create excitement, while instead of coming from Kansas, they were manufactured in Missouri to suit the occasion.

Senators Seward, Cass and others spoke on the Army bill and Kansas as usual.

Mr. Bell, of Tenn., obtained the floor, when the Senate, without any question being taken, adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Clingman called attention to the fact that the Senate had passed a joint resolution relative to the return of the ship Resolute to the British Government, abandoned in the Polar Seas by her crew while in search of Sir John Franklin, and brought to the United States by the whale-ship George Henry. The English papers, he said, were complimenting us on our liberality, and he thought no gentleman would object to passing the resolution.

After some little opposition, the resolution was passed.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, from the Commitee of Conference on the disagreeing amendments to the Army bill, said they had met, and after a full and free Conference had come to no conclusion. The trouble, it was well known, grew out of the condition of things with reference to Kansas.

The House adhered to its own amendment proposing to restrict the operations of the army, and providing that no portion of the money to be expended in Kansas shall be employed to enforce the territorial legislature.

After passing some hours in the usual talk, the House adjourned.

SENATE. Aug. 29.

The question was stated to be on the motion of Mr. Hunter, namely—to adhere to the disagreement on the Army bill. Agreed to by yeas 32, nays 4.

Mr. Houston presented a memorial from the Legislature of Texas, on behalf of Judge Terry, who was now held in custody by the San Francisco Vigilance Committee, praying that if the Federal Government in Congress can consistently interfere in his behalf, that it may be done. Mr. H. said that Terry had migrated from Texas, and the folks there sympathised with him in his present position, as he had ever borne a high character as an honorable man, and was an ornament to the community.

Mr. Brown spoke highly of the Judge, which led on to a conversation about the Vigilance Committee, and what the President might do to suppress it.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of Mr. Crittenden's bill to alter and amend the Kansas-Nebraska act.

Mr. Bell, of Tenn., spoke on the general subject of affairs in Kansas, and the various measures which had been brought and failed to accomplish good, and hoped that if the President had not enough of power, to give him enough, and not remain in the present imbecile position. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Barclay moved that the House adjourn on Tuesday next. The motion was negatived by 72 majority.

A message was received from the Senate, stating that they adhere to the disagreement on the amendment to the Army bill.

A motion to adjourn on Monday was then voted down.

Mr. Orr asked leave to introduce the Army bill.

Messrs. Grow and others objected.

Motions were then made to adjourn on Monday and on Tuesday, but were disagreed to by yea and nay votes.

Mr. Haven hoped the House, instead of trifling in this way, would resolve itself into Committee and go to work like men. [Cries of "agreed," and "good."]

Ineffectual motions were again made to adjourn over, but it was finally agreed to adjourn until to-morrow by two majority. Adjourned.

SENATE. Aug. 30.

On motion of Mr. Clay, of Ala., a resolution was adopted requiring the Secretary of the Interior to report next session the amount required to pay the allowances proposed by the House bill, providing for the settlement of the claims of the officers of the Revolutionary army, and of the widows and children of those who died in the service.

Mr. Houston, of Texas, spoke of the present crisis, and was opposed as a member of the American party, to all agitations that would endanger the peace of the country, or threaten the prosperity of the Union.

A message was received from the House, informing the Senate of the passage of the Army bill, which, having been taken up on motion of Mr. Hunter, the Senate struck out the proviso attached to it by yeas 26; nays 7.

The bill was then passed.

A vote of thanks to the President pro tem. was then unanimously adopted, and the usual Committee appointed to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that Congress was ready to adjourn.

The Committee subsequently reported that the President had no further communication to make, when the Senate adjourned sine die.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, obtained unanimous consent to report, by direction to the Committee of Ways and Means, a bill making appropriations for the army. He said it was the old Army bill with the following proviso: That no part of the military force of the United States, for the support of which appropriations are made by this act, shall be employed in aid of the enforcement of any enactment heretofore passed in the bodies claiming to be the Territorial Legislature of Kansas.

Mr. Campbell demanded the previous question.

Mr. Cobb, of Ga., appealed to Mr. Campbell to allow him to make a motion to strike out the proviso, in order that the sense of the House be taken on that question, and then act on the passage of the bill, whether the motion be successful or not.

Cries of "That's right!" "That's right!"

Mr. Davis, of Md., desired a test vote on a proposition he wished to offer.

Mr. Campbell refused to withdraw his demand for the previous question.

Mr. Stephens, of Ga., after saying that there were gentlemen absent who did not expect that a vote would be taken so soon, moved a call of the House.

Motion agreed to. One hundred and ninety-eight members answered to their names.

The doors were then closed to hear excuses for absentees.

The bill then passed, as originally reported, by a vote of 99 against 79.

On motion of Mr. Benson, of Me., the House took up and passed the Senate joint resolution authorizing the acceptance of gold medals by Surgeons Williams and Harrison, from the Emperor of France; by Lieut. Maury, from Prussia, Holland and Bremen, and by Prof. Bache, from Sweden; also permitting Dr. Kane and the officers connected with him in the Arctic expedition to accept testimonials of respect from the British Government.

A message was then received from the Senate, returning the Army bill, with an amendment striking out the proviso.

The House, under the operation of the previous question, then concurred in the Senate's amendment striking out the proviso, by yeas, 101; nays, 98.

The Senate bill fixing the time for the electioon in Delaware of a Representative to Congress, was passed.

A message was here received from the President that he had signed the Army bill.

Mr. Grow, of Pa., offered a resolution that the President be respectfully requested to direct the District Attorney for the Territory of Kansas to apply to the proper Court for leave to enter a nolle prosequi on all the indictments now pending for treason, or any other political offense alleged to have been committed in that Territory.

The question on this resolution was defeated by calling the yeas and nays on a motion to adjourn until the time concurrently fixed for the termination of the session, 3 1-2 o'clock, when the Speaker declared the House adjourned, sine die, before the Committee to wait on the President reported.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Destruction of a Town by Fire.

The St. Louis (Mo.) Republican, of the 23d inst., says that Griswold City, located on the Missouri river, one hundred miles from St. Louis, was destroyed by fire on the night of the 20th. The fire commenced on Water street and continued its course to Washington street. The City Hotel, owned by John Summers, was consumed. The loss of property is unknown; there was no insurance on any of it. The fire is supposed to have been committed by an incendiary.

Discharge of Artisans from Arsenals.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 29, 1856.

One hundred and twenty artisans were discharged at the Alleghany Arsenals to-day. There was considerable excitement in Lawrenceville in consequence.

BOSTON, Aug. 30, 1856.

By an order received from Washington, the employees in the United States Arsenal at Watertown were discharged to day from further employment.

Burning of a Steamboat.

PROVIDENCE, Aug. 31, 1856.

The new steamboat "New Clifton," which was intended to run between Bristol and Newport, was found to be on fire on Saturday evening, at Warren. The fire was extinguished with a loss of about two thousand dollars. She belongs to Capt. Albert De Groot, of New York.

Gov. Geary en route for Kansas.

HARRISBURGH, Aug. 29, 1856.

Gov. Geary, who has been here for the past two days, left at noon for Greensburg, Pa., and Kansas direct.

MARRIED.

AT Haverstraw, Rockland county, N. Y., Aug. 31st, by Elder John Taylor, MR. GEORGE HAMILTON TAYLOR and MISS ANGVIS ELMIRA SHEPARD.

Hon. George Smith, Judge Appleby, Elders John and Henry Droce, Elder Hunt, and other friends were present at the ceremony, and passed the evening with the happy young folks. May long life, prosperity and the rich blessing of heaven be their heritage.

United States Mails Salt Lake City.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, MAY 31, 1856.

PROPOSALS for conveying the mails of the United States from the first day of December, 1856, to the 30th day of November, 1860, on the following route, will be received at the Contract Office of this Department until 9 A. M. of the 15th of October, 1856, to be decided the next day, to wit:

No. 8911 From Independence, (Mo.) via Fort Kearney and Fort Laramie, in Nebraska Territory, to Salt Lake City, in Utah Territory, 1,150 miles and back, once a month.

Leave Independence the first day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Salt Lake City on the last day of the month at 8 a m;

Leave Salt Lake City on the second day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Independence by the last day of the month.

NOTES.

Bidders are required to inform themselves of the actual distance, the weight and bulk of the mails to be carried (the whole mail required to be taken each trip,) and all other points essential to a correct understanding of their liability for the proper performance of the required service, before making their proposals, which must be guarantied by two responsible persons, certified to as such by a postmaster or judge of a court of record; and contract must be entered into by the successful bidder, with surety, before the 1st day of December, 1856.

No pay will be made for trips not performed, and for each of such omissions not satisfactorily explained three times the pay of the trip may be deducted. For arrivals so far behind time as to break connexion with depending mails, and not sufficiently excused, one fourth of the compensation for the trip is subject to forfeiture. Fines will be imposed, unless the delinquency be promptly and satisfactorily explained, for neglecting to take the mail from or into a post office; for suffering it to be injured, destroyed, robbed, or lost; and for refusing, after demand, to convey the mail as frequently as the contractor runs, or is concerned in running, vehicles on the route. The Postmaster-General may annul the contract for repeated failures to run agreeably to contract, or for disobeying the post office laws or instructions of the Department. The Post master-General may alter the schedule; he may also order an increase of service by allowing therefor a pro rata increase on the contract pay; he may also curtail or discontinue the service in whole or in part, at pro rata decrease of pay, allowing one month's extra compensation on the amount of service dispensed with. Bids should be addressed to the "Second Assistant Postmaster General," superscribed "Proposals for Salt Lake City Mails." JAMES CAMPBELL, Postmaster General.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Évangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immergé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion; les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lascivité, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

A Child Praying.

SELECTED.

Fold thy little hands in prayer;
Bow down at thy mother's knee;
Now thy sunny face is fair,
Shining through thy auburn hair;
Thine eyes are passion-free:
And pleasant thoughts, like garlands, bind thee
Unto thine home, yet grief may find thee—
Then pray, child, pray!

Now, thy young heart, like a bird,
Warbles in its summer nest;
No evil thought, no unkind word,
No chilling autumn winds have stirred
The beauty of thy rest:
But winter hastens, and decay
Shall waste thy verdant home away—
Then pray, child, pray!

Thy bosom is a house of glee,
With gladness harping at the door;
While ever, with a joyous shout,
Hope, the May Queen, dances out.
Her lips with music running o'er;
But time those strings of joy will sever,
And Hope will not dance on for ever—
Then pray, child, pray!

Now, thy mother's arms are spread,
Beneath thy pillow in the night;
And loving feet creep round thy bed,
And o'er thy quiet face is shed
The taper's darkened light:
But that fond arm will pass away,
By thee no more those feet will stay—
Then pray, child, pray!

CELEBRATION OF JULY FOURTH AND Grand Military Review, IN GREAT SALT LAKE CITY,

UNDER THE DIRECTION OF

F. C. LITTLE, I. W. HARDY, R. T. BURTON,
C. W. RICHARDS, H. S. ELDREDGE, W. EDDINGTON,
W. H. HOOPER, WM. BELL, A. M. RALEIGH,
Committee of Arrangements.

ORDER AND PROCEEDINGS OF THE DAY.

At sunrise, the stillness of the morning was broken by firing a national salute of 13 guns from the arsenal, which was the signal for ringing of bells and hoisting of flags.

The mammouth United States flag was hoisted upon Temple Block, under the direction of A. N. Hill, Esq., and flags were displayed from the cupola of Gov. Young's residence, at Livingston, Kinkead & Co's, Hooper & Williams,' Gilbert & Gerrish's, and the Church Stores, Townsend's and Wilkin's Hotels, and White-house's Shop, together with a great variety of banners and mottoes at the different stores and private residences.

The cannon were in charge of Capt. Cowan, and the ringing of the several bells was under the direction of Hon. Nathan Davis.

The bands, under the direction of Major William Pitt, played at the residences of Gov. Young, Hon. H. C. Kimball and Lt. Gen. D. H. Wells; after which the Nauvoo Brass Band, mounted, and Ballo's and Martial Bands, in omnibusses, passed through the principal streets discoursing beautiful and harmonious strains of music, indicating to the citizens that the anniversary of American Independence was to be celebrated with joy and thanksgiving.

At 7 o'clock the legion paraded upon Union Square; tents were pitched and lines formed. The Infantry and artillery's tents occupied the north side of the Square, the batallion of Life Guards and a portion of the Cavalry tents the west, and another portion of the Cavalry tents the east; the marquees of the General, Field, and Staff officers graced the ground west of the Grand Stand, and the tents of the Committee of Arrangements were located directly on the right and left of the Stand, which was on the south side of the Square. The Stand was commodious and beautifully decorated with flags, banners, mottoes, and evergreens, arranged with the well known taste of Adjutant W. Eddington, with the figures 1776 over the entrance. The many banners floating in the breeze from the tops of the tents surrounding the Square, lent their enchantment to the scene, and inspired with the spirit of liberty and national Independence.

At 8 o'clock, the Staff of the Lt. General, the Staff of the Major General, accompanied by the Committee of Arrangements, mounted, formed in front of Lt. Gen. D. H. Wells, residence.

At 8 1-2 o'clock, the Escort of the Lt. General was formed, consisting of the Martial Band and one company of mounted Lancers, under the directicton of Brevt. Adjt. Gen. H. B. Clawson.

At a quarter before 9, the Lt. General was received, and with the Escort moved to the parade ground.

On their arrival, there was a simultaneous firing of cannon from the artillery, which occupied the right and left wing of the line. The troops were in motion, performing military evolutions under the command of Brig. Gen. H. S. Eldredge.

At 9, the line was re-formed, the Lt. General taking command of the Legion.

The guard was mounted and posted, under direction of Capt. N. V. Jones of the batallion of Life Guards.

The Escort was then formed under the direction and command of Col. J. C. Little, Marshall of the day, assisted by Col. L. W. Hardy and Maj. R. T. Burton, in the following order:

1. Band Colors.
2. Nauvoo Brass Band, mounted.
3. Company of Life Guards, commanded by Capt. N. V. Jones.
4. Capt. S. B. Hardy's Rifle company.
5. Two companies of Light Infantry, commanded by Capts. Lutz and Wilkin.
6. Capt. Ballo's Band.
7. Committee of Arrangements.
8. Company of Life Guards, commanded by Capt. Lot Smith.

Adj. Gen. H. B. Clawson and Gen. A. P. Rockwood of the Lt. General's Staff, assisted in detailing the several companies for the Escort. Through the politeness of Gen. Wells, his flag and a portion of his Staff were sent to accompany the Committee of Arrangements in the Escort, and be present at the reception of the Governor and Suite. He also detailed ten mounted Lancers to clear the streets in advance of the Escort.

At 9 1-2 o'clock the Escort moved to the Council House, where the Civil Officers, preceded by the Municipal banner, carried by six young men in uniform dress, took their place in the Escort, directly in front of the rear company of Life Guards.

The Escort then moved south on East Temple street one block, thence east one block, and North one block to the Governor's residence and formed in line, where the Governor, his Suite and other invited guests, among whom were Hon. H. C. Kimball, Hon. Amasa Lyman, Col. Wilford Woodruff, Hon. P. P. Pratt, Hon. Edward Hunter, Hon. G. P. Stiles—Associate Justice of the U. S. S. Court, and Gen. D. H. Burr—U. S. Surveyor General for Utah, were received by the Committee of Arrangements with firing of cannon, and music by the bands, and took seats in carriages provided for the occasion. His Excellency rode in a barouche, drawn by a pair of milk-white horses, driven by Mr. F. Little. The Escort resumed their places and moved in column to the Parade Ground.

On the arrival of the head of the column the Artillery continued firing and the bands playing until the Governor and Suite took their seats upon the Grand Stand, accompanied by the Civil Officers and members of the High Council.

The Escort immediately took their respective positions in the line.

The Legion was then formed in column of divisions in front of their stand, extending wings on the right and left; the battalion of Life Guards and Cavalry in the rear of the Infantry; the General, Field and Staff Officers, and music in front.

Messrs. G. D. Watt and J. V. Long—Reporters, occupied seats upon the Stand.

Ceremonies were opened with prayer by the Legion Chaplain—Col. W. Woodruff.

The Constitution of the United States was presented by B. Snow, Esq., and read by T. Bullock, Military Secretary, followed by three cheers from the troops and assembled multitude, a roll of drums and music by Capt. Ballo's band.

Gov. Young presented his oration, which was read by T. Bullock.

ORATION BY HIS EXCELLENCY GOVERNOR YOUNG.

Brethren and Friends: Eighty years ago, on the day we now celebrate, our forefathers, few in number but strong in their united love of right, declared to the mother country and the world that they were, "and of right, ought to be, free and independent." The oppression which hastened this declaration, the long struggle, the sacrifices and hardships which followed, and the glorious results are so generally known, that I need not task your patience by rehearsing them on this occasion. You are also aware that integrity, patriotism, and enlightened policy long marked the course of our Government. Our rulers studiously sought the best interests of the people, and they, in turn, sustained their rulers by yielding a cheerful obedience to wholesome laws. But we are now in a position well derserving the serious consideration of every lover of freedom.

Again, to avoid the repetition of what you have so often heard, the Constitution of the United States has been read in lieu of the Declaration. This course will also better prepare your minds for contrasting many of the political movements of the day, with the guiding principles contained in that inspired governmental system so worthy of our admiration and support.

Glancing at the past, perhaps we as a people, have more reason to respect, honor, love and cherish the Government of the United States, her Constitution and free institutions, than any other people upon the face of the earth; but it is lamentable that professed statesmen should so far deviate from wise and correct principles of Republican Government, as to fail of being entitled to that respect and confidence which ought to be deserved by those entrusted with its administration. In this connection, permit the reflection as to what favorable action we are indebted for our existence as a people. To what casual circumstance can be attributed the assemblage of this vast concourse for the purpose of celebrating the anniversary of so memorable a day, upon this isolated spot where, but nine years past, solitude reigned unbroken, save by the music of the elements, the cries of wild beasts and untutored sounds of the still more savage red men? What cause has awakened to life and civilized improvement these desert plains—these barren wastes? We exist and are sustained by the protecting power of Almighty God, amid the constant and fierce opposition of those who seem unwilling to recognize his right to rule upon this planet of his own creation.

We live through the blessings of the Almighty, and by his providences we have nourished and sustained ourselves; we are willing to continue so to do. We came here to be free from oppression and mobocracy, and we do not wish such characters to follow us, or to tarry in our midst. But we say to all lovers of freedom, virtue and good order, in every land, you are welcome, for you will respect our rights, our laws and the legitimate obligations of our Republican Government.

We know how to repel aggravated insolence, how to tear off the mask of hypocrisy and expose the imbecility and corruption preying upon the vitals of the body politic, and how to thwart the deadly malice aimed to destroy our free institutions, whether emanating from secret enemies in our midst, or from foes without. Jesus said, "He that is not for me is against me; he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad."

We are occupying a region well known as being peculiarly undesireable, and one hitherto unsettled by the whites, since the days of Christopher Columbus. We are almost a thousand miles from the nearest seaport. We are hemmed in by lofty mountains on nearly every side, while numerous isolated ranges and barren, arid plains, so crowd our surface, that but a small portion is at all suited to the purposes of settlement. In even those narrow localities, ditches and canals have to be made by much labor, in order to irrigate a soil whereon rain seldom falls from early spring until late in autumn. And when all has been done, that as yet could be, towards supplying the thirsty crops, the husbandman is oft compelled to witness the products of his toil, droop and die ere maturity, through the failure of the few small streams so laboriously brought under control. Grasshoppers and other insects swarm in myriads to devour what may have escaped the drouth, and the severe storms of winter complete the destruction of animals struggling to subsist upon herbage which has been so effectually cut off. But amid all these disadvantages, unendurable by any other people, we are still striving to extend the area of freedom, and to gladden the most uninviting domain of a great nation with the blessings and privileges of her free institutions.

It is obvious that no person comes here because he prefers this country. None but sinister or pecuniary motives can prompt those who are not of us to abide in our midst. All other localities have more tempting facilities for the pursuits of the agriculturist, the artisan, the trader, and, more especially, the lawyer and politician.

If this people should leave these sequestered vales, they would soon revert to their former waste condition; silence would again assert her supremacy. The country suits us, merely because no other well-informed people can covet its possession. If they do, it is because they grudge us an existence upon any part of God's footstool. There is nothing here, except what is produced by the most arduous toil, and that often unrequited, to tempt the avarice or cupidity of any reasonable creature. It is useless therefore, for official cliques, who never have identified their interests with the welfare of this Territory, and who never intend to, to seek to dictate, govern and control us.

In view of these facts, we fondly anticipate soon seeing the day when, in accordance with the spirit and intent of our Republican Government, we shall be blessed with the full enjoyment of our rights, and have the privilege of electing officers of our own choice, and be freed from the imposition of those known to be unsolicited and unsought upon our part, and who feel no interest in our prosperity, but would much rather see us languish and come to naught.

Statesmen should consider that a free people may be goaded to desperation, and that intelligent beings are easier led than driven. It is the act of tyranical governments to establish a system of espionage, appointments and military rule, which were among the causes hastening the Declaration of Independence of these United States. Let not the Federal Government presume upon the same suicidal policy, but rather, by taking an honorable, just and upright course, conciliate the people and extend to them the rich blessings of a free Government. Men may succeed in attaining office and power, and rule with a rod of iron, instead of being fathers to the people. This should not be, for rulers ought to be as fathers in regard to the welfare of the community, and be careful to grant and guard every right, if they expect or desire to have a dutiful, law-abiding society.

Let it ever be remembered that ours is a Government long cherished as an asylum for the oppressed, to whose borders were invited the poor and down-trodden races from every nation, from under every clime. Here they could bask in the sunshine of liberty and be protected in their natural rights. The broad prairies and uncultivated wilds beckoned them to come and inhabit and draw sustenance from her prolific bosom.

Painful indeed is the reflection that, while nature yet smiles and showers her bounties upon a domain so favored and extensive, while yet it has the sun, the rain, the dew, to gladden, warm, nourish and invigorate, while yet vast solitudes yearn for the peaceful hand of civilized cultivation, while the nation's canvass whitens every sea, and High Heaven smiles upon her rapid progress still onward and upward to a destiny yet unfulfilled, to a greatness and power unknown, save to that Supreme Being who sits enthroned in yonder heavens—a nation in the enjoyment of all these and a thousand other blessings, blest with liberty and a full fruition of the benefits arising therefrom, with a Republican form of Government which has come down to us an invaluable legacy, sealed with the blood of our fathers, cemented by thousands of tender recollections and endeared by the ties of kindred and with the yet green graves of an honored and patriotic ancestry around us, whose counsels and examples are still fresh in our memories—should so soon forget to be brethren of one grand confederacy and seek to spill each other's blood.

How long suppose ye, will the Great Ruler of our destiny hold the nation as in the hollow of his hand, while the crimson gore of unnatural and fratricidal butchery floods the land and arises in smoking incense, a most damning testimony against it? Where shall we look, in this our day, for those great and ennobling deeds of deathless fame, which in times past have adorned the pathway of our illustrious sires? Not in the west, where the Spaniard, the Chilian, the Chinaman and the Indian may be shot down like the prowling wolves, and where murder at high noon comes an unbidden though not an unwelcome guest. Not in Kansas, where should-be-brethren are hastening to cut each others' throats. Nor yet in Missouri, where cloven-footed and hydra-headed mobocracy hold her fearful orgies. Let the diminished greatness of her thirty years leader, expounder and exponent, be a lesson to her would-be-great men not to follow in footsteps that fall so low, not to exercise an influence to destroy the innocent, nor to lend powerful aid to screen the guilty who break, abrogate and set at defiance all law and order, with a view to carry out their own wicked, selfish and disloyal purposes. Not in Washington, where the bludgeon, the deadly missle and revolver disgrace the hands of so-called honorable members, not only of the more popular branch, but also of the high, grave and dignified body, the Senate of the United States. Not where sordid ambition, political knavery, swindling and governmental stock-jobbing have grown gray in service, and where the cesspool of political pollution sends forth its foul streams to stench and corrupt the fairest domain, the richest heritage ever vouchsafed to man.

Who shall cleanse the Augean stables? Who shall go in with the scourge of small cords, upset the tables of the money changers, and clear the temple of those characters who are gambling away our freedom? Is there still left with the people virtue and power sufficient to dry up these sources of foul corruption, and will they do it?—or will they contribute to still swell the streams until it shall overwhelm and subvert the liberties of our country?

Here let us pause, and consider the true principles of a Republican Government. It is and can be based only in a high tone and sense of honor, liberal, enlightened, intelligent and extended views of human existence and progress, and a faithful, unyielding, rigid and patriotic adherence to the Constitution and laws of the country. The least departure from these principles, the least disregard to law, manifested and exercised by the people in their sovereign capacity, and we have the worst of all despotisms, a hundred, a thousand tyrants instead of one. Public security fails, and there remains no safety for life, liberty, or the pursuit of happiness; anarchy, confusion, infuriated and maddened excitement rule supreme.

I ask the people of this great Republic, in all sincerity, these questions: Can you see that the country is fast verging into the vortex of anarchy and confusion in consequence of a disregard of the obligations of society in the support of the laws and Constitution? Can you realize a departure from true devotion and strict adherence to the principles of our Government and her free institutions, the land-marks of the fathers, and discern where it commenced, and where it will most likely end? Our Government and institutions, her Constitution and laws, admit of no private interpretation, but must be taken, administered, observed and sustained in their most obvious meaning and general sense, and this should be done by all. Neither partisan nor private feeling, nor sectional strife and contentions, should be permitted to thwart the enlightened and conservative policy of the Government. At the same time that policy should be just and liberal, and commensurate with the laudable desires and requirements of a great and mighty people.

Let her plans be taken, not to subserve party purposes for private emolument, but for the public good. Commingling not in domestic feuds or foreign influences, let her steadily progress in the march of improvement and patriotism and the arts and sciences; and, corresponding with a great and pacific policy, open and extend channels of trade and commerce, and provide with a liberal hand for the development of her vast internal resources by affording to her most distant States and Territories railroad facilities, magnetic telegraphs, and such other useful and important helps as shall be conducive to the public interests.

Let her millions of broad acres, now lying waste and useless, be given to the needy for cultivation and use. Let the poor Indians be taught the arts of civilization, and be learned to draw their sustenance from the ample and sure resources of mother earth, and to follow the peaceful avocations of the tiller of the soil, raising grain and stock for a subsistence, instead of pursuing the uncertain chances of war and game for a livelihood. I have often said, and repeat it now, let them be surrounded by a peaceful and friendly influence, and a humane and benevolent policy. Thus will they be redeemed from their low estate, and advanced in the scale of civilized and intellectual existence, and this Government and her citizens be released from the curse of having wasted and destroyed them from the face of the earth.

These are a few of the topics which, in my humble opinion, should engage the attention of the Government, in order to ensure peace and confidence at home and respect abroad. Justice, immaculate justice, pure and clear as the noon-day sun, should characterize her every act, at home and abroad, and prompt and energetic redress of grievances should be fearlessly awarded. Virtue and integrity should characterize her officers and rulers, and when a good, wise and pure-minded man is found in the chair of State, let him be returned so long as he is willing to serve his country, regardless of party clamor or past usage. Men of large and comprehensive minds, who have proved themselves capable, pure and patriotic, are what we need, and when we get such, no matter in what party they are found, we should keep them in office for the good of the country, and cease this senseless twaddle about rotation in office, and "to the victors belong the spoils," for these are arguments of demagogues, who make merchandise of their country's liberties for self aggrandizement.

A pure patriot is willing to serve his country without reward or compensation, save the affections of a grateful people. Salaries should be in a great measure abolished to prevent office seeking and preserve purity at the ballot box.

A Republican Government, such as ours purports to be, is capable of receiving and giving law to the inhabitants of half the world, with soil enough to sustain them, of drawing from every nation, kindred, tongue and people and binding them together in one common brotherhood, as were the hearts of David and Jonathan.

When you see discord and strife engendered in your midst, then know that the principles of justice and good Government are perverted, for all of every degree, high and low, rich and poor, should be protected in the full and complete enjoyment of all the liberties, rights and privileges which they have received from the hand of their Creator, subject only, in the formation of society, to one restriction, not to infringe upon the rights of each other.

While, therefore, we cheer the Constitution and celebrate the birthday of our national freedom, let us remember that the perpetuity of our free institutions, yea, the Constitution and Government itself, depends upon the intelligence, virtue, integrity and patriotism of the people, in the selection of such men for office as will sustain and uphold these principles, and not subvert them, and in extending to all, with due courtesy to each other, their native, their inalienable rights, among which are "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

Nine rounds of cannon echoed the response to the spirit and sentiments of the Oration.

Toasts being called for, several were presented.

At the close of the ceremonies from the stand, the lines were again formed by command of the Lieut. General, and retired to the north side of the square, where the companies were dismissed for fifteen minutes, and retired to their respective tents, to partake of refreshments provided for the occasion.

The occupants of the stand were served during the recess, with ice-cream and other palatable refreshments, furnished from the Committee's tents, under the superintendence of Mr. W. C. Staines.

At the sound of the bugle the troops resumed their position in line, and at command of the Lieut. General marched in column around the square, and were reviewed by His Excellency the Governor and his suite; the bands playing while the column was in motion.

The lines were again formed on the north side of the square preparatory to performing military evolutions, as follows:

1. The Legion advanced in direct echelons of companies, from the right, at distance.
2. Deployed into line upon the front company of each regiment.
3. Formed quarter distance column in rear of the right company of each regiment.
4. Columns retire, halt and front.
5. Formed into line upon the front company of each regiment.
6. Line advances, the front covered by the two flank companies as skirmishers, supported by two reserve companies, and halts.
7. The line retires under cover of artillery, halts and fronts.
8. The Guards make a grand charge and clear the front.

The foregoing evolutions were performed in a manner highly satisfactory and creditable to both officers and men. The grand charge made by the Guards, under command of Major R. T. Burton, would have done credit to more experienced troops.

At 2 o'clock, at the sound of the bugle, the escort was reformed under the direction of the Marshal of the day, and the Legion formed in procession after the following order:

1. Band colors.
2. Martial Band.
3. Lieutenant General and Staff.
4. Company of Cavalry; commanded by Lieut. Z. Pulsipher.
5. Regimental colors.
6. First regiment of Infantry; commanded by Col. H. Herriman.
7. Artillery.
8. Company of Lancers; commanded by Capt. H. B. Clawson.
9. Regimental colors.
10. Second regiment of Infantry; commanded by Lieut. Col. H. Burgess.
11. Escort with Governor and Suite.
12. Regimental colors.
13. Third regiment of Infantry; commanded by Col. D. J. Ross.
14. Artillery.
15. First Regiment of Cavalry; commanded by Lieut. Col. T. Collister.

The procession moved through Third West Temple street, Emigration street, and passed up East Temple street in open order.

On arriving at the Council House, that portion of the procession in advance of the escort halted, while third regiment of Infantry and first regiment of Cavalry, marching at double quick time upon the right and left, covered the escort, which passed through the lines to the Governor's Mansion, under fire of a cannon, a volley of musketry, and music by the bands. The lines closed immediately upon the rear of the escort, which, after the Governor and suite had retired, returned to the parade ground, where the escort was dismissed by the Marshal of the day, to resume their position in the lines.

The Legion occupying their position upon the ground, the committee of arrangements advanced and tendered their thanks to Lieut. Gen. Wells for the aid and assistance so promptly rendered by the Legion, under his command, in carrying out the arrangements of the day.

The Committee received a very gratifying and satisfactory response from the Lieut. General, and retired.

The Legion were dismissed by the Lieut. General, into the hands of the several commandants, and were soon after regaling themselves upon the plentiful repast which had been furnished in their respective company tents.

The Committee of Arrangements, through the generous aid of the county and city, distributed to the Legion about 3000 lbs. of excellent beef, to aid their dinner arrangements.

The Life Guards and other companies of the Legion were upon the ground during the night of the 3d with their tents and camp equipage, and were well supplied with many of the dainties of the mountains, which were truly inviting to more than themselves.

The firing of cannon and lowering of flags announced the setting sun.

EVENING.

A grand National Ball was given by the Committee of Arrangements, at the Social Hall. Among the invited guests, who honored the company with their presence, were His Excellency Governor Young, and Hon. H. C. Kimball.

Several hundred persons participated in the festivities of the evening, and partook at the tables which were loaded with all the agreeables of the season, daintily served under the superior management of Mr. George Goddard. The ice-cream and cordials were of the choicest kinds.

Balls and social parties were held in the various wards of the city. The proceedings of the day and evening transpired with more than usual eclat, and did honor to the Committee of Arrangements, whose efforts seemed duly appreciated and seconded by the public.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, SEPT. 13, 1856.

Florence.

THE above name has, of late, become as familiar as household words to the ears of the Saints, and it is known through the medium of our columns, and through the correspondence of the brethren, to thousands in Utah; in many parts of the United States and in Europe, as the great starting place or city of debarkation of the Mormons and others to Salt Lake City, California, Oregon, and Washington.

As Florence is intimately associated with our emigrating operations, a short account of its location may not be uninteresting to our readers.

Florence is situated on the west bank of the Missouri River, precisely at the point where the Utah and California road, that goes on the north side of the Platte River, intersects the Missouri River. It was known formerly as the "Winter Quarters" of the Mormons at the time of their departure from Nauvoo, and while en route for Deseret; and was chosen by us at that time as the most eligible place for building a city, which we did lay out that winter, erecting some thousand houses, barns, mills, blacksmith shops, stores, and other buildings, which were subsequently burnt by the Indians.

When, this last year, it was deemed prudent to alter the course of our emigration, President Young called upon us to examine carefully this northern route, with a view to our emigration passing by the way of New York, Chicago, and the northern side of the Platte, and to adopt that which we considered the best; we forthwith appointed Elder McGaw and Bishop A. Cunningham, both gentlemen of experience and fully competent to proceed forthwith to the route in question, and to examine up and down the river, as well as the various routes between there and Iowa City. The result of their examination, and their report to us, was, as we anticipated, "that the city of Florence was the best and most eligibly situated of any other place that they knew of on the Missouri River: that it was the most direct route, had the best steamboat ferry landing and accommodations; that it was on the old beaten path; that there was every accommodation of ferries on the Horn and Loup Fork Rivers; that its proprietors were gentlemanly, courteous, and accommodating; and that upon the whole it formed the best place as a starting point for our emigration." The route was also examined between there and Iowa City by Bro. Cunningham, who reported that he had selected a place for a camp ground near Iowa City.

On the reception of this report we immediately entered into communication with the proprietors of the city in relation to ferry, camp ground, and lots for church, emigration, and other purposes, and were met by the proprietors in a spirit of liberality and courtesy, which we always know how to appreciate, and which, added to the natural advantages of the place, decided us in making this the place of outfit for our emigration.

Florence is situated on a gently undulating plateau, as before stated, on the western side of the Missouri River, sufficiently elevated to be entirely free from any inundations. The Steamboat Landing is also excellent, and as the river, in this place, runs over a solid strata of rock which underlays the city, it secures the landing from those terrible river encroachments, which are so prevalent on the Missouri; frequently removing acres on its banks, destroying forests, cities, and villages in its wayward and turbulent course; and which has destroyed so much valuable property, in the city of St. Joseph, St. Francois or Point au Poole, and others places that we have noticed. This rocky stratum is rather a singular feature in that district of country, and as we passed through, on our way East, the proprietors drew our attention to it, well knowing the alluvial, rich, friable nature of the soil in all that district of country, we could scarce believe their statement. In order, however, to convince us, they took us to the place, and there with an iron rod a few feet below the surface, on the river edge and at the bottom of the water, on the river, we heard distinctly the ring of the iron on the rocky bottom. In conversing with several railroad directors on this subject, who have been desirous to obtain our views about those parts, we have mentioned this circumstance, which seemed to be a matter of no small importance with them.

We are glad to be informed that the survey of the Pacific Railroad goes directly to this point. This we felt satisfied would be the case, from a personal knowledge of the country, and therefore predicted some time ago, in an article on the Pacific Road, that they would have to follow the Mormon trail. Thus being situated at the junction of the great Missouri River and the great Pacific Railroad, Florence from its natural position is destined to be one of the greatest cities of the west, and we have often been surprized that our keen enterprising Eastern and Western men, in search of locations for store keeping, mills and other facilities, have not been more attracted with its position and advantages. The city, however, we are informed has made great progress in the last year, and lots and property doubled in value. We are informed also that from one hundred to one hundred and fifty houses are going up this fall together with mills, stores and other improvements.

For a place to obtain labor we think it would be as good for our brethren, who are moving west, as any that we know of, where cities are building and improvements going on there is always a good field for labor, and a fair remuneration.

We have spun out this article longer than we anticipated; but we could not do justice either to the natural advantages of the place, the go-a-head-a-tiveness of the people or the gentlemanly and courteous manner in which we have been treated by the proprietors, and say less. It is our candid opinion, that as a depot for the fitting out of the Saints, or as the site of a great commercial city, it cannot be excelled on the Upper Missouri.

Hand-Cart Emigration.

IT will be seen by several late communications that the emigrants are successfully progressing on their route for the valley of the Salt Lake Basin.

It is exceedingly gratifying for us to learn that the hand-cart system is so successful, and that the parties engaged in it are in such good health and spirits. It is a new mode of travel to the Saints, and we believe also to any other persons. It is true that one or two individuals have gone through to California in this way; but they were strong, able-bodied men, whilst these are men, women, and children—weak and strong, the old and the young—who are at the present time literally, by their own exertions, pushing their way out, thus fulfilling the words of the Prophet Jeremiah:

"For there shall be a day, that the watchmen upon the mount Ephraim shall cry, Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the Lord our God; and behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together; a great company shall return thither."

We had, as we expressed at first, considerable apprehensions as to the feasibility of so many women and children adopting this mode of transit, and the principal relief, to our mind, was, that in the event of sickness, weakness, or any other impediment, they would, for the first part of their journey, be in the neighborhood of inhabitants, where they could either rest or stay, according to circumstances; and we considered that as the distance from Iowa City to the city of Florence, the place of their final debarkation for the plains, was about 260 or 270 miles, that before their arrival at the latter place they would have fairly tested their strength and the applicability of the hand-cart system, as it was our opinion that this would be the heaviest part of their journey. We are, therefore, exceedingly glad to find that they are succeeding so well, and are in the enjoyment of such good health and spirits. It is true that there are some staying; this we might naturally expect; but there are not so many of this class as we anticipated. We see by some remarks of our correspondence a disposition to reflect upon those who have tarried; this may be correct, in some instances, but it is not well, in such cases, to be too censorious; all men and women do not possess the powers of endurance alike; and where people find their bodily strength give way, we should not blame them for tarrying, they have a legitimate reason for so doing. We are told, indeed, to hasten to the mountains as fast as circumstances will admit; but we are not told, at present, "to tarry not in all the plains lest we be consumed." We therefore say to those whose circumstances or lack of bodily strength may have constrained to tarry for a while: Attend to your duties, fear your God, and live your religion, and in due time you shall go to Zion, and all shall be well with you; for although it is exceedingly pleasant to be swift in the race, and strong in battle, yet, the "race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." Let us be on the alert to keep the council of God wherever we are, and to seek to magnify our calling, and all will be well with us, in time, and in eternity.

In a late communication from President Young, he informs us that they are making preparations to meet the companies with flour, and to assist them on their journey, thus all things are moving harmoniously, and this band, who are the first to traverse the long, weary plains on foot and with hand-carts, will, having already overcome the first, and consequently the worst difficulties, speed their way quickly to the land of the west, the mountains of Israel, the Zion of our God. We feel to say in our heart God speed and bless them.

Kansas.

THE news from this Territory is, though as usual, contradictory in detail, of some interest. A company of Pros variously estimated from 200 to 400 men, under the command of Gen. Reid, attacked on the 29th ult. the town of Osawatomie, occupied by about 200 Antis. General Reid having artillery at his command, and able to place it in an advantageous position raked down with grape and canister the Free State men who had sought shelter in a growth of underbrush, about three hundred yards from the houses. Thirty persons are reported killed on the Free State side, and numbers taken prisoners and banished from the Territory, five only wounded among the attacking party. There is great rejoicing in the victorious camp, particularly over the death of Capt. John Brown, who has been an active Free State man, and according to their account a notorious scamp. The Free State papers are rich in execrations, and tell horrible tales of cruelty against the "Border Ruffians." The latter are reported to be masters at Leavenworth: some little fighting and butchering there. Commercial business is at a stand still; but plundering and banishing very active. General Atchison has resigned his command of the pro-slavery troops, and has been succeeded by Gen. Reid. Col. Donliphan is second in command. The pro-slavery party only number about 1,600 in the Territory, of which number 800 are encamped at Indian Creek, and 1,000 on the north side of the Kansas river, near Lecompton. They have eight pieces of artillery and plenty of horses for cavalry, but are much in need of ammunition and provisions. The abolition forces under Gen. Lane seem to be about the same in number, concentrated in and around Lawrence short of provisions likewise, but better disciplined and more experienced in the art of war. The regular pitched battle has yet to come off—it is still expected. However much the statements may be colored by the partizans of each, and in many cases unworthy of credit, it is nevertheless evident that awful cruelties are perpetrated by both Free and Slave State men.

The Secretary of War, by the instructions of the President, has made a call upon the Governors of Illinois and Kentucky for two regiments of foot militia to aid Major-General P. F. Smith commanding in Kansas. President Pierce means doing something before he leaves the White House. From the invectives hurled at the President and Secretary of War for this movement, it is very evident the Free State men calculate to gain nothing by government interference in "Bleeding Kansas." The Tribune says: "The prospects of the Free State men look dark and gloomy."

The St. Louis Republican, Sept. 9th, says that 150 of General Lane's men attacked Tecumseh on the 4th. Judge Lecompte had issued an order to the Marshal of the Territory to arrest Gen. Lane and other agitators, and Gen. Smith had instructed Col. Cook, commanding fourteen companies at Fort Riley, to give the necessary assistance for the execution of the writs.

Emigration to Utah.

AWARE of the anxiety of friends and relatives at home, to learn of the progress of the emigration of those dear to them en route for Utah, we invited the brethren in charge to keep us posted, and did anticipate being able to publish their correspondence, particularly from Iowa City and Florence, but in this we have been disappointed, and only been able to give a very meagre account of the emigration movements.

In another column will be found an interesting communication to the Bluff City Bugle on our emigration to Utah. It is pleasing to learn from the pen of a stranger, that our brethren and sisters are wending their way to Zion with cheerful and noble hearts beating in their bosom, while every physical energy is tasked to work out their salvation.

President F. D. Richards in a letter to President George A. Smith, dated L. D. S. Camp Ground, Florence, N. T., August 23, speaking of his arrival there, says:

"I found Company E. of the P. E. F. Emigrants under Elder Haven's charge, and a number of emigrants going by ox-teams. Yesterday I had the unspeakable pleasure of seeing the last, or F. Company of P. E. F. Emigrants, under Elder Martin's charge, come into camp, all cheerful, and mostly in good health. The hand-carts are at a premium in the estimation of nearly all who use them, and it made one's heart rejoice yesterday, to see the vivacity of the brethren and sisters as they pulled the carts along through clouds of dust, and under a comparatively hot sun, and also to hear the shouts of welcome with which they were received by the Saints already on the ground. The two companies, E. and F., are now organized into one, and expect to move off west to-morrow, under charge of Elder Martin. There are, perhaps, 60 wagons yet behind, which are expected at the Ferry to-morrow night.

"The last company of hand cart emigrants leave to-morrow morning, which leave only the rear of the ox-team companies to follow."

Summary from the Deseret News of July.

The Directors of the "Deseret Agricultural and Manufactoring Society," together with the members of the "awarding committee" and a good sprinkling of the "ladies committee" met in the Bowery, G. S. L. City, June 23d, to confer together and facilitate the objects of the Society, Bishop Edward Hunter presiding. The meeting was opened by prayer after which President Hunter made some very pithy and appropriate remarks on the advantages to be derived from the consumption of home manufactures and the necessity of keeping Utah's wealth in Utah, and the duty of rendering every encouragement to those who had taken steps to supply the market with home productions. He instanced several ladies who were actively engaged in shawl, jeans and flannel weaving, and was warmly supported and encouraged by the declaration of the ladies present to do their utmost to see the Utonians adorned with the workmanship of their own hands instead of squandering their wealth on the high priced gewgaws from the States. Messrs. Blair, Woodruff, Little and Bishop L. D. Young followed the president with spirited, instructive and encouraging remarks.

The prospects for harvest were not the most flattering, but the authorities were confident that the inhabitants would, with well-directed industry, rigid economy, obedience to counsel and faith in the Lord, be enabled to pass through the straits till 1857.

The Eastern (June) mail had really arrived "in the contract time." It was supposed that the conductor had lost his almanac and arrived sooner than he intended and was sorry for it. However with all its speed it brought not the overlaid, buried or burned mails of previous months.

President Orson Hyde is getting along in Carson Valley and we are glad to learn is recovering rapidly from the effects of his last winter's attempt at a passage through the Sierra Nevada mountains.

From the News of the 9th, we publish on our front page the Celebration of July Fourth. While rowdy politicians and cunning wire pullers are foaming in rage against Utah, and branding its inhabitants with want of patriotism and opposition to the Constitution of the United States, the inhabitants of Utah are united one and all to defend that glorious instrument. The Oration of His Excellency Gov. Young will repay careful perusual. Honest editors will do well to publish it entire. The News of the 16th, contains reports of the celebration of the Fourth in different parts of the Territory. The same ardent spirit of patriotism manifested at Salt Lake City is apparent everywhere in the Territory.

President P. P. Pratt returned to Salt Lake City on the 27th June, after a thirty-three days mission to the principal settlements in the counties of Utah, Juab, Fillmore, Beaver, Iron and Washington and reports a good spirit everywhere, the people very industrious, the Indians generally peaceable and many of them at work cultivating the land.

By letter from Harmony, June 1st, we learn that Kanosh, chief of the Pah-van-tes had paid that settlement a visit with some of his principal men, and obtained permission to congregate and address the Indians of that district of country in the regular meeting house. His address was in favor of honesty and manuel labor for Red skins. He contrasted the difference in the position of the laboring Indian now with the half starved position before the Mormons came into their midst. Enos, a young Indian whose antecedents were of the worst character, happened to come in the following day and Kanosh had him well ministered to with a raw cowhide in hopes of banishing from his organization thieving propensities that had rendered him a pest to the country. Long life and a vigorous arm to Kanosh if he continue this reformation.

Messrs. S. W. Richards and Jos. Cain have introduced into the Territory a McCormick's Reaper and Mower which has given considerable satisfaction and sharpened the desire for labor saving machines. We anticipate that Utah will in a few years have a concentration of talent from all nations bringing with them the best of everything that will abridge labor and improve the social position of everybody. The eyes of every Latter-day Saint should be open to see and examine everything that claims attention, and none will ever have to repent of having seen and understood too much correctly.

In the beginning of July some of the Indians hauled out of the Weber river a sack, containing about 300 letters, together with quite a number of newspapers, a portion of the lost May mail. The Utonians were rejoicing that Mr. Magraw's days were numbered on route No. 8911. One of our correspondents facetiously says: "Wonder if Congress will make another appropriation to Magraw to pay him for losing or trying to destroy the mail, as they have generally paid him for not doing instead of doing anything; so in this case, to be consistent, they should again consider his case, and pay him for this misfortune as well as for the other. I think the company might enumerate a great many more losses of a similar nature, while Congress in their extreme liberality and nice sense of justice, might feel willing to pay them. How long must we endure such miserable misrule, sustained as it unquestionably is, by bribery. Favoritism gets the contracts and appropriations, then dispenses her favors in return. Thus the public service is neglected, the treasury robbed, and plunderers and swaggering pot-house politicians replenished with funds to treat, pipelay, bribe, browbeat, and fight at elections, that they may again plunder the Treasury and live at the public crib."

President J. M. Grant took part in the celebration of the Fourth at Fillmore, and fired the souls of the assembled multitude by his patriotic address to the Battalion.

Mr. William Ewen at Willow Creek, Box Elder Co., had a narrow escape from death on the 14th. Having occasion to descend into his well the curbing suddenly gave way, and brought upon him some 25 feet of stones and earth. After nine hours incessant labor his neighbors brought him to day-light considerably bruised, but no bones broken. He was recovering from the effects of his imprisonment at the date of publication.

The ever memorable entry to Salt Lake Valley on the 24th July, 1847, was celebrated with great eclat at the Head Waters of Big Cotton Wood. We shall not attempt here a description of the big doings, as we purpose giving our readers next week, if possible, a full report. Affairs went off as usual with order and good feeling. We cannot help remarking that when we read the rich sentiments that flow from the Presidency and Zion's nobles, we feel from home down here. On account of this party the Committee of the Library and Musical Assembly deferred their party, designed to have been given in the Social Hall, till the 1st of August.

On the 26th July, the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society held another meeting, at which was manifest an earnest determination to go-a-head in home manufactures, and to know no can't do it. The practical good sense speeches delivered on the occasion show that Deseret has the mind. Time alone is required. Deseret must flourish.

The Latest.

IT has seldom fallen to our lot to read the equal of the following, which we clip from the New York Herald of Wednesday. We publish it as a model of crooked and badly arranged lying. There are many respectable folks in Salem, but we suppose they are not readers of the Register, for no editor would dare to offer to respectable readers such vile and manifest lies. For James Gordon Bennett there is a potent excuse. His brain is so muddled and his eyes so dazzled with the big pile that he is presently irresponsible for his paper—at other moments he is shrewd enough to know that the retailer of slander is the most despicable of breathing things:

MORMON LIFE IN UTAH.—We have seen a letter from a merchant in California, says the Salem Register, who writes that he had an interview with a highly respectable gentleman, whose duties compelled him to dwell in Utah for more than two years. He writes that "his description of Mormon life and customs is revolting to decency, and shows the sect to be a disgrace to the age. He estimates the number of fanatics—for they cannot be called aught else—at 80,000, and says a stranger is watched, and his words noted, from the time he enters till he leaves the place. A tenth of all you have is taken also, even if you be but a traveller. Brigham Young's hold upon them is through fear. He is a revolting character and his talent lies in blasphemy and obscenity of language, united to keen perceptive faculties, that enable him to pick good tools out of a crowd of persons, and to detect those that will prove troublesome. The latter he gives ten days to settle up their affairs, and sends them on a mission of five years to Australia, England, or elsewhere. If they do not go they are secretly murdered, and he says that he knows of thirty who have been killed for this offence, but done so secretly that the murderers cannot be detected. Though a strong-minded man himself, he is so intensely disgusted with the vile doings of the people, that he has left the country."

Mormons En Route for Utah.

IT may not be uninteresting, to some of your readers, to learn something of the movements of the emigration to Salt Lake Valley this season. A few days since, in company with Col. Babbitt, Secretary of Utah, and several citizens of this place, we visited Florence, N. T., and there found encamped about 500 of the "faithful," all in good health and spirits, intending to start in a day or two on their long journey. (They left on Monday, 18th inst.) From Capt. Willey, and assistant Capts. McGaw and Levi Savage, we learned that the train had been but three weeks in coming from Iowa City, and that all were healthy, cheerful and contented.

Having seen several hand-cart trains pass through this city, and cross the ferries at Elk Horn and Loup Fork, we could not help but remark the enthusiasm which animated all classes and ages. This train seemed to be better provided with camp equipage, and outfit of provisions, &c., than those which preceded it.

We saw the butcher dealing out a splendid beef to the crowd, and were informed that the allowance was one half pound each, one pound flour per day, and the usual quantities of molasses, sugar, &c. Many, however, have private supplies, which enable them to live very comfortably.

It may seem, to some, that these people endure great hardships in travelling hundreds of miles on foot, drawing carts behind them. This is a mistake, for many informed me that after the first three days travel, it requires little effort for two or three men or women to drag the light hand-cart with its moderate load of cooking utensils and baggage.

It is also a fact, that they can travel farther in a day, and with less fatigue, than the ox-teams.

These trains are composed of Swedes, Danes, Germans, Welch, Scotch and English, and the best evidence of their sincerity is in the fact that they are willing to endure the fatigues and privations of a journey so lengthy.

First, they have toiled wearily o'er the hundreds of miles which separated their native hills from the European sea-port from which they were to embark—then see them on crowded ships, braving the dangers of the broad Atlantic—afterwards, they travel patiently one thousand inland miles to Iowa City, thence to start on foot for a journey over hill, plain, desert and mountain, fourteen hundred miles to reach the "Happy Valley."

This is enthusiasm—this is heroism indeed. Though we cannot coincide with them in their belief, it is impossible to restrain our admiration of their self-sacrificing devotion to the principles of their faith.

But we have forgotten Florence, not destined, like its beautiful Tuscan prototype, to be universally worshipped as the most lovely of European capitols, rejoicing in her magnificent palaces, her glowing paintings and speaking statuary—but to be known in this our practical work-a-day world, as one of the most important towns in the Territory of Nebraska. Three months ago there were but five buildings, there are now about forty, and as fast as labor and material can be obtained they will continue to build. Before winter, probably 150 houses will have been erected.

The steam saw mills are doing their best to supply lumber, but the water mill on Mill creek moves lazily for lack of "copious showers." Another steam mill will be put up this fall. There are two brick yards near at hand, a lime kiln, and a quarry of superior building stone. To James C. Mitchell, Esq., who has labored for nearly two years to make Florence a town in fact as well as name, is most of the credit of its improvement and growth to be attributed. We cordially wish it success and prosperity.

AILSBROC.

P. S.—Since the above was written, we notice the following arrivals in this city, en route for Salt Lake:

On Monday 18th inst., 56 hand-carts and 5 ox-teams; on the 20th, 30 ox-teams; and on the 21st, 60 hand-carts and several teams.

About 400 have already left Florence; the above trains contained about 800 persons, and a large number are still expected, via. St. Louis.

[Council Bluffs Bugle, Aug. 26.

Bound for Utah.

AMONGST the most notable arrivals of last week, were a company of missionaries returning from Europe to their homes in Utah. Among the number we notice Elders Richards, Felt, Young, Spencer, Wheelock, Dunbar, McAllister, Ferguson, Grant and others. Elder Erastus Snow also came up but does not go out.

To-day they start across the plains; they are an intelligent, sociable, pleasant set of fellows—we wish them a safe and quick journey to their friends. Two large hand-cart trains also arrived last week, a portion of whom will still press forward. They are a hardy, industrious, determined set of fellows, and would make a profitable accession to any country.—[Council Bluffs Bugle, Aug. 26.

Mr. Ivins on the Tribune.

WE take pleasure in laying before our readers the following letter from Mr. Ivins, of New Egypt, N. J., to the editor of the N. Y. Tribune, as Horace's professed love of fair play has evidently been worsted in the struggle with his bigotry, and the letter been, we presume, consigned to the flames or the basket. Mr. Ivins though, as he says, no Mormon, is well posted on the principles, history, past and present of Mormonism, and knows well that his denials or affirmations will stand looking at. We cannot but admire the courage and noble heart that will, at the risk of a good name, speak the truth in defence of a calumniated people:

NEW EGYPT, Aug. 31, 1856.

To the Editor of the New York Tribune.

SIR: I notice in your paper of the 6th inst. an article from which I quote the following:

"The principles on which Fremont and Dayton are presented and supported are fairly and clearly set forth in the resolves of the People's National Convention which was held at Philadelphia last June," &c. The question is then asked: "Why is it that our adversaries rarely or never copy or quote from one of them resolves? Why do they persist not only in misrepresenting the principles we hold and proclaim, but in fabricating others to attribute to us instead? Why does even a man like Daniel Barnard, who would once have been deemed honorable and candid, instead of citing our platform as an evidence of our principles, quote in place of it somebody else's speech at some public meeting to prove that we mean something else than what we profess," &c.?

Very good, indeed; excellent.

Notwithstanding the preference and respect I have for many years entertained for the Tribune, I cannot but notice that its editor has, of late particularly, one set of scales and weights for himself and party and another for his opponents. Permit me, sir, to draw your attention to a letter which appeared in your paper the following day, and which, probably, was in the hands of the compositor before the pen which made the above statement and interrogatory was entirely dry. I refer to the letter of your Utah correspondent of June 30th. He says:

"It would be a matter of the greatest surprise and astonishment to the people of the States could they only peep into this our Mecca, and see where the confidence and patronage of the Government is placed; many curious things would be here observed. On the corner may be seen a long three story Gothic building, whose proportions would attract even the admiration of the Gothamite, containing fifty spirituals (formerly called concubines) under lock and key, prohibited from visiting or receiving company—all these belonging to one man, and that man fed from the Treasury of the United States."

Now, Mr. Editor, permit me to say that such a state of things is positively false, and a man must be awfully destitute of common sense that could give credence to such a charge. May I not consistently apply your interrogatories with the change of subject, and enquire: Why does your correspondent and others persist not only in suppressing the principles they (the Mormons) hold and proclaim, as set forth in their own published works, but in fabricating others to attribute to them instead? Why does even a man like Horace Greeley, instead of citing their principles, quote or publish in place of them some lying correspondence? You might as well publish to all the world (and would be believed as soon) that Queen Victoria, with fifty-nine other women, were locked up in Washington City by President Pierce for his own accommodation, and no notice of it would be taken by her consort Prince Albert.

Aug. 11. You publish also "Mormonism in St. Louis," from the St. Louis Evening News.

[The report alluded to by Mr. Ivins is about a Jew who attempted to seduce a mother and daughter, and who, to better accomplish his damnable conduct, drags in a profession of religion. By some mistake, the "clipping" was not inclosed with the letter, or we should have published it.—ED.]

That there was a man at St. Louis, called Abraham, claiming to be a High Priest, and from Salt Lake City, who had attempted to commit his hellish purpose with mother and daughter, may all be true; but what has that to do with Mormonism? What evidence is there that the man was an High Priest of the Mormon Church; and admitting that he was even so, what of it? Shall a people be slandered for the commission of such a crime, when they have unanimously voted laws that visit the criminal with death? Why is it that the editor of the Tribune and others grasp so eagerly at such yarns? If such things are presented to the readers of the Tribune for the condemnation of Mormonism, it will be no difficult matter to annihilate every christian church on the earth. Let me again ask: Why does a man like Horace Greeley persist in suppressing the principles they (the Mormons) hold and publish to the world, and publish fabricated falsehoods to attribute to them instead? In short, why do the opponents of Mormonism habitually misrepresent and defame the Mormons, if it be not, as Horace Greeley says of the opponents of Fremont and Dayton: "That they are aware the truth will not serve?"

I know the Mormons profess that polygamy is instituted of God, which to me and many others is a stumbling-block; but why does not the editor of the Tribune or others produce scriptural evidence to prove the falsity of the position, instead of producing as evidence against Mormonism such tales as that of Abraham at St. Louis or "Female Life among the Mormons," the latter written by a person who never saw Salt Lake, and I should judge, from the description given in that book of the death of Joseph Smith and other scenes, that he never witnessed any thing of which he wrote? I am no Mormon, and never was, but I like fair play, even among gamblers.

Respectfully yours,

THOS. W. IVINS.

Rambles in the Fields of Experience.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

NATURE appears to an intelligent man as an open book, which the inquiring, striving searcher after truth may decipher, read and comprehend, storing thus his mind with useful knowledge, whereby he can benefit himself and his fellow beings. But a man may introduce theories, systems, hypotheses in regard to certain laws and principles of physics, or anything else, yet all his exertions will result in nothing without the practical support of experience or empiricism.

Whatever discoveries—whatever ingenious schemes have been formed for an increase and propagation of useful knowledge, for the promotion of human comfort and happiness, they have all, more or less been the result of experience, that principle which leads the neophite as a faithful guide through the immeasurable fields of intelligence. Aided by science and sound intellect, empiricism is the key to inexhausible mental and physical treasures; it unfolds to the searching mind the magnificent panorama of nature in all its wonderful bearings; the scales drop as it were from the eyes; what is realized in the school of experience, often surpasses the boldest hopes and anticipations, and the mind becomes struck with astonishment at the boundless variety of the physical creation, of our world the endless series of hidden laws, at the extraordinary beauty and harmony in the different departments of Nature. In order to give the reader an idea of the vast multiplicity of conception in regard to the Creation, I merely mention, that from scientific observations it is evident, that there are about 60,000 different species of creations, 44,000 species of reptiles, 4,000 species of birds, 3,000 species of shell-fish, and about 100,000 species of animalcules invisible to the naked eye, and this is only a rough calculation of those branches of the animal kingdom, that have been explored, but there must be yet an immense multitude of animated beings undiscovered.

Experience is the realization of a thing or an idea; on experiencing, we move not in a world of abstract, but concrete things, we move in real life. A man may have a desire to learn a language or science, but he will not have a correct idea of what he is going to do, nor will he fully realize the meaning and bearings of it, till he has commenced his studies, then he will experience many things he never thought of; he becomes acquainted with new principles, and begins to understand the value and importance of knowing a language. The greater the sphere of man's observation, the more he experiences, the more his knowledge is increasing; his reasoning powers brighten, his judgement generally becomes sound and correct. It is a fact, that experience is requisite for a full understanding of the nature of a principle. After a person has become acquainted with principles through experience, it is then often very easy with the assistance of a good intellect and an improved knowledge, to judge from analogy, that is to say, from a similarity of one thing to another, to infer certain rules and principles. For instance, on examining of the architective faculties of the human system, we find that the wonderful organization consisting of bones, muscles, ligaments, membranes, arteries, veins, &c., have been carried on, on the plan of receiving and distributing nutriment, and we know it to be a scientific fact, that from a microscopic animalculæ which is 10,000 times smaller than a mite, to a whale, no animal can live without nourishment; we conclude that every system of animated beings is constituted upon similar principles, and is provided with means to subsist on.

A man may spend all his life-time in perusing the accounts of celebrated travellers, such as Audubon, Cook, Le Vaillant, Cumming, and others; he may read their marvellous exploits, and hair-breadth escapes and adventures of thrilling interest, but he will never realize what courage, determination, firmness of mind, perseverance, and physical strength are requisite in order to go safe through such ordeals, without leaving his comfortable fireside and exposing himself to all the difficulties, dangers, and hardships of travelling and roving in a howling wilderness of mighty primeval forests, or the endless prairie. When fatigue, hardships, and excitement seem to have rooted him to the ground, and he has to stand his chance of the almost unerring ball of the wild Indian, or the deadly hug of the bear, or any other wild beast; or when, on a bloody battle field, he has to stand for hours exposed to the well-regulated volleys of an enemy; when he sees his friends become ashy pale from fright, and whole platoons are swept down by the iron hail, then he is passing through scenes of which a celebrated author says no writer can portray them, no painter can paint them, only a dream can convey them.

What are, then, the results of experience? Why, not only the mental, but also the physical powers and moral faculties improve. The man of talent, who is aware of his being in a scale of continually progressive knowledge, and who desires to improve every moment for the purpose of cultivating his mind by a close application to proper studies, will soon experience a rapid progress in his mental functions, and in the different departments of human knowledge; he will realize that he owes all his acquirements in arts and sciences to experience, assisted by his zeal, perseverance, and his natural gifts. The man of scientific experience knows that a vast, immeasurable field still remains for the exertions of all the energies of the human mind, as even the true nature of some of the elementary principles of certain sciences have not yet been fully ascertained, and have consequently to be brought under the focus of the searching philosopher's observation; he knows that it will take ages, centuries, yea, all eternity, in order to bring to light the hidden wonders of the universe. As for instance, in relation to the interesting science of psychology, of which only the empirical part is known, but the rational part, which treats on the ens or nature of the soul, is yet a mystery to philosophy, concerning which a great many speculations have been made, but the problem has not yet been solved, and will only (parenthetically speaking,) be explained through the channel of revelation.

Experience in mechanical and perambulatory occupations improves the physical power of man. Mechanics, agriculturists, manual laborers, who have constantly to wield heavy tools, or carry heavy loads, will increase the strength of their muscles, sinews, and bones; their limbs will get more pliable and capable of performing hard work; their systems will become stronger and more used to hardships. The history of the Brazils shows that on discovering those precious metals, such as gold, silver, etc., the mines were generally wrought by native Indians, or imported negroes, who, not being used to this new kind of labor, died off by thousands; whereas, now, negroes, who have been brought up to constant hard labor, work just as much, and sometimes more, than white people. A gradually increasing labor, adapted to the strength of the human system, will be well calculated to improve the body and make a man strong and hardy. In regard to perambulatory occupation, travelling on foot is very beneficial to the system. It is a scientific fact, that a regular and moderate exercise has made many an invalid strong, who was looked upon by his friends as a candidate of death. The celebrated Herodicus made his feverish patients, at Athens in Greece, travel to Eleusis, by the way of Megara, a distance of about twelve leagues, advising them at the same time not to rest or take any refreshments by the way. The beneficial effects of moderate exercise I have noticed myself on the plains; people, who, from old age and infirmity, were pronounced by some timid persons unfit for so long a journey as that of travelling on foot more than 1000 miles, not only regained but also improved the strength of their system by a gradually increasing ratio of daily travelling, so that the journey proved to them a great blessing. Many invalids who are under medical attendance, and being confined to the dull, close air of a crowded city, derive little or no benefit at all from physic, and whose cases generally prove fatal, could do nothing better than to try the fresh, bracing air of the country or highlands. From experience which eminent pedagogues have made at academies, or other public institutions, it appears that nothing is so calculated to improve the human system as physical education, by which all the muscles, nerves, sinews, and bones of the body are brought in full play, so that the organs will increase in size by the exercise of the same. Look at yourselves, and you will find that the fingers of the right hand are generally larger than those of the left; the right foot is often larger than the left.

It is evident from the above that the first effect of exercise must be a development of muscles, which are only carnified blood; the bones are increased in strength and size. In raising a weight, or suspending the body by the hands, the great pectoral muscle is contracted, and drags at the rib in which it is lodged. Hence the ribs continually draw outwards, and enlarge the space which is occupied by the lungs; the lungs themselves increase in size for the purpose of filling up the larger space; consequently a greater admission of blood into the lungs and an easier respiration takes place; so you see the salutary effect of an exercise of the pectoral muscle and ribs; the chest becomes larger, and the respiration more active; in fact, the whole system undergoes a beneficial change.

Experience in the fields of intellectual excellence leads to an improvement of the moral faculties; it shows that learning tends to simplify, and not to bewilder or confound; the greater the experience in scientific pursuits, the more the student sees his own ignorance, and becomes humble and unassuming. The above is illustrated by the simplicity of manners and outward appearance of the greatest literary characters, such as Sir Isaac Newton, Alexander von Humboldt, Descartes, the illustrious philosopher and mathematician, Lafontaine, the author of so many witty fables, Corneille, the dramatist, and others. If the mind is well stored by experience, then man has a spring of thought and feeling which will render him capable of refined enjoyments under all circumstances and to receive moral lessons from everything transpiring within the sphere of his observation. The thundering fall of mighty, primeval forests, or of gigantic avalanches; the plutonic phenomena of volcanoes; the wonderful formation of clouds as sustained by animal heat; the marvellous results of the atmosphere as an agent or moving cause for the germination and growth of the vegetable kingdom; the wonders of the starry heavens, with millions of solar systems beyond the range of the unassisted eye; the revolution of the earth at the rate of sixty thousand miles every hour; the planet Saturn with his enormous ring of 600,000 miles in circumference, revolving in silent grandeur, every ten hours, round an orb which is nine hundred times larger than the earth, while seven moons of a much larger size than ours, with an endless retinue of heavenly bodies, parade with a magnificent brilliancy on the grand theatre of celestial scenery; all these wonders engage the attention of the searcher after physical truth. It is evident from experience that an elevated mind, which delights merely in such sublime gratifications as the contemplation of the universe can yield, is vastly superior to those mental pigmies that grow and die like mushrooms in a small corner, without ever extending the sphere of their observation beyond the range of their miserable home; who know no higher gratifications than those of their senses. Reader, you meet such individuals frequently in the street or in houses, basking themselves in the sun, or dozing over a fire and enjoying their dolce far niente; thus absorbed, or brooding in stupid apathy and lethargy, with faces having the impress of vice and debauchery, they bring themselves to the level of the brute beast.

Experience teaches us that great lesson, that we have a mind, a soul which is a costlier treasure than gold, more beautiful than a diadem; that we have a mind for a certain purpose, for preparing ourselves for a higher destiny. Ages may be swallowed up by time, generations may come and go, and only ruins and records remain as taciturn but still expressive mementoes of their former greatness, but those prototypes of mental excellence live in the remembrance of succeeding nations. May then the escutcheon of our names be stainless, that when the frail covering of our mortal career has fallen off, our spirits may be revealed in matchless beauty.

Electoral Vote.

WESTPORT, CONN., Sept. 1, 1856.

MR. TAYLOR—Dear Sir: Thinking some of your readers may not be posted on the changing and uncertain moves of President-making, I have thrown together the following calculations, and added some reflections, which may assist some in forming an idea of the anticipations of politicians generally on this subject.

The following is a list of the Free and Slave States, with the respective number of votes which each is entitled to cast for President and Vice President:

Fifteen Slave States.	Votes.	Sixteen Free States.	Votes.
Delaware	3	Maine	8
Maryland	8	New Hampshire	5
Virginia	15	Vermont	5
North Carolina	10	Massachusetts	13
South Carolina	8	Rhode Island	4
Georgia	10	Connecticut	6
Florida	3	New York	35
Alabama	9	New Jersey	7
Mississippi	7	Pennsylvania	27
Louisiana	6	Ohio	23
Texas	4	Indiana	13
Tennessee	12	Illinois	11
Kentucky	12	Michigan	6
Missouri	9	Wisconsin	5
Arkansas	4	Iowa	4
		California	4
Total Slave State votes	120	Total Free State votes	176

The total electoral vote of all the States is 296; consequently 149, or a majority of all, is necessary to elect a President by the people. If there were but two Presidential tickets one or the other would, on the day of election, necessarily receive a majority; but when there are three tickets, as at present—Fillmore, Buchanan, and Fremont—then the vote may be so divided that neither of the three candidates will receive a majority. In that case the election of President would pass from the people to the House of Representatives; the Constitution directing that the House shall elect the President by ballot from the first three persons (should there be more candidates) receiving the highest number of electoral votes. The House votes by States, the Representatives from each State casting but one vote. Of course the majority of the representation decides the vote of the State.

Fillmore.	Votes.	Buchanan.	Votes.	Fremont.	Votes.
Massachusetts	13	Connecticut	6	Maine	8
New York	35	Michigan	6	New Hampshire	5
New Jersey	7	Virginia	15	Vermont	5
California	4	North Carolina	10	Rhode Island	4
Delaware	3	South Carolina	8	Ohio	23
Maryland	8	Georgia	10	Indiana	13
Texas	4	Florida	3	Illinois	11
Tennessee	12	Alabama	9	Wisconsin	5
Kentucky	12	Mississippi	7	Iowa	4
		Louisiana	6
		Missouri	9
		Arkansas	4
		Pennsylvania	27
Total	98	Total	120	Total	78

If the above calculation be correct the election will of necessity be taken to the House. I have placed Massachusetts for Fillmore on the ground that the Republican Convention will not confirm the nomination of Fremont for President, Johnson for Vice President, and Gardner for Governor, as they have been nominated by the American party of Massachusetts. In my mind there is a doubt about Pennsylvania, Michigan and Missouri going for Buchanan, and New Hampshire going for Fremont. It is possible that Fillmore may carry Rhode Island, Florida, and Missouri, which would make his vote 114. It does not make much difference which way these doubtful States go, as I am well assured there will be no election by the people, but it will go to the House of Representatives. If the House should fail to make a choice before the 4th of March next, then the election passes into the Senate, unless one of the candidates for Vice President should receive a majority of the electoral votes, in which case he would, by the Constitution, become President. But if none of the candidates for Vice President should have a majority of the electoral votes cast, then the Senate is authorized to choose the Vice President from the two having the highest number of votes, and their choice for Vice President would act as President, until a new election by the people was held. From this explanation of the constitutional provisions your readers may make their own calculations as to the probable result. Should the election of President and Vice President be cast in the House of Representatives, which is probable as the House is now constituted, they might not be able to choose, but there would be no difficulty in the Senate, where parties are not so nearly balanced as they are in the House. That being the case they would choose for their Vice President John C. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, and by so doing he would be President of the United States and Territories till there was another election had by the people.

Since writing the above I have attended the Fillmore Convention, held at New Haven, September 3d, for the purpose of nominating State electors. From the number present and the respectability of the Convention—chiefly business men from all parts of the State—influential men were placed on the ticket, such as ex-Governor Charles Hawley, of Stamford, and ex-Governor Greene Hendrick, of Waterbury, were chosen electors at large, and S. D. Sperry, Austin Baldwin, F. B. Loomis, and Charles O. Belden district electors; from what I witnessed I think Fillmore will carry this State. At the Convention I saw a gentleman that had been canvassing the Southern States. He assured me that North Carolina, Georgia, and Louisiana would surely go for Fillmore. If my views are correct it would make Fillmore's electoral vote 118; then, with Pennsylvania, and any of the doubtful States, such as New Hampshire and Indiana, he will certainly be elected President of these United States by the people. E. R. YOUNG.

In the present whirl of political excitement and the daily fluctuations of men and parties, it is difficult to decide which way many of the States will go. We give the above as communicated.—[ED.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

A SAD accident occurred last Friday night, on the Central Railroad, near Port Byron, by which six men were scalded to death. In accordance with the direction of the superintendent, a cattle train was standing on the straight track, waiting for the arrival of the 5 o'clock passenger train, which ought to have entered the depot on the turn out; but by negligence or inattention of the switch-tender, who neglected to turn the switch, the locomotive ran into the cattle train. The passenger train was going at the rate of eight miles an hour when the engineer discovered the neglect of the switch-tender, when he immediately gave the signal to break up. He reversed the engine, and did all in his power to prevent a collision.

The locomotive when it struck the train threw the last car, containing six drovers, off the track and upon the boiler. By the collision the supply pipe was broken, and before the men in the car could be extricated, they were literally scalded to death. Three were taken out of the car dead, and the others survived but a short time.

Dispatches from Major General Wool, of Washington Territory, and the Indian agent of Oregon, report the Indian war nearly at an end. Gen. Harney is ordered to Florida in the hope that he may be as successful in bringing the Indians there to terms as he has been successful with the Sioux in the West.

The receipts of the N. Y. Herald from January to July for advertisements, were $93,511, sales, $178,572; aggregate, $272,083.

Brooklyn police authorities have been lately busy with a case or cases of gross outrage perpetrated on the persons of two young emigrant girls, who arrived here from Liverpool the latter part of last month. Two stevedores conducted them from the ship, City of Brooklon, under the pretence of finding them situations, and succeeded by their wily ways and intoxicating nostrums to accomplish their outrageous purposes. After the men were apprehended and the girls examined and made their affidavits, by assistance from outsiders, the latter have been abducted and are now beyond the reach of the police. Emigrants should take warning. "Every ship on arrival is beset with a set of blackguards who think of nothing else than robbery, licentiousness and murder.

Capt. Wm. J. Lyster, and his friend Mr. Walters who, some two months ago, committed an assault upon Mr. Smith of the Sunday Courier, were brought up for sentence in the Court of Special Sessions on Tuesday. Mr. W. having only accompanied his friend had been able to arrange with and give satisfaction to Mr. Smith, was recommended to the clemency of the court—judgement suspended. Mr. Lyster, who applied the cowhide, was, in spite of expressions of regret and promise of better conduct in future, sentenced to be imprisoned in the City Prison for the term of thirty days.

On Tuesday evening the Democrats of New York and vicinity, illuminated the city by a great torch light procession. No labor was spared to secure a great turn out and success crowned the effort. The various clubs had their bands of music, emblazoned mottoes, devises and paintings; many of which were anything but flattering to Fremont, the nigger worshippers in general and parson Beecher in particular. The procession was lively, long and enthusiastic. The Herald notwithstanding its procilivities for Fremont talks very respectfully of the procession, and says it "was one of the largest ever got up in this city.

Since the commencement of the Presidential campaign the republican press of Washington has issued four millions of documents, including 200,000 copies of Sumner's speech, or forty millions of pages. About one-half of this number have been distributed through the Washington Republican Association, and the remainder by members of Congress. The National Democratic Executive Committee is now extensively engaged in a similar work—sending off, it is said, 20,000 documents a day. The American party, too, is not idle in that line of business.

President Pierce has gone to the Warrenton White Sulphur Springs, to recruit his health.

The San Francisco Correspondent of the N.Y. Herald, Aug. 4th says, the Democrats have no chance in California because they are opposed to the Vigilance Committee. Fremont is the man of their choice as eight-tenths of the people are either members of the committee, or in favor of its measures; besides the Pacific Railroad is wanted and "Fremont is the great champion of the measure, which is of more importance to California than all others together." These to some persons would be very doubtful compliments. The Herald seems to have a variety of correspondents in San Francisco or one with the quality of blowing cold or hot as required. The last time we noticed the correspondent he was down hard upon the vigilants and telling great things of reaction in public sentiment. He concludes his letter with the following: "You will be astonished to learn that nearly four thousand cold blooded murders have been committed in this State within the last seven years, and over fourteen hundred in this city; and there have not been been fifty legally executed out of the whole number of the assassins. Is it to be wondered at, then, that the people should rise up and take the law in their own hands? Ought not the committee to continue their work until they swing up all these murderers and banish from among us all ballot box stuffer shoulder strickers, theives, and professed gamblers!

The Cleveland Herald reports the destruction by fire on the 4th inst., of the shingle factory, agricultural implement manufactory and the buildings. Estimated loss upwards of $25,000. Over one hundred men are thrown out of employment, and many thousand dollars worth of reapers and mowers, two engines ready for delivery, and large amounts of shingles were destroyed.

Twenty-one buildings were destroyed by fire at Columbia, Pa., on Monday, involving a loss of from $20,000 to $30,000.

On Friday the 5th inst., the Mount Vernon Hotel, Cape Island, was destroyed by fire, Mr. Cain, one of the proprietors, and his two sons, two daughters and a housekeeper, were the only occupants and were consumed in the flames. The origin of the fire is a mystery. This was said to be the largest hotel in the world. This structure was capable of accommodating 2100 visitors. The front range and one wing were completed four stories in height, with towers each five stories in hight, with towers each five stories in hight, three of these occupied the corners and one stood midway of the wing. In addition there was an immense tower six stories in hight in the center of the front. The wing was a quarter of a mile in extent and the front nearly of the same extent; the dining room was four hundred and twenty-five feet long and sixty wide. There were four hundred and thirty-two rooms in the building.

President Pierce sent by last California mail positive instructions to Governor Johnson about the Vigilance Committee, together with instructions to the navy force in the Pacific. Speculations are rife on this movement.

LATEST.—The Empire City from New Orleans brings detailed accounts from Havana of the ravages of the late hurricane. There has been a great destruction of property afloat and ashore. At Sagua six American and one English vessels were driven ashore; crews saved, vessels a total loss. The light house at Cordenas was swept away, and much damage done to the crops at Havana, Matanzas, and Sagua. On Thursday a girl of 19 years of age was brought to the N.Y. Hospital suffering from some poisonous drug that had been administered to her by a villain who had enticed her from home to accomplish her ruin. He is still at large; her recovery is doubtful. On Thursday afternoon and evening there was a great gathering at the Cyrstal Palace for the double purpose of hearing Max Maretzek's operatic company and balloting for the Presidency. The Sun says at half-past 11 report gave Fillmore 25 majority.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

By Quebec and Philadelphia we have this week the English mails, but by them little and unimportant European news. The Guards had a dinner on a magnificent scale at the Surrey Gardens, London, of which two thousand men partook. Major Edwards, the oldest soldier in the English army, presiding. Sir William Temple, Minister at Naples, Lord Palmerston's only brother, is dead. Sir Colin Campbell is to be appointed Inspector General of Infantry. Kossuth was to lecture at Oldham. A large Chartist meeting was held at Todmorton, to welcome the return of John Frost to public life.

Nothing from France. The Spanish government has decided on disarming the National Guards throughout the kingdom, and has already accomplished it in the province of Madrid. There have been bread riots in some parts of Portugal and many arrests made in the hopes of detecting a conspiracy under that guise. A poor harvest throughout the country, vines likewise a failure, and a disease among the cattle. Russia is bent on squaring up to the Riff Pirates who took part in the attack of the corvette Dantzig. Pussia offers to fit out two or three ships to aid the Prussian expedition.

Some few fatal cases of cholera had occurred at Stockholm, Sweden; General Andrew Bodisco, the Russian military Envoy, was the first victim.

From Our Utah Correspondent.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, July 31st, 1856.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR—In the midst of the hurry of harvest, we devote a short time to write you a few items of what is transpiring in this blest Territory. It is well known to all the civilized world, that we are located in the valleys of the great American Basin, some portions of the rim rising from eleven to sixteen thousand feet above the level of the sea; therefore we are isolated from "the rest of mankind," having but little communication with the world, for if our friends write to us, it is a risk whether the letters come to this city or not, and therefore as a general thing, we have nobody to write to. The weather for the past month has been excessively dry, with the exception of some three showery days, which was a great relief not only to the Saints but to vegetation; they gave a renewal of life and vigor to all. The streams are comparatively dry, and we are bound to acknowledge the hand of God in all things; for it is miraculous that there is any wheat at all, many fields of it not having grown a foot high, yet the ears being tolerably well filled. The potatoes too are in many places cut down to the earth by an army of caterpillars and tobacco worms; the drouth in other places causes the vines to wilt, and on examination there are no potatoes at the roots.

In addition to all these calamities, Jack Frost visited the low lands on the 23d June, and as though he really thought the people did not believe he could come on the shortest night of the year, he visited many fields of corn, potatoes, and vines on the nights of the 16th and 17th of July, and left his icy mark wherever he went, for vegetation wilted under his rude embrace.

If such a continued scene of trials were to be poured out upon any other people in any part of the world, they would be entirely discouraged, and would vacate their farms; sometimes we hear a sound as of people in the lower world wanting to live in these upper valleys; but if this people were to vacate them in 1857, there is no other people that would be compelled to live in these mountains for two years; for they would perish either by famine or by killing each other in quarrelling about the water to irrigate their fields; so you can proclaim boldly a few naked truths to enlighten those who are now sitting in Egyptian darkness on the subject of this exalted Territory.

I have seen Sister Taylor this morning; she and all your family are enjoying good health and spirits. Yours truly, W. WOODRUFF.

The late accounts from Utah hold out poor encouragement for loafers. We are glad, however, to learn of the good spirit that prevails among our brethren and sisters there, and their confidence in the God of their fathers. There are many things not for the present joyous but grievous, yet they work out for those who work righteousness and fear God a far more, exceeding and eternal weight of glory.—[ED.

TELEGRAPHIC.

From the South—The Late Storm.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 4, 1856.

The late storm prevailed heavily at Charleston and Savannah; but so far no serious marine disasters have been reported. Considerable damage was done to the railroads by the rain.

A North Carolina railroad bridge gave way, carrying down a locomotive and a portion of the train attached to it. Five persons including the engineer and fireman, are reported killed.

There were three deaths by yellow fever at Charleston on Monday.

Fire at Manchester, N.H.

MANCHESTER, N.H., Sept. 4, 1856.

A fire broke out here last night, on Lowell and Concord streets, destroying four stables and several dwellings, together with Melodeon Hall. Wm. Patten, E. P. Orfull, and Alpheus Gay were the principal sufferers. Loss about $15,000.

Serious Fire in Pennsylvania.

COLUMBIA, Pa., Sept. 9, 1856.

A serious fire is raging opposite the town of Wrightsville, destroying the lumber yards alongside the river. The Columbia firemen have gone to their neighbors to ask assistance.

Fire in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 9, 1856.

Dickson's cotton mill, in the Twenty-third Ward, was burned this evening. The fire commenced in the drying room. Eighty persons in the upper stories narrowly escaped with their lives, many of them having to leap from the windows. Loss $18,000.

Scene in a French Court.

Government Regulations of Theatres in Paris.

Narcissus—Your Honor, I am a dramatic artist, and my line that of "lovers." I am forced to be excessively affectionate in my roles, but my warmth, my enthusiasm, in fact everything which brings down the house is now sought to be turned to my disadvantage.

Judge—Explain yourself.

Narcissus—Why, I receive a hundred francs a month, and they want to make me pay one hundred and fifty for properties.

Judge—Properties! What kind of properties?

Narcissus—Kisses. [Laughter.] A hundred and fifty francs for kisses for one man; it's exorbitant. [Renewed laughter.] That, however, is the amount which Valsin, our noble father, has the audacity to demand of me.

The Father—Stop, old fellow.

Judge—How is that?

Father—It is easily understood. In every theatre there exists the following regulations:

ART. 1. When the stage directions require an actor to kiss an actress, he must merely pretend to do so.

ART. 2. Every actor who shall kiss an actress without her formal permission, shall be fined five francs per kiss.

ART. 3. Pressing an actress upon the heart shall be fined two francs and a half.

Now, Narcissus has pressed my wife to his heart ten times, instead of merely pretending to do so. That makes twenty-five francs.

Narcissus—It's more than it's worth.

Father—Besides, he has kissed her twenty-five times, and no mistake about it, which thus makes up the sum claimed, namely, a hundred and fifty francs.

Narcissus—I didn't kiss her without her consent; so that I don't owe any thing.

Father—My wife declares to the contrary.

Narcissus—That's good; do you expect your wife to tell you the truth on such a matter? I rebut her evidence.

Father—I demand payment according to dramatic usage.

Narcissus—Well, since you are determined, let's come to terms. I'll make a reasonable offer.

Father—That's agreed.

Narcissus—I've had twenty-five kisses from your wife.

Father—Yes.

Narcissus—Well, I offer to return them to her. [Tremendous laughter.]

When the Judge had succeeded in restoring silence, he finished the discussion by sending the parties to their manager, desiring him to arrange the dispute. We hope the noble father showed himself magnanimous.

United States Mails Salt Lake City.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, MAY 31, 1856.

PROPOSALS for conveying the mails of the United States from the first day of December, 1856, to the 30th day of November, 1860, on the following route, will be received at the Contract Office of this Department until 9 A. M. of the 15th of October, 1856, to be decided the next day, to wit:

No. 8911 From Independence, (Mo.) via Fort Kearney and Fort Laramie, in Nebraska Territory, to Salt Lake City, in Utah Territory, 1,150 miles and back, once a month.

Leave Independence the first day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Salt Lake City on the last day of the month at 8 a m;

Leave Salt Lake City on the second day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Independence by the last day of the month.

NOTES.

Bidders are required to inform themselves of the actual distance, the weight and bulk of the mails to be carried (the whole mail required to be taken each trip,) and all other points essential to a correct understanding of their liability for the proper performance of the required service, before making their proposals, which must be guarantied by two responsible persons, certified to as such by a postmaster or judge of a court of record; and contract must be entered into by the successful bidder, with surety, before the 1st day of December, 1856.

No pay will be made for trips not performed, and for each of such omissions not satisfactorily explained three times the pay of the trip may be deducted. For arrivals so far behind time as to break connexion with depending mails, and not sufficiently excused, one fourth of the compensation for the trip is subject to forfeiture. Fines will be imposed, unless the delinquency be promptly and satisfactorily explained, for neglecting to take the mail from or into a post office; for suffering it to be injured, destroyed, robbed, or lost; and for refusing, after demand, to convey the mail as frequently as the contractor runs, or is concerned in running, vehicles on the route. The Postmaster-General may annul the contract for repeated failures to run agreeably to contract, or for disobeying the post office laws or instructions of the Department. The Post master-General may alter the schedule; he may also order an increase of service by allowing therefor a pro rata increase on the contract pay; he may also curtail or discontinue the service in whole or in part, of pro rata decrease of pay, allowing one month's extra compensation on the amount of service dispensed with. Bids should be addressed to the "Second Assistant Postmaster General," superscribed "Proposals for Salt Lake City Mails."

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the transgression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous avons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immergé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

The Saint.—A Sonnet.

BY ELDER W. G. MILLS, UTAH.

'Tis not the downcast look, the outward show,
The placid smile that decks a holy face,
Nor the distorted visage where we trace
The mournful aspect of the man of woe;
Nor clasped hand, nor the uplifted eye,
Where'er the name of God in prayer we hear;
Nor yet the soul that really is sincere,
(For Error has her vot'ries that would lie
Subject to death, ere they'd renounce her mode,)
That constitutes the Saint. Ah! no: 'tis he Who cries, "What wilt thou have me do, O Lord!"
And yields obedience to the heavenly word;
Receives that Spirit which will make him free,
And lives by faith and every word of God!

From the Deseret News, July 30, 1856.

Celebration of the 24th of July, 1856.

In the Tops of the Mountains.

On the morning of the 23d, Prests. Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball and Jedediah M. Grant and many citizens from Great Salt Lake City and surrounding country, with their wives and children, entered the mouth of Big Cottonwood kanyon, on their way to the head-waters of that stream, to spend the ninth anniversary of the entrance of the Pioneers into the Valley of Great Salt Lake.

It would be folly in me to attempt a description of the wild grandeur of the scenery, whose precipitous crags and towering peaks now found the beholder in their vast and rugged spell, and at other points draped their huge proportions with the rich beauties of the vegetable kingdom, from the lowly plant to the giant pine, until word-painting is at fault and even the pencil of the most skilful artist would fail in giving a faithful delineation.

In the year 1852, the Legislature of the Territory of Utah granted to Joseph Young and others a charter to the kanyon, and the company built a mill a short distance above its mouth, which has since been taken down.

Prest. Brigham Young and others bought the claims and improvements of the chartered company, and in the fall of 1854 began to make roads and build mills. They now have three excellent saw mills in operation, which have already cut over 800,000 feet of lumber.

I could not but remark the appropriation of the motto on a flag, floating over the third mill, "Industry Rewarded." Opposite this mill is a large double log building, I should think 40 feet long by 20 wide, and over it we observed a flag with the motto, "Our Mountain Home."

There is a blacksmith's shop at the second mill, and all the mills there are comfortable and commodious log buildings for the accommodation of the workmen and their families.

The company now occupying the kanyon is styled "The Big Cottonwood Lumber Company." To properly appreciate the vast amount of labor they have expended in building mills and houses, and in making roads to the head of the kanyon, a work previously pronounced impossible by many experienced men, one must pass over the road, located and worked with the best judgement and skill of any in the mountains, and see for himself.

The company design to build five more mills at different points, from which the timber in the main and numerous side kanyons will be easily accessible.

All who passed up the kanyon were requested to show their tickets at the gate close by the first mill.

INVITATION TICKET.

PIC-NIC PARTY AT THE HEADWATERS OF BIG COTTONWOOD.

PREST. BRIGHAM YOUNG respectfully invites —— —— and family to attend a Pic-Nic Party at the Lake in Big Cottonwood Kanyon, on Thursday 24th of July.

☞ You will be required to start from the city very early on Wednesday morning, as no one will be permitted, after 2 o'clock, p. m., of the 23d, to pass the first mill, about four miles up the kanyon.

All persons are forbidden to make or kindle fires at any place in the kanyon, except on the camp ground.

G. S. L. City, July 18, 1856.

After travelling up the kanyon some 10 miles in an easterly direction, the road turns to about S. E. by S., the kanyon opens, the bluffs are less rugged, having their slopes densely clothed with pine, and in about 7 miles you reach the open and nearly level area containing from three to four hundred acres, and surrounded with lofty mountains, many of them covered with timber almost to their summits.

This lovely spot is adorned with beautiful copses of pine, fringes and clumps of willows, clear grassy patches, two low rocky ridges, sprinkled with immense blocks of granite, and a small clear lake, covering about 40 acres, on its west border, which is fed by one of the two small streams that heighten the enchantment by their meanderings.

The Lumber Company have been at considerable expense, expressly for the occasion, in making about five miles of road, above their upper cabin, passable for carriages, in building two rafts for excursions upon the lake and angling for the numerous trout in its waters, and building a bowery 40 feet by 24, comfortably provided with floor and seats.

The camp ground was located on a fairy like spot, overlooking the surrounding meadows and lake. The bowery, Prest. Young's marquee and Prest. Kimball's tent occupied an open space amid the small copses of pine, while the numerous carriages were conveniently grouped around. A massive granite rock, 54 feet in circumference by 4 feet high, stood at the entrance to this lovely spot; from the centre of this rock, and apparently without earth to sustain them, grew three pine trees, which were fringed round at the top of the rock with a thick cluster of young pines about two feet high. A large flag was suspended from these trees bearing the motto, "Clear the Way," with the all-seeing Eye in an oval in the upper margin, above two clasped hands, under which, inscribed upon a scroll, were the words, "Blessings follow Sacrifices;" a representation of the upper crossing of the North Fork of the Platte, with the Pioneer company upon both banks and crossing upon rafts, occupies the centre, "The Pioneer of 1847 at the upper crossing of the Platte, in pursuit of the Valleys of the Mountains," fills the lower margin.

A little further to the right, and near the N. W. corner of the bowery, is a stately pine from which floated several flags, among them, and near the top of the tree, was a small one bearing the representation of an old gentleman seated between two bags of money; the one on his left was very large, resting on a marble stand, and marked with bold letters, "Oregon," with the old gentleman's hand resting upon it; in his right hand, between his thumb and fore finger, he held a small bag marked "Utah," motto, "Uncle's Justice to Utah."

A little lower down another flag had the representation of a bundle of sticks bound together with strong cords, and the inscription "United we are one."

Beneath that was another representing a hand holding a scroll unfolded, on which is the inscription, "The Constitution of the United States, Equal Rights, woe to its violaters." Then came the Clerks' Own, 4-4 to the friends of the Union, no 1-4 to its enemies."

From the front of the bowery hung three flags, the first having the representation of a rock in the midst of the ocean, with a flag floating from its summit and bearing the inscription, "The Constitution of the United States," and having inscribed over it, "The Mormons defend the rock, who can prevail against it!"

The second flag had the picture of a lion with one paw upon a rock, above which is the inscription, "Utah Courage," and underneath, "The spirit of '76 is not dead."

The third had the representation of a lion standing, a lamb lying beside him, and the inscription "Peace reigns here."

At the head of the bowery is a large pine 100 feet high, to the top of which Bro. John Bagley, assisted by Patriarch John Smith, son of Hyrum Smith, who was martyred for his religion in Carthage jail, fastened the flag of the United States.

Nature seems to have exerted herself to outvie art in forming this enchantingly beautiful place. The trees grew in pyramidal groups with thick foliage, each group fringed with small pines some two feet high, back of which gradually rose other trees gently leading the sight to the lofty tops of the centre. Every heart that could feel, every mind that could appreciate the skilful blending of the sublime and picturesque, and realize the deep silent peace that all nature seemed bathed in, could not entertain an angry thought, a jealous feeling, an unvirtuous desire, and hardly a willingness to ever again mingle with the ungodly world.

Every one wished to clothe his impressions with words, but the language of the trees, the rocks, the streams, and the bank of peace were so eloquent that a sensation of the want of expressive language left many a person to silently reflect in a fullness of joy and wonder.

Maj. R. T. Burton, with a detachment of Life Guards, was detailed to guard against accidents at the swings and on the lake, and to take charge of the animals as they roamed freely over the richly grassed meadows.

Capt. Dimick B. Huntington, assisted by Elisha Averett, had charge of the cannon.

Capt. Ballo's band, the Nauvoo brass band and the Martial band, and many other musicians were present.

At sunset of the 23d, the camp assembled for prayers.

The choir sung, "Come, come, ye Saints."

Prayer by Elder Amasa Lyman, chaplain of the camp, after which Prest. Brigham Young made the following remarks:

"To-morrow morning, at 7 o'clock, we wish the camp to again assemble here for prayers, with the exception of those who must necessarily stay at the wagons. We wish those who have children here to see that they are in the tents, and not have the cry go forth that this, that and the other child is lost. I also wish to give a word of caution to all who may visit the small lake just west of us. I would rather have staid at home than have it said, that a child has been lost or any person drowned through visiting this place.

Suppose that a child was lost in these woods and could not be found; suppose you should lose a sister, a daughter, or a companion on this lake; you would always think on your visit to Big Cottonwood kanyon with bitter regret. A circumstance of this nature would mar the peace of every person.

I wish the sisters and children to keep away from those rafts, unless they have some person in their company capable of taking care of them; if they know enough to do as they should, they will listen to this counsel.

Here are swings and a bowery prepared for your enjoyment; here are most beautiful groves, meandering streams and a lovely sheet of water, amid the towering peaks of the Wahsatch mountains. Here are the stupendous works of the God of Nature, though all do not appreciate his wisdom as manifested in his works, but are tempted to recklessness through the buoyant feelings of youth and health, and without caution are liable to run headlong into every danger.

Some, if they had the power, would be on the other side of these lofty peaks in ten minutes, instead of calmly meditating upon the wonderful works of God, and his kind providence that has watched over us and provided for us, more especially during the last ten or fifteen years of our history. I could sit here for a month and reflect on the mercies of our God, and humble myself in thankfulness because of all his favors to myself as an individual, and to all this great people.

What do you think Joseph and Hyrum would have given to have seen this day in the flesh, and to have been here instead of being taken to Carthage, like lambs to the slaughter, and butchered by their enemies? We are here hid up in the Lord's secret chambers, according to his promise, where none can molest us or make us afraid.

Here is a good floor which we have prepared expressly for your enjoyment, and here are the musicians ready to accommodate you. You can enjoy yourselves in the dance, in your tents, meditating on the matchless power and goodness of our God, or in gazing upon a splendid grouping of the mighty, the lovely and varied productions of nature.

Be prudent, and let every man, woman and child take care of themselves, and see that others are taken care of.

The guard should be on the alert continually, to see that no person is running into danger, and that the animals are taken care of. And again, I say, I wish the sisters to take the precaution to keep away from the lake, that they may not go from here sick with colds caused by damp feet.

Enjoy yourselves, and if you observe these few words of caution, I think we can spend to-morrow very happily. I do not wish to have to reflect on the loss of a life in my own family, or in yours.

We have made the last five miles of the road expressly that the brethren and sisters might come here without accidents, and we will make you as comfortable as it lays in our power to do.

Mothers, take care of your children, for they are a blessing to you; and I bless you all, in the name of Jesus Christ. Hearken to counsel and you will be blessed, from this time, henceforth and forever: Amen."

Music and dancing enlivened the few hours preceding the night's rest.

TWENTY-FOURTH.

Reveille at five minutes before five a. m.

At 5, two rounds from the cannon woke the silent echoes of centuries, as the roar crashed through the dense pines and reverberated from peaks, glens and dells, announcing to a world that freemen were celebrating the blessings which make life valuable.

At half-past 5, three rounds were fired for our Representative and Delegates.

At 6, nine rounds were fired, one for each year the Saints have dwelt in these valleys.

At half-past 6, three rounds were fired for the First Presidency.

At 7, the camp assembled for prayers. The morning was cloudless and lovely, earth, air and sky contributing to the deep-toned joy pervading every bosom.

The choir sung,

"On the mountain top appearing,
Lo the sacred herald stands."

Prayer by Elder Lyman.

At 8, the United States flag was unfurled from the tall pine at the bowery, and national enthusiasm glowed upon every countenance, as the flag of our country floated high and proudly in the free mountain breeze, about 8000 feet above the level of the sea; probably the highest that ever a flag was hoisted on the continent of America, when surrounded by a large concourse of people in the celebration of any day.

Music, dancing and other varied sources of enjoyment lent their aid to heighten the keen zest of the joyous company.

At half-past 8, martial music, under Capt. Averett, serenaded on the lake.

At half-past 2, a hymn, composed for the occasion by Miss E. R. Snow, was sung by Elder James Smithies, assisted by some of the choir.

Song for the 24th of July 1856.
TUNE—"The Merry Mormons."

We now a cheerful tribute pay
To that eventful, glorious day
Which sheds an everlasting ray
Of light, to gladden Zion.

CHORUS.
Shout, ye hills, and shout ye valleys—
Shout, ye lofty mountains;
Ye rugged rocks, prolong the shout,
And echo through the kanyons.
Hallelujah, hallelujah—
Praise the God of Joseph:
Long live the Prophet Brigham Young
To pioneer for Zion.

The deed we celebrate, will be
Renowned thro'out eternity,
And stand in high celebrity
When nations are forgotten.
Shout, ye hills, &c.

Long life, and health and merry cheer
To every faithful Pioneer:
The dove-like Peace is perching here,
And brooding on the mountains.
Shout, ye hills, &c.

Here's sweeter music than the noise
Of "Uncle Sam's" contentious boys,
Who strive like children for their toys,
And make a game of Congress.
Shout, ye hills, &c.

We'll let them fuss, and fret, and stew—
Brow-beat and cane each other too;
We have better work to do,
And better men to do it.
Shout, ye hills, &c.

We've kanyon work and kanyon joys,
We've mountain life and mountain boys—
Here heaven-born Freedom's mellow voice,
Earth's highest note is sounding.
Shout, ye hills, &c.

The hosts of Israel gather home—
To Deseret all nations come—
With wagons, horses, mules, and some
Are coming now with hand-carts.
Shout, ye hills, &c.

To every Saint a hearty cheer—
May those who're faithful gather here,
And when the Bridegroom shall appear
Be ready for the supper.
Shout, ye hills, &c.

Comic songs by Bros. Randall and Margetts.

Toasts read by Elder Geo. D. Watt.

By Elder Frederick Kesler:

Brigham Young: The Lion of the Lord. He will never be less.

Heber C. Kimball: One of the Lord's anointed—pay attention to his sayings.

Jedediah M. Grant: One of the Lord's mighty chieftains. May he live long to be a comfort to his friends, and a terror to his enemies.

The 24th of July: Lift up your heads, ye Saints of the Lord, and rejoice.

By Elder W. W. Phelps:

Let her rip and let her roll,
As the heathen nations do;
And the Mormons sit and laugh,
While the devil pops them through.

"Mormonism": A plurality of worlds, a plurality of Gods, and a plurality of wives, with all truth in all eternity.

A Chamber in the Mountains: The way to it was constructed by the "Lion of the Lord." Blessed be they that walk blameless.

Prest. Brigham Young: With the keys of heaven and earth to open and shut, and all Israel to sanction.

By Elder C. Lambert:

The Saints: May we ever cherish the principles of peace, virtue and liberty.

The Authorities of this Church: They have proved themselves worthy; may we ever cherish and honor their counsels, that peace, union and good will may crown our labors.

By Elder G. D. Watt:

The Big Cottonwood Lumber Company: The rocks and pines of this rugged kanyon, hitherto deemed impracticable, have yielded to their skill, industry and perseverence—unto whom we are indebted for an access to this secluded vale.

Brigham Young—ever merciful.
Heber C. Kimball—ever true.
Jedediah M. Grant—ever just.

Bro. Hugh Findlay sung the following—

Song for the 24th of July, 1856.
BY W. G. MILLS.
TUNE—"The days when we went Gipseying."

The Scot may praise his tow'ring hills,
The Swiss his craggy peaks,
And sing with rapture that he feels
The Liberty he seeks;
Yet tho' they scorn the tyrants chains,
And smile at death's alarms;
The tyrant Reason o'er them reigns,
And grasps them in his arms.

CHORUS.
But here with heav'nas pure light above,
And loftier hills displayed,
Are truth, and liberty, and love
By holy men conveyed.

Long have the gentiles sought to break
The man-child's noble heart
With cruelty, till Brigham spake
And bade him thence depart;
He fled to seek a sure retreat
Across the mountains' brow,
Where never trod the christians' feet
And found it where we're now.
For here with heav'nas pure light, &c.

We thank our God that we possess,
The mountains' strong embrace,
Where tyranny henceforth shall cease
To trample on our race;
Up with the banner! let it fly,
A signal to the earth—
We've raised the flag of Liberty,
July the Twenty-Fourth.
For here with heav'n's pure light, &c.

We'll quickly learn the law of right
In this great Mormon school,
And walk according to its light,
That we may learn to rule;
For Zion's learning all she can,
Since this auspicious day,
To execute God's righteous plan
On all who disobey.
For here with heav'n's pure light, &c.

Go stem those waters in their course
That madly issue forth—
Or stop those fountains in their source
And seal them in the earth—
So may the Christian, Jew, and Turk,
With all their hellish guile,
Attempt to stay God's glorious work
That's growing on this soil.
For here with heav'n's pure light, &c.

Our Brigham, and our Heber, too,
With Jedediah Grant,
The triune power to bring us thro,'
Are all the guide we want;
God bless them! may they live to spend
Many such days on earth,
That they may see the work extend
Majestically forth.
For here with heav'n's pure light, &c.

Three rounds from the cannon for the songs and toasts.

A poem was read by Bro. Naisbitt, followed by a round from the cannon.

Dancing resumed.

Eight rounds from the cannon signalled the setting of the sun.

The Martial Band beat the retreat, and the United States flag was furled.

Camp assembled for prayers.

The choir sung a hymn.

Prayer by Prest. J. M. Grant.

Our Father and our God, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, we bow before thee, and thank thee that we have the privilege of coming to the tops of these mountains to worship thee, our God, and to celebrate the liberty of thy people and their entrance into these peaceful valleys and mountains.

We thank thee for these mountains, for the fountains of waters that flow from them, for the timber that grows upon them, and for all the blessings thou hast vouchsafed to thy people in this land.

We thank thee that thou hast preserved this land from the eye of the wicked, that they have not desired it, that they have not coveted it, that thou hast kept it for thy people and hast brought them hither, through the instrumentality of thy servant Brigham, whom thou hast inspired by the Holy Ghost.

We thank thee that we here rest secure from our enemies, that we and our families enjoy peace and rest from the persecutions of those who hate thy chosen people.

We thank thee for this goodly inheritance which thou hast vouchsafed to thy people, and for the privilege of raising our banners and ensigns on these mountain tops. May our enemies never have power over us, and may we be blessed by doing right and keeping thy commandments, by living pure, and by being watchful and careful to do no evil, that we may multiply in our families, in our flocks and in our herds, in our fields and habitations.

We pray thee, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that thou wouldst bless this valley and all the adjacent valleys; and bless the streams of water that flow from the mountains. As we are at the head of the Big Cottonwood Kanyon, we pray thee that thou wilt bless it, and the water that flows to the mills and to the land we cultivate. And may the timber, and grass and vegetation of every description, growing in this little valley in the tops of these mountains, be blessed; and we consecrate and dedicate it to thee for the benefit of thy people, for their happiness, that they may rest here and be safe. Bless all the elements that are here; may the rocks and mountains be blessed, and every thing that has life.

We pray thee, in the name of the Lord Jesus, that thou wouldst bless thy servant Brigham and those associated with him, who have taken pains to prepare the way and kindly invite us to these regions. May we feel that we are blest, and that the Lord, through the dispensation of his providence, has granted to us these favors. We ask thy choicest blessings on thy servants, Brigham, Heber and the Twelve, and upon all thy faithful people in every kingdom and nation. Bless our friends, and all who speak comforting words to thy people, and defend them, and may the enemies of truth and righteousness be confounded, and not have power to injure the people of God. Bless thy servant George A. Smith, and thy servant John Taylor, and thy servant John M. Bernhisel, and bless all thy servants in every land and clime. Bless those who write and defend thy people through the press, may our prayers come up before thee in their behalf, for thou knowest we have not sinned against thee in these groves—in the kanyon. We do not visit groves, as did Israel of old, to commit adultery, nor to depart from the Lord our God. But we desire to appear before thee with clean hands and hearts, to call upon thee for thy blessing and do thy will, that our inheritance may be blest and all we have, and all the efforts we may make to build up Zion and rear temples to thy name may be blessed, and the people of God may flock to the mountains by tens of thousands; may the wicked be cut off, may they be taken in the snares they have spread for thy people, and fall into the pits they have dug for thy Saints, and may they not prosper on the earth.

We desire that thou wouldst fulfill the covenants made with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, with Lehi and Nephi, and with all the prophets that have lived on this land, that Zion may come down from above and Zion come up from beneath; that every band may be broken and all Israel be saved. O Lord, we ask thee to bless us in our efforts on the earth; may righteousness and peace spread as the light of the morning, may we rejoice in the natural fortresses of this land, and may we be the pioneers of truth, men who will break the crust of nations, gather Israel and send the truth to every clime. May we accomplish the great work thou didst commence through thy servant Joseph, that truth may reign on the earth and righteousness predominate among all people. May we have power over the wicked nations, that Zion may be the seat of government for the universe, the law of God be extended and the scepter of righteousness swayed over this wide world; and eventually with the redeemed may we be brought to celebrate thy praise, in thy kingdom and presence. These favors, and all we need to prepare us to live here, to dwell with thee and the sanctified hereafter, we humbly crave in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Prest. Brigham Young then remarked:

I wish to tell you that I am satisfied with every individual that has come up to this kanyon, and I am perfectly satisfied with our day's exercises. We have been as happy, I presume, as we are capable of being; I have enjoyed myself extremely well. I will now ask my brethren and sisters whether they are satisfied, if you are, follow my example. [He raised his right hand, and all raised theirs.] If there are any who are not satisfied, they can make it known after they leave this place.

I have enjoyed this day, because of the liberty each has enjoyed. We have celebrated the 4th and 24th of July ever since we first came into the valleys in the mountains, but I have never had the privilege, before this day, of freely uoting myself. Hitherto I have been placed, by the people, where I must sit, and have been told to walk just so, eyes right, eyes left, eyes front, now forward, right, left, right, left, etc. To-day I have been at liberty, looking round and seeing the people enjoy themselves, without any stringent rules and regulations, and I may say that we have had perfect freedom. I told you to do anything or everything you wished to, if you would not do wrong and enjoy yourselves in the way that would make you most happy.

I would like to have had the whole church here, but when I select a party, on any occasion, I never knew where to stop short of getting the last Saint on earth enrolled in it. I have no distinction in my feelings, for I feel that we are all one family, and all brethren and sisters. The whole church could not come here, we could only invite a few; and as we have observed strict decorum since we came out, I wish it to be observed until we leave the kanyon, and from that time henceforth, that when we leave we may have the pleasing reflection that no accident has occurred to mar our enjoyment.

We wish every man, woman and child to observe the strictest law of equity in the rest of our enjoyments this evening. When morning comes we will fire a salute to wake you up, when we wish the brethren and sisters to arise, get their breakfasts, and take up the line of march, and if you see any persons in the mud, pick them up and carry them with you. We wish the company, so soon as breakfast is over, to put out their fires and vacate this ground, for I intend to tarry with the lumber company, until the rest are gone, and see that the fires are well put out, when we shall take up our line of march and follow you.

Many times I have a feeling to bring this people under a covenant, but doubt as to the propriety of doing so operates as a check upon that feeling. While the toasts were being read, some of the brethren wished me to make some remarks, and it was strongly in my mind to ask, will you live your religion from this time, henceforth and forever? and to bring the people under a covenant. But they are already under one, and my feelings are, I would rather they would not make covenants, than to make them and break them. Live your religion; live honestly before your God, deal justly with your own conscience and with one another, and do right from henceforth, and you shall be blessed.

I could say a great deal on this occasion, the anniversary of our emancipation from the yoke of bondage, but I should say that which I do not wish to say, were I to give free vent to my thoughts. I shall wait with patience, in anticipation of the day when the people of God will triumph over the wiles and powers of satan, and assume their place among the nations of the earth. But let me tell you that this will never be, until this people are a holy people. They have got to be sanctified; and when I can see the armies of Israel sanctified, no matter whether they are many or few, when that time comes they will go forth and maintain their rights, "conquering and to conquer," until satan is bound. But we will wait with patience: all we have to do is to live our religion and wait, for the time will come as quickly as we are prepared for it.

I will say to the brethren who have entertained us with music, you will please receive my thanks for your attendance here. I understand that you ask no pay for your services; that is right, and just as it should be.

I will now propose that we do not dissolve this meeting, if that is the feelings of those present, but adjourn until the 23d day of July, 1857, to meet on this ground by 4 o'clock p. m., preparatory to celebrating the 24th; that virtually gives the people present an invitation, aside from those I shall invite hereafter. The brethren and sisters who are now here and those whom I shall invite I shall be happy to see here on another season; but I give no liberty to any person to invite others to come here, without my permission. I have no question but that all have friends whom they would like to bring with them, but order and decorum must be maintained in this, as in all matters pertaining to the kingdom of God. [Prest. Heber C. Kimball moved that the meeting be adjourned to the 23d of July, 1857; seconded by Prest. J. M. Grant, and passed unanimously.] I expected the vote would be unanimous.

Brethren and Sisters, may Almighty God bless you; you have my prayers and my faith continually, and I bless you, in the name of Jesus Christ, and I bless your little ones and all that pertains to you, with the whole house of Jacob, inasmuch as it is my right to bless you.

Now you can dance as long as you please, but do not wear out the musicians.

Dancing continued until 2 a. m. of the 25th.

Thus ended one of the best and happiest days of our lives. It certainly was a foretaste of the day to come when the Spirit of God shall be poured out upon all flesh, and when Zion shall be freed from struggling against the powers of satan and a wicked world.

July 25.—At sunrise, six rounds from the cannon and music from the bands awaked the camp, and soon all were busily engaged in preparing to start for their less elevated homes.

During the egress from the kanyon, one of Prest. Kimball's wives described a bear sitting upon a rock not far from the roadside, and apparently looking upon the strange spectacle of a long line of carriages in so wild a region. Not satisfied with a distant view, the bear approached the road and was shot by Bro. Charles Decker with a Sharp's rifle. Three shots were fired before bruin succumbed; the first passed through the lights, the second grazed the heart, and the third pierced the brain.

All returned without accident to man or beast, and no accident occurred to mar in the least the rich enjoyment of an anniversary in one of the Lord's secret chambers, the memory of which will be fondly cherished by those who shared in the priveleges so liberally and courteously extended by the Big Cottonwood Lumber Company.

About 480 persons, with 71 carriages and 201 horses and mules, participated in this ever memorable trip to the headwaters of Big Cottonwood.

GEORGE D. WATT, Reporter

It is a singular fact that in all heathendom but few can be found who speak or use the names of their dumb gods irreverently, while there is scarcely a Christian community destitute of blasphemers and swearers.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, SEPT. 20, 1856.

Anti-Mormon Book Speculation.

IF a thousand and more years before paper, type and press were thought of, men manifested such restless anxiety to see their names appended to the parchment sheet as to cause the wise man Solomon to exclaim that to book-making there was no end, we wonder what he would say of some of the present fast generation, who "burn to see their name in print!" Besides that numerous class of men who fly to the printer's office for deliverance from some confused cogitations or the shadow of an idea that has by great effort and some inexplicable circumstance found a passage through the interminable mists of their excited brain, there is another class who, stimulated solely by the hopes of an increase of pelf, send to the world under their own name the labors of other and better men which they have pilfered without the slightest recognition of the source of their obligation. To these may be added the bigot who scruples not to serve himself of the name and writings of a respectable and favorite author to gain the ear of the public, which he could never have gained by his own merit or worth, in order to pour out his spleen and venom upon the object of his displeasure or the victim of his wrath. We have lived long enough in the world to have witnessed all we here hint at, and more too, of the mean, frenzied, unscrupulous, soulless proceedings of some pious christians who have figured in print. For illustration of all that can legitimately be drawn from what we have now written, we may direct the attention of the curious to a volume, lately published in this city, professing to be "The Religious, Social, and Political History of the Mormons or Latter-Day Saints," &c. "edited with important additions by Samuel M. Smucker, A. M."

We are not acquainted with Samuel M. Smucker, A. M., but we had a pretty intimate acquaintance with nine-tenths of the book in question five years before his name was daubed to it; we think, therefore, it not mal apropos to give our American readers a few items that are patent to the British public. In 1851 Mr. Mayhew, of the Illustrated London News office, happened to be in the Liverpool docks on business, when he had his attention directed to our emigration, a portion of which was at that time on the eve of embarking for this country. Being engaged in publishing a series of popular illustrated works, he immediately announced to the public his decision to add the "Illustrated Mormons" to the number. Shortly afterwards this writer made the acquaintance of the presiding Elder of the London Conference, who placed in his hands all our publications, and an eminent artist, a member of the Church, was engaged to furnish the sketches of scenes and persons for the new work. We never expect from any writer on Mormonism justice and impartiality, nor did we anticipate finding in Mr. Mayhew an exception, but we have ever regarded his work as tolerably fair, and as good as a man with prejudices against us, writing for the public pence, was likely to produce. We could have objected to many things, but we are not aware that any Mormon pen ever took the gentleman to task: as we can get along pretty well with anything approaching fair play, and are not so thin skinned as to feel dreadfully pinched when anybody squeezes us a little tight. This, we believe, the only notice that has ever been taken of the work by our press.

Fancy our surprise, then, on purchasing the "History of the Mormons," "Religious, Social, and Political," to find it was our old English friend with a new name, new dress, and two additional chapters and two appendixes. In the New York preface, over the initials S. M. S., Philadelphia, July, 1856, there is the following piece of cool, unblushing impudence:

"The author has endeavored to discriminate impartially between the conflicting accounts as given, on the one hand by the Mormons, and on the other hand by their opponents; to guard against all exaggeration on either side, and to present fairly and clearly what seemed to be the truth in reference to the matter."

Now, S. M. S. evidently stands for Samuel M. Smucker, and as evident as language can make it, in the above quotation, he takes credit for the volume and its impartiality, while, as we have shown, he is neither the author of the volume nor is he even the author of that quotation, but uses the labors of another and better man to slide in his two chapters that contain the most confused, contradictory blackguardism that could be thrown together at hap-hazard. We have seen many attempts at history, but it is the most reel-ral, fiddle-faddle, tweedle-dee, tweedle-dum conglomeration that ever our eyes have scaned.

The highly creditable sources of his information are the highly respectable company of excommunicated apostates, Van Dusen, John C. Bennett, Philastus Hurlburt, with the late Capt. Gunnison and ex-Secretary Ferris. The bare mention of the names of the first three is sufficient without any further notice from us. To say his Satanic majesty has such a high regard for truth that he fears to use it lest it diminish, would be no more supererogation than to say the three gentlemen are equally careful; as for Gunnison and Ferris, if ever scribblers were hoaxed, they were while collecting their items for book-making.

When we read the works of these two gentlemen we were reminded of the following passage in Combe's introduction to his notes on the United States of North America, p. 11: "I was told that a certain person boasts of having given Miss Martineau erroneous information for the purpose of leading her into mistakes; and another in Philadelphia assures his friends that he 'crammed' Captain Marryatt with old 'Joe Millers,' which the Captain embodied into his books as facts illustrative of American manners."

No one who was in Utah at the time these gentlemen were gathering materials for their books but what was aware of their moves among the disaffected to get At something rich for eastern readers, and the sport some of the boys and girls had in retailing the well-spiced stories they had "crammed" them with, as they concluded that partial historians, who would dabble in filth and scandal without giving themselves the slightest trouble to examine if the story told was true or a hoax, might just as well pass for fools among strangers, who would read their books, as they certainly did among those whose history they pretended to give to the public; and thus what is given to hoax some impertinent coxcomb, who pushes his nose into another's business, passes off for grave truths.

We care not the ashes of a straw for the incongruous stuff that S. M. Smucker, A. M., has raked together, and we presume Mr. Mayhew can afford to be pilfered; but we deem it a duty we owe to the public and the Church to expose the cloven foot.

We remember being on the continent of Europe a few years since when one Amedée Pichot published in Paris a similar volume, as a history of the Mormons. He began by publishing between thirty and forty pages from Col. Kane's "Historical Discourse on the Mormons." As the gallant Colonel had none of the Smucker quality about him, and would not stoop to the prejudices of outsiders, nor tarnish the high reputation of his name by smucking (we coin a word) up the slanders of apostates, he simply related what he witnessed with impartiality; but that was not enough for Amedée Pichot—it would not serve his purpose; the moment, therefore, that he had established a claim to impartiality, he put into the Colonel's mouth all the abominable slanders he could gather from Bennett, Van Dusen and Hurlburt, just as S. M. S. has added his two chapters to the work of Mr. Mayhew; and it is thus that some men give an impartial history of the Mormons.

To stoop to refute the statements of S. M. Smucker, A. M., would be beneath us or any man who has a spark of self-respect. His egregious ignorance is in perfect keeping with his dull, insipid spleen, and beggars description. He is said to be the author of the "Life and Reign of Catherine II.," "Nicholas I. of Russia," etc. We should think his performance in Russian history must be something sublime: he has made such a fine splutter in touching some items of American history. The following quotation in reference to the Gladdenites will amuse some of our readers:

"But though they are under the ban, though Brigham stigmatizes their doctrine as the doctrine of demons, though they are fiercely condemned, yet all this does not prevent the faction of the Gladdenites from having a few adherents of considerable influence, among whom are Rigdon, William Smith, and J. J. Strang, all names of some prominence in the history of the Latter Day Saints."

His researches in the Bible are very profound. On the subject of polygamy, he says:

"This doctrine had its sole origin in the lust and sensuality of the founder of Mormonism, and it has had its strongest defense and perpetuity in the same qualities of his successors. Smith pretended to receive the Bible as authoritative when he first set up as a prophet, and yet that volume expressly teaches him the opposite principle and duty, from the first to the last page."

How glad some divines would be to have Samuel M. Smucker's specs. They have been long troubled for want of this evidence; for the more they sought from "the first to the last page," the more they found it policy to be "mum." Travel, Samuel, travel, and lend your specs to parsons and religious politicians at a small charge per person, and you need never again trouble the shades of Catherine and Nicholas with historical caricatures.

We might have expected he knew something about Jesus Christ, and what the Prophets and Apostles said about him, seeing he had gone over the Bible from "the first to the last page;" but just read this precious piece of information:

"They (the Mormons) nevertheless attribute the creation of the worlds to the second person in the Trinity, forgetful that he was only born, both as to his DIVINE and human natures, four thousand years after the creation of the world, of the Virgin Mary."

After that we give in. Philadelphia has produced some smart men; but if there be a smarter than Samuel we should like to see him. Where's Barnum!

Emigration from Europe

As many persons in this country expect friends by our first ship from Liverpool and have requested us to inform them of the opening of emigration we have now to state that by the Millenial Star of Sept. 6th, we learn that President Pratt anticipates chartering a ship for the Saints sometime next month.

Quite Cool.

WE clip the following precious morceau from the Alta Californian:

"The feeling in California against the Mormons is growing very strong, as the number of this people, with their filthy abominations, is increasing to a fearful extent upon our frontiers, and even within our very borders. It is already becoming an element in the politics of the country, and may in time take the shape of a more effectual instrument for rooting out weeds from the body politic."

From the above it would seem that the editor of the Alta Californian has just made the discovery "that there are Mormons in their midst, and that the number of this people, with their filthy abominations, is increasing to a fearful extent upon our frontiers, and even within our very borders." Astonishing! what an outrage for such abominable people as the Mormons to go among a people so virtuous, meek, gentle, pure, and law-abiding as are the Californians! Was it not enough that they should contaminate the mountains, without shocking the modesty and vitiating the purity of so chaste and immaculate a people! We are inclined to think that our editor has been dreaming. Why, Mr. Editor, it was you and your fellow defamers that went in among the Mormons, with your corruptions, instead of them coming in among you. It was the Mormon battalion that was the principal agency in conquering California. It was Mormon emigration that made some of the first settlements there. It was the Mormons that published the first newspaper that was ever issued there, long before your Alta Californian had an existence. The Mormons, as Americans, killed the first savages, made the first roads, and built the first bridges. It was Mormons who first found you your golden god, at whose shrine you have so assiduously worshipped, and whose demonic, withering influence has blasted almost every noble principle of your natures, obliterated the pure image of God from your souls, and left you, a poor, miserable wreck, a gang of murderers, outlaws, and mobocrats. It was the Mormons that fed thousands of your motley, ragged gangs, while on your way to worship at the shrine of this golden Moloch. And now this up-start will turn round and tell the people that the Mormons are coming among them! Wonderful discovery! Has he ever yet discovered that Mexicans have come among them!

But there is a feeling in California against the Mormons that certainly is rather cool. The Mormons have had a dreadful opinion about the doings in Kansas and California, but have cared very little about expressing it. If anarchy, insurrection, mob rule, violence and bloodshed have any influence in forming an opinion about any people, we have ample opportunities of forming ours; and when characters guilty of all these have told us that we are falling very much in their opinion, we do not consider it a circumstance very much to be lamented. Since our settlement in Utah only two violent deaths have taken place, and both of these were for seduction and adultery. In California upwards of twelve hundred have been murdered. If we were to cut a few score throats, get up a Vigilance Committee and hang a dozen or two; if we were to trample under foot all law and defy all authority: we no doubt should rise in their estimation; but as we are not quite so reckless and bloodthirsty, we presume it will be fruitless for us to seek to obtain their good graces.

It certainly is cool for men, who have trampled under foot all law, who are living in a state of open insurrection, whose hands are reeking with the blood of their fellow-men, and who are utterly defiant of all legal restraint, to draw up their pants, wipe their mouths with their coat sleeves, turn up their eyes, and very meekly inform the world that their neighbors, who are not guilty of one thousandth part of their crimes, are falling in their estimation. Let the Utonians send for a few more Sharp's rifles, Bowie-knives and Colt's revolvers; let them go to throat-cutting, banishing and hanging their citizens; let them imprison their judges and proclaim terror throughout all the land: and they will soon become elevated in the scale of modern civilization.

Central America.

THE difficulty between Great Britain and the United States over the interpretation of the Clayton Bulwer treaty is about to disappear—without humiliation to the one nation or victory to the other. Years of bother, bluster and menance terminates by Her Majesty's advisers screwing up courage enough to be honest and somewhat generous. A Convention has been concluded between Her Britanic Majesty and the Republic of Honduras, by which the islands of Roatan, Bonacca, Helena, Utila and Barbaretta, situated in the Bay of Honduras and the rightful possession of which by England has been so much disputed, are now to be constituted a free territory, under the sovereignty of the republic of Honduras. The republic engages neither to erect nor to permit any other power to erect fortifications on the said islands, or any other island in the Bay of Honduras, nor to cede any of the Islands to any other nation or state whatever.

All British rule is to entirely cease six months after the exchange of ratifications and the proclamation of this Convention, or sooner, if the Legislative Assembly provide substitutes for the present functionaries. The inhabitants are to govern themselves by means of their own municipal government, to be administered by legislative, executive and judicial officers of their own election, according to their own regulations. Trial by jury in their own courts is established, and a Perfect freedom of religious belief and worship, public and private, and no slavery.

A cotemporary publishes correspondence from Roatan, stating that the inhabitants are opposed to the arrangement. A meeting was called by the President of the Legislative Assembly on the 18th Aug., to petition Her Majesty on the subject, at which some talked of war to Honduras, and others were favorable to inviting Gen. Walker to take them under his tender care and keeping. Whatever may occur, it is evident that Great Britain is anxious to secure the neutrality of the islands, and thereby further the carrying out of the free highway between the Atlantic and Pacific.

The papers this side of the water speak favorably of the Convention, being alike honorable to Britain, just to Honduras, and satisfactory to the United States.

Hon. George A. Smith.

ON Sunday evening we had the privilege of listening to our honorable colleague on "Utah and the present position of the Mormons." Our commodious and comfortable hall was well filled with Saints, and a highly respectable class of New Yorkers who had been attracted by the announcement of a lecture by an Elder "from Utah." We regret that our reporter was prevented from being present at the commencement, as we anticipated being able to lay before our readers a lecture that was listened to with the greatest attention during its delivery. The extensive travels of Eld. Smith in Utah, the prominent part he has been called to take in the establishment of many new settlements, together with his position as Historian of the Church, consequently in the receipt of communications from all parts of the Territory, enabled him to speak with the greatest accuracy and fredom on the subject. That portion of the audience intending to make Utah their future home, had a faithful picture of the labors, difficulties, and ups and downs in a new country from which they could not fail to profit.

The natural unproductiveness of the greater part of the soil of Utah, the entire dependance of vegetation on the irrigating waters brought through cut ditches from the moutains, the plundering propensities of the Indians, together with the almost universal consumption of crops, by grasshoppers, and "creeping things" for the last two years, demonstrated, that the Mormons have had difficulties to contend with, which none but giants in energy, industry and perseverance could look at. The dependance of the settlers on the cities of the States, more than a thousand miles from Salt Lake, for almost every article of clothing and of daily consumption, save the first neccessaries of life, has heretofore been a serious drawback to the prosperity of the Territory, and but little encouragement to those whose primary and sole object was this world's ease and comfort. Having had his share of experience in weals and woes, the lecturer cast in with his geographical details of localities and description of forming settlements, incidents of life in his own free and lively style, which made the lecture both agreeable and instructive. In terminating, he favored the "how not to do," Utah mail contractors, and their bungling system or want of system, with a scathing piece of sarcasm that was justly due them, and some of "Uncle's" officials at Washington.

While listening to the lecturer, we were impressed with the conviction that few discerning intelligent persons present could wish other than success to a people who had, with no aid but their own strong arm and faith in God, made a home of a howling wilderness where they might be far from mobocracy and where they could live in peace and worship the Great I Am, according to the dictates of their own conscience.

To Whom it may Concern.

CORRESPONDENTS, new and old, please the printers remarkably when private names of persons and places, likewise figures, are so plainly written that they can "set up," without putting on specs or holding a counsel over the obscure. If extracts of importance had the name and date of the paper whence extracted, it would enhance them in our estimation at least 5000 per cent. It saves all quibling from unbelievers. Write for the press on one side of the paper only; many an hour's labor has been consigned to the waste basket for neglecting to do so.

Mother Lucy Smith.

AT the time that Col. Geo. A. Smith wrote the brief biography of this honored lady he was not in possession of the date of her demise. He has handed us a letter from Elder Samuel H. B. Smith, dated Nauvoo, Sept. 6th, by which we learn that she died on the 5th of May, and was buried beside the grave of her much loved and venerated husband patriarch Joseph Smith.

An Old Movement Revived in Great Britain

THERE is at present, much excitement in England among the gentlemen of black cloth and "white choker" notoriety. Somebody has again brought on the carpet the desirability of a new translation of the Bible. Everybody admits that King James' translation is anything but perfect, but the propriety of meddling with it is now discussed, and, as usual, when ministers meddle with anything, there is a vast amount of acrimony in the discussion. John Bull's chances of a correct translation are small. In the first place, no denomination will tolerate the one sided translation of an opposing sect: should a combination of a number of sects be achieved for that purpose, they are sure to rage and fight and finish up by a compromise—leaving in the original controverted words and phrases favorable to the views of one sect or another, lest their translation into plain English should open the eyes of the multitude and thin their congregations. We cannot but remark how absurd and vain it is for men to imagine that by an acquaintance with Greek or Hebrew they can set forth in another language doctrines and principles that they by no means understand. Everybody that ever knew two languages knows that without a knowledge of the ideas and spirit of the author, no translation is possible—a word for word translation from Greek or Hebrew into the English, would be confused nonsense. If Apostles and Prophets spoke and wrote by the Holy Ghost, and none could understand them without possessing the same gift, how manifestly absurd is it for Oxford, Cambridge and Dublin divines, who are notoriously more intimate with, and better experienced in trout fishing and fox hunting, than with anything from the first chapter of Genesis, to the last of Revelations—a class of men who are afraid to catch the spirit of the ancient servants of God, as it would impose on them too many acts of abnegation.

Another British Minister to Washington.

HON. C. P. VILLIERS has been appointed to succeed Mr. Crampton as British Minister at Washington. There is much reason to believe that Mr. Villiers will be well received in this country. He is highly respected by the progressionists of the wave washed isle. He was, if not the first, one of the first and best advocates of Free Trade. England will be well represented, and the United States will have intercourse with a gentleman.

Items from Utah.

KNOWING the interest of our readers in the well-being of the inhabitants of Utah and the natural desire of our missionaries abroad to be posted on the state of things at home, we feel pleased at being able to publish from time to time items of private correspondence from different parts of the Territory. Elder Lucius N. Scovil of Provo City, in his letter of July 28, says:—

"The great struggle for bread is over. The people are now engaged in their harvest. We never had as good wheat in Provo before, and I am quite certain there never was so much before in one year. Daniel Vincents will raise somewhere between 1500 and 2000 bushels of wheat, besides oats, corn, and potatoes, &c. Judge C. Carters is now putting up a new blacksmith's shop, which is 26 by 50 feet, two stories high. His shop was burned with all of its contents about two weeks since. We had a splendid celebration on the 24th inst., the proceedings I send to the Deseret News office today for publication. We had a Conference here on the 26th and 27th inst. On Sunday the audience was very large, and the proceedings went off first rate."

Elder Thomas Bullock, of G. S. L. City, July 28, writes:—

"We have not any news from Iron county. In Utah county they have good crops; also in Davis county; in Juab and Millard counties they will raise double of any previous year. In Weber there is an average crop, in Cache county, the saleratus and grasshoppers have swept the entire crops. We had a flying visit from a swarm of grasshoppers, but they did not tarry a week. We understand they are swarming, but which course they will take no man knoweth.

"We have poor news from the Salmon river settlement; the grasshoppers have swept everything. The Indians report they never witnessed such a scene before; they feel well towards the Saints.

"The Jordan river is lower than ever it was known to be before. There has been a fire in the West Mountains for some days, but the thunder showers put it out without great damage.

"Bro. Staines and Dr. France are going into the manufacture of soap. The former brought a sample into the office, which recommends itself; they expect to make about 500 lbs. during the week, which they purpose selling at 35 cents the bar. Success to their enterprise. Bro. Woodruff is at work in his hay field and wheat harvest, and is very busy, at the same time afflicted with the rheumatism. A great deal of hay has been secured in good condition, and by the appearance of the State road the cry is 'still it comes.'

"Very few of the California emigrants have come through this city, nearly all having taken the cut off. A Mr. Searle who left here with his family and some apostates, reported such hard tales as caused them to pass by on the other side of the mountains, for which we are thankful."

Elder W. Woodruff, from the same place, July 31, writes:—

"We are in the midst of harvest; I have cut my 15 acres of Wheat—some say I shall have 400 bushels, I lay it at 300. I have lost a good deal for the want of water; but wheat was never better filled in the Territory than this season; even where wheat is 12 inches high and thin, the head is good, well filled, and the berry plump. I saw General Rich's wheat field after it was cut; some think he has 1000 bushels on the ground, but I think the estimate rather high. I think it will require a good deal of care and attention to save everything that is raised in this Territory this season, or there will be more suffering before the harvest of 1857, than there has been during the past year."

Letter from J. L. Heywood.

NEW YORK, Sept. 16, 1856.

Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR: Having spent the past two weeks in visiting my relations in Massachusetts, and in viewing once more the scenes of my childhood, the place of my youth, and former associations, and viewing the graves of my fathers. Although their remains lie in the cold and silent tomb, yet their memory clings to my heart like ivy to the vine; and thoughts of them, and friends that are dear, with childhood charms, and enchantments, long since passed away, rush to my mind, and bring afresh the recollections of the vicissitudes of life.

It is quite a satisfaction to me, to visit those scenes after an absence of years, amid the Rocky Mountains; it calls to mind reminiscences of the past, in their varied and chequered scenes, with the pleasure, peace, and consolation, I have enjoyed with my brethern and sisters since I left those Eastern lands, and emigrated towards the setting sun, in the Great Basin, surrounded by the everlasting hills—in Utah's peaceful vales.

In the summer of 1855, I spent some time on the Pacific coast of our ocean-bound continent, of course I had an opportunity while pursuing my business by land to see the sublime heights, and awful depths of the Sierra Nevada Mountains; also in crossing and recrossing the Great American Deseret, composed in part of the Great Basin so called, and indeed there are "some sights" to see as well as attraction for the ear, such as murmuring cascades, and water falls, with the wild music of the plains where the traveler is nightly surrounded with the black Raven "Kaugh" "kawing" with doleful accents the requiem of departing day, mingled with the piercing howl of the panther, the howl of the wolf, the angry growl of the bear, or the whining bark of the little Cuyota, far from the abodes of civilized life.

One thing struck me with much surprise, while among our fellow citizens of the Atlantic States, that, is, the little value or estimation attached by many of them to our Federal Constitution, which has for so many years shed its blessings and protecting wings, over this much famed land—"redeemed as it has been by the shedding of blood"—a land favored and blessed by the Almighty, whose Ommipotent arm, led its armies to battle and to victory. Degenerate sons of noble sires, surely, that would wish to destroy that noble instrument, or demolish the glorious freedom raised by our noble ancesters, but so it is!

By the latest accounts from Utah, it would seem that our brethren there have the prospect of being sustained amid scarcity, as has been the case the past season. The lessons of economy which they are obliged to learn, will qualify the Elders to teach the nations, among whom the calamity of famine, dread and direful will ere long become general.

It is gratifying to observe the cheerfulness of the Saints in Deseret, as well as the fortitude of the large emigration of the Saints to that future State, showing conclusively the succor which they receive from the God whom they serve, whose Ommipotent hand is over them for good, although they are tried and proven, yet they rejoice in the truths of the Gospel, and in the spirit of the comforter. "Judgements must begin at the House of God" and go to all nations. As ever yours,

J. L. HEYWOOD.

Amasa Lyman on Principle.

To the Editor of the Western Standard:

I HAVE thought that I would venture upon an attempt, as much as it may be at variance with the former course of my life, to commit to paper some of my thoughts on the subject of that salvation that has for years engaged our attention and formed the object of all our labors and unremitting toil. In treating this matter it is not my design to attempt any departure from that simplicity of reasoning that shall keep the matter constantly within the range of the capacity of the masses who may read. It is not my object in this notice of the subject to trouble those who read with an extensive array of scriptural evidences in relation to man and his condition, in his present or his prospective existence, for this has been done again and again; but rather by calling their attention to some of those reasons that are learned by reading man instead of books, which lead the mind to that comprehension of the truth, and of God, which is eternal life.

When the declaration is made to us that we are to be, or can be saved, it presupposes the existence of an evil, or evils, from which we are to be delivered, which deliverance, when consummated, will constitute all of salvation that we expect or seek. By reference to the Scriptures we might find these evils variously described, as the effect of the fall, the results of sin; but for our present purpose, it matters not so much how man became what he is, and as he is, as to know truthfully his condition, and what will save him from the evils that afflict humanity as we find it in the history of ourselves, as revealed in our experience.

In looking for the cause or causes of our miseries and sorrow, if we search for them in detail as connected with the actions of our lives, individually or collectively, we find that ignorance is the parent fountain of all the evils that afflict our race. If the inquirer should ask the reasons for this conclusion, they are found not only by reading man as he is, but in the course that Jesus, our great High Priest, adopted in ministering the same salvation to the erring sons of earth; what can be more to the point than his definition of eternal life, "which," says he, "is to know Thee the only living and true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." This definition, in connection with the course pursued with his apostles, are evidences that the great objects of his mission into the world to save mankind was attained, if attained at all, by the communicating of knowledge or comprehension of the truth. But, says the querist, did he not teach and command others also to teach a certain form of doctrine? This he did; but what was the object of this form of doctrine? Simply to lead men to the truth, which would, when gained, save them. Thus, by considering what Jesus declares to be eternal life, and the means chosen for its attainment as the remedy, ignorance must have been, and now is the disease.

In regarding ignorance as the parent fountain of evil in the conduct of men, our minds may become enlightened by considering the principle that influences us in all the transactions of life in which our judgments are called into exercise; this principle of appreciation—the result of knowledge possessed—is that by which the profit or loss, the right or wrong, of any matter, principle or enterprise, is determined. The same by which we determine the relative value of things possessing the same or different values. In illustration of this principle we would inquire in monetary matters, why does not the skilful financier pay a larger for a less amount of money? The answer is at hand, he knows the greater is the more valuable. What is it, then, that saves him from insolvancy and ruin? The answer is, his knowledge. In looking still farther at the operation of this principle, we ask the vicious and corrupt, why they pursue their vile course. They are in pursuit of the same gratification of their wishes that constitutes the object of pursuit with the virtuous and good, only in a different way.

For further illustration we will introduce one instance from the Scriptures. From them we learn, that Jesus was on a certain time tempted by the arch deceiver of our race, yet he did not sin. Some doubtless may be ready without thought to say, that he was God; therefore, he did not sin in entertaining for a moment the propositions of his enemy. I would here inquire of the reader, did you ever think of the relative value of what Jesus possessed, as heir of all things, and that which the Devil offered him, even had he owned it to have given? To the wealth of Jesus, as the Son of God, there was no bounds; what comparison, then, between what was offered as the price of disobedience, and that secured by obedience to the will of the Father? it is not that of the mote to the mountain, or the single drop to the plentious shower, but in the vastness of the disparity all comparison is lost. Then did Jesus blindly reject the meager offer of the Devil of the kingdoms of this world, and the glory of them? The answer is, he did not. When we seek for aught he could have gained by yielding to the temptation, we seek in vain, for if he was heir of all things what then was their left in the wide range of universal creation, that was not already his own? So we see that the Devil showed himself not only a fool, if he thought with one little world to seduce the Son of God, but also a knave, by offering to give or sell to him that which he, Jesus, already owned.

Here, then, is the principle brought to light, which exalted the Son of God, beyond and above the power of temptation. He was in the first place made heir of all things, and his appreciation of this fact, gave him the knowledge that there was nothing to gain that was not his own by pursuing the course undeviatingly in which he was traveling. And further, if we ask the votary of mammon, why he pursues so eagerly the phantom of his golden hopes; we are told, it is because in the line of his pursuit, is supposed to be found, in the greatest abundance, the treasure he seeks. Return from the disciple of mammon, and ask of the devotee to the soul-enlightening and elevating principles of eternal truth, what is the tie that binds him with more than the tenacity of life to that pursuit which engages all his powers, although his path is thickly beset with dangers in all their varied forms, from the loss of friends, and name, and fame, and not unfrequently the martyr's death. What we ask, in the midst of this scene of suffering and unremitting toil, supports the disciple of universal truth? With a face radiant with the benign smile of contentment and peace, from the midst of the surrounding storm, he answers, "the fullness of all things, that constitute happiness, greatness and glory, are the reward of my patient endurance." This being the fact, what is there left to reward other pursuits? Nought, but the wreck of disappointed hopes and blasted expectations.

Here, the life spring of the divine inspiration of Heaven's eternal truth is brought in its own simplicity before the mind, as the pursuit of happiness in the only legitimate channel in which it may be found, is the strong reason for not departing from, or changing his course, who seeks this richest of heaven's treasures. While contemplating this subject in the light of truth, as it flashes on the mind, how vividly is brought to our remembrance the strength of Jesus, with his mighty comprehension of truth, to withstand the wily attacks of his arch foe, and then the weakness of a Peter, with his limited understanding of the same principle, who to avoid the approbrium attached to being a disciple of his best and greatest friend, denied him with bitter cursing, yet subsequently rejoiced to die for the truth, thus demonstrating the strength and potency imparted by a comprehension of the truth.—[Western Standard.

Opinions of the Press on Anti-Mormon Literature.

IN a recent review of Mrs. Ferris' work, entitled "The Mormons at Home," Reynold's Miscellany, has the following remarks:—"How, shall we of the Old World ever receive a report of the doings at Salt Lake City in which it will be reasonable to put our trust! Deep as our interest is in any picture of the Mormons at home, and certain as the sale of any fair account of these strange people would be, we have received nothing beyond surface views or wretched caricatures. Yet we know scarcely any topic likely to engage the hearts of good and thoughtful persons more deeply than this question of Mormon life: its moral nature, its mode of action, and its share of success. The Mormons, who are nearly to a man and woman of Anglo Saxon blood, have departed from the midst of us and set up a new system in the depths of the wilderness,—shaking off our laws, our customs, our letters and our God. These extraordinary people have made for themselves a new scheme of life, based on new ideas, all of them contrary to our Old World wisdom, and some of them most repugnant to our domestic instincts. We want to know how this system works. Do the wives live in oriental union? or do they quarrel like Kilkenny cats? Do the husbands live in peace in their western harems, in health and freedom? Are the homes clean and cosy, the children well trained and obedient? Such questions occur to the mind even before the other and higher questions about faith and salvation. But, unhappily, we have no answer—at least none that we can trust—to these deeply-exciting queries. Mrs. Ferris, whose book we opened with expectation, is evidently not a fair witness; and her letters are four years old. She had good opportunities. She accompanied her husband, who received an appointment as United States Secretary for Utah, to the Salt Lake City. She remained in the valley of the Salt Lake six months, living on familiar terms with the Mormons, both men and women. But, then, she carried her foregone conclusions with her. Before she and her husband reached the Mormon settlements she had condemned the Mormons in her heart. That

THE MORMON.

Mrs. Ferris, who prides herself on having played the 'fine lady in the prairie,' is not a very philosophical observer—is not very nice in her manners—is not very delicate in her feelings—every page of this odd book bears witness."

In a review of two volumes, entitled "The Prophets or Mormonism Unveiled," and "Female Life among the Mormons, by the Wife of a Mormon Elder," the Athenæum says as follows:—"These books both design to be taken for true; but they are about as authentic as the record of Mrs. Veal's ghost, and nearly so vraisemblable. They may take rank with the second and third-rate Exeter Hall fictions about Jesuits and the dark doings of Roman Catholic priests. They throw no light upon the interior life of Mormonism, but are simply rambling, ill-constructed romances. * * * * Their worst enemies agree that the Mormons are a prosperous community as regards worldly goods; but the state of Mormon society, as set forth in these books, could not hang together for a week: it would fall back into a state of mutual war and general savagery. The two conditions of hard-working industry and unrestrained wholesale debauchery could not exist together. Industry, even when not ennobled by religious principle, is incompatible with vices of this class. 'Idleness is the mother of mischief,' as everybody knows; but idleness is not a Mormon vice; and the rapid growth and steady increase of the sect, their compact organization, their great material prosperity, combined with their wild religious tenets, their social laws and customs,—so anomalous to everything existing in a sect having any relation to Christianity,—render it a social problem, of which we have not yet received the solution. Neither of the writers of the works before us knows anything of Mormonism, except from books and hearsay. They are not even well 'up' in their subject; and their gross discrepancies upon the main facts of Mormon history would alone be sufficient to discredit the highly-colored details in which they indulge. The soi-disant wife of the Mormon Elder professes to have accompanied her husband and a band of converts form New York State to same Mormon settlement; but she keeps so clear of names and dates, and of all that can preciser the place, that on a first and even a second perusal we could not tell whether Zion or Nauvoo was intended. As Nauvoo is not once named, we took it for an account of Zion, the first Mormon settlement; but on a minute search discovered that she states the place to have been in Illinois—and this would indicate Nauvoo;—but then, again she is so emphatic in her account of the 'dirt, rags, filth, and ugliness' of the children;—the general discomfort and squalor of the place, 'which contained fifty houses, and every house could number two or three families,'—'many of them had neither floors nor chimneys,—quite a proportion were without either doors or windows—the most ordinary and indispensible toilet appendages were unknown. Thorns were used instead of pins; there was but one needle in the village and that was rarely called into exercise, it was so seldom that thread could be obtained.' All this is in such contradiction to the glowing ball-room festivities described above, that we must leave our readers in the same doubt that we are ourselves—whether Zion, Nauvoo, or any place in particular is intended:—of the famous Temple she says not one word. In this place, wherever it may have been, she represents Joe Smith as being killed—under entirely fabulous circumstances:—of that occurrence, at least, we have other and authentic records;—and the 'Wife of the Mormon Elder' is entirely wrong in every one of her details,—also in her account of the incidents that followed the Prophet's death; and the circumstances under which they were driven out of the place, after a melo-dramatic ceremony, by which, holding up their hands, the Elders were made to repeat a horrible oath, binding their souls to death and everlasting torments if they were not out of the country in the space of a month. The death of Joe Smith, as authentically recorded, is that the people in the neighborhood of Nauvoo rose up as they had done against Zion in Missouri. Joe Smith, his two brothers, and two of his followers, delivered themselves up to the Governor to stand their trial for the offences alleged against them. It was to save effusion of blood on both sides. The Governor pledged himself to protect them from personal violence, and they were lodged in the jail at Carthage. The mob, strong and infuriated, overpowered the executive government; broke into the jail, and shot Joe and and Hyrum Smith,—the latter within the walls and the former as he was attempting to escape through the window. There was no galloping about on horseback with an abducted female behind him, and a melee a la 'Timour the Tartar,' as represented by the 'Elder's Wife.' The entire book of the 'Elder's Wife' bears intrinsic evidence that she has never seen any of the people she describes nor any of the places through which she professes to have travelled. Her description of the grand march of this innumerable band of men, women, and children, driven away from their homes at a month's warning, through an unexplored tract of country, across the Rocky Mountains, through the terrible 'South Pass,'—a march to which the 'Retreat of the Ten Thousand' was like a holiday journey,—is given in a jaunty pic-nic style. The details have no sort of individual portraiture—nothing circumstantial; they are vague generalities, as meagre and feeble as a school-girl's letter. Those incidents, which are given in minute detail, all relate to sentimental difficulties and love passages amongst the various characters—some lawful and others illicit,—all bearing upon the law of polygamy:—the men seeking to profit by the new state of things, to increase their harems,—the old original wives rebelling against the new law,—the young maidens strenuous to marry the man of their choice,—a few audacious young women endeavoring to seduce men from their matrimonial allegiance for no better reason than devilish mischief, because they are said to be attached to them. These are the main incidents. There are a few adventures with Indians,—extremely ill done,—and evidently the 'Wife of the Elder' knows little or nothing of Indian customs and Indian warfare. A diligent study of Cooper's novels would alone have taught her better. This portion of the book is written in a confused, idle, careless manner. Nothing is touched upon that would naturally have struck the most careless or indifferent bystander. Nothing is said of all the dangers, difficulties, and uncertainties of this vast mass of human beings journeying with a strong fanatic faith and in obedience to a religious idea,—the motive which could alone have been strong enough to bind them together and carry them through the promised land—a land which their leaders themselves only knew by report. No notice is taken of anything worthy of note. Arrived at Utah, there is no account of the place, nor any description of the city. After a few vague generalities about the "camp presenting a busy spectacle," she merely adds, "In less time than could have been anticipated, we had comfortable houses." This is all she says of that distant city. The whole book is washy, diffuse, and commonplace in the extreme:—there is nothing well drawn or strongly marked; even the characters whom she has made to talk so much are so feebly sketched that the reader easily loses sight of them, and it requires some searching among the surrounding rubbish to discover what becomes of them at last.

As the 'Wife of the Mormon Elder' entirely fails to describe the scenes in which she asserts herself to have taken part,—as she falls into gross mis-statements concerning facts that are matters of notoriety and that have been well authenticated,—we must be excused if we attach no sort of faith to the grave and wholesale charges she brings, towards the end of her book, against the upholders of Mormonism in the far distant Utah, where few of her readers can follow her to ascertain for themselves. She accuses the Mormons of being in the constant practice of murder, infanticide, robbery, adultery, of course, and treachery of the blackest kind—on a wholesale scale. She asserts that no strangers are allowed to enter the city or to become acquainted with the state of things; if they do, they never reach the end of their journey alive, being invariably cut off by Mormon emissaries disguised as Indians, or misled by Mormon guides, and left to perish amongst the terrible mountain passes of cold and starvation. An organized system of Thuggism is represented as prevailing, and any persons daring to utter a word of comment upon 'things as they are,' or so luckless as to come to the knowledge of any Mormon state secrets are reported by spies, and 'disappear,' no one knowing whither or daring to inquire. All these we believe to be falsehoods, added for the sake of giving a few excited horrors, as she had failed to give any useful information. Whilst thus describing the state of all who wish to quit the Mormon city, or who dare to give utterance to a free opinion, she represents herself as standing out in constant protest against Mormon doctrines and Mormon rule denouncing it on every opportunity,—narrates how she became amenable to a fearful 'doom' by over-hearing some Mormon secrets and betraying that she knew them,—how her husband left her to her fate,—and tells in the same breath how she escaped with the greatest ease:—'Waiting the hour of nightfall, I made a few slight preparations, such as habiting myself in a suit of male attire, and staining my face, so as to resemble an Indian; and then, the moment it became sufficiently dark to prevent observation, I cautiously let myself out at the back door of our house, scaled the garden fence, and descended into the Valley, through which lay an Indian trail. Under the protection of a friendly Indian, she succeeded, in three months, in reaching the bosom of her friends. This is all the detail she gives of what, under any circumstances, would be an arduous journey for the best 'protected female.' At the beginning of the book she represents herself as having no friends, but 'enemies,' and those numerous;—and thus she jauntily drops the curtain upon her adventures and revelations.

The Author of 'Mormonism Unveiled' gives a much more authentic account of the rise and progress of Mormonism; but neither does he offer any adequate explanation of the astounding fact, that Brigham Young defying the authority of the supreme government, frightened away the officers sent to enforce the laws made Colonel Steptoe feel that he had better not meddle with him, and now reigns over thirty thousand subjects, whose number is continually increasing by converts from all quarters of the world, isolated by 1500 miles from other civilization. This is a social phenomenon without parallel in modern history. The two men who have built up Mormonism, whatever their sins may be, and no doubt they are many and various, are two of the most remarkable men the world has ever seen, and they take rank along with the great leaders who have been kings by the right divine of capability. Joe Smith, a man without any prestige of birth position, riches, or even a character for common honesty, by the aid of a coarse clumsy fiction, like his Mormon-Bible, was able to induce men by thousands to leave their homes their country, and come from all quarters of the world to gather round him, and to obey him, and to live under a law entirely opposed to their former habits. In the midst of an old time-worn civilization, he called forth an entirely new phase of social life. All other schemes of socialism for regenerating society have failed, and the community has dwindled away,—witness Fourierism, St. Simonism, Owenism, and scores of others, the very names of which have been forgotten. Joe Smith so inspired his followers, so united and wielded their energies and capabilities, that when driven ignominiously from one resting-place he carried them to another, founded a city and a temple, and the frame of its strange beauty and magnificence is spread throughout the world. When he was killed, and his people were broken and dispirited, and surrounded by their enemies, Brigham Young arose at the crisis and assumed the headship. He transformed their Prophet's death into a martyrdom, consolidated the disorganised multitude, finished the temple, held one solemn act of celebration within its walls, and the next day led forth the people, not as fugitives, but as an elect people going up to take possession of a promised land, and after a journey over wild wastes and trackless wilderness, unknown even to the trappers and hunters, he brought them in safety to a country full of beauty and fertitity, and there he has founded a State capable of making its own terms with the supreme government at Washington, as it has made its own religion and its own laws. The number of its inhabitants steadily increases, and Brigham Young holds his patriarchal staff with a strong and steady hand. Such leaders, and such a people, require to be grappled with in a very different spirit to what is brought to bear upon them in all the books we have yet seen about them:—the compendious terms 'dupes and imposters' do not cover the facts.

FOR THE MORMON.

Hope.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

There are, more or less, events in every man's life which have engraven themselves upon the tablets of his heart, and which rise again into life, especially in solitary hours like phantasmal pictures from the deep recesses of the mind, and pass like the scenes of a beautiful diorama solemnly before him. While the vision of the shadowy procession of the past is unfolded to the inner-man, a connecting chain of circumstances refreshes the oblivious memory, and call back to his mind the scenes of childhood, when everything appeared in its rosiest hue, when the cares of an anxious life had not yet wrinkled the brow; when the appalling sounds of human misery had not yet reached the ear; when unalloyed happiness signalizes existence and the functions of the heart had not yet become morbid; when Hope was interwoven with every action, and a prominent feature and property of the mind, and a part of existence enabling its possessor to live in joyful anticipation of a better future. No matter in what avocations we are engaged, in what circumstances we are placed, Hope is always hovering around us like a romantic dream of that mysterious poetry, which is ever in the air, in the moon and stars when shedding their pale, soft, silver light on the sleeping flowers of nature, and awaking thus consoling thoughts, if we only desire them. Hope is that lovely guide which leads us from the threshold of life, from the starting-point of our mortal career into the vicissitudes of this existence, when in the full enjoyment of life our lips are continually blanding smiles and hearty laughter. In the golden days of youth, when hours and days glide merrily and happily away; when the future appears to us like the growing shadows of the rosy morning twilight, Hope unfolds its greatest charms, leading us through fields of lovely visions, picturing out to us our career in glowing colors, causing thus a continual buoyancy and elasticity of our spirits, so that no gloomy thoughts can steal over us. In the morning of life, Hope makes us always sanguine, we have full confidence of realizing the desires of our heart; yes, we freely confide in the present, and trust warmly in the future. It is but seldom that Hope has lost its magic influence in youth, and if so, the mind, like a field full of weeds and poisonous herbs, it has become perverted by passions, in consequence of which the beautiful flowers of fond, exuberant Hope have been destroyed.

The time of childhood, of youth is gliding on as smoothly and quietly as the blue sea on a fine morning, it is all sunshine and smiles, happiness and joy; but when the meridian of life is reached, clouds begin often to rise, the sky becomes dark and lowering, a storm breaks out, and all is gloomy and terrible, but still Hope lingers within, and rises like a starbeam in the dark chambers of the soul. Hope consigns to oblivion all causes of past pain that may have risen from a variety of circumstances, which are beyond the control of man; it fills the heart with noble impulses, open frankness and Divine splendor, which makes life so lovely and enjoyable; it invigorates the energies of the soul, so that man becomes fit to devote his time to the removing of all obstacles, surmounting of all difficulties, and to the attainment of the purpose in view.

From our entering this stage of action till our exit, we realize that we are moving in a world of vicissitudes, changes and disappointments; a great many causes will operate upon our minds, our plans will sometimes get thwarted by the will of an invisible, superior agency, and then Hope is the beacon-light leading us through the labyrinth of our trials and difficulties. There is more or less something of that precious principle in every one, and it is well that it is so, because it makes man persevere in the continuation of his pursuits, in endeavoring to find a recompense for what he has lost. Years may fly like moments on the wheels of Time since we parted with friends; the distance of thousands of miles may separate us from them, they may pass through the silent gates of the vast necropolis of this earth, and thus pay the tribute of their mortality, but still Hope, like a sweet and faithful companion, lingers within us, and tells us we shall meet them again. It is on the wings of Hope, that we ride the billowy ocean, that we roam in distant lands, that we brave dangers, disasters and difficulties in search of friends and relations, in search of things our hearts long for. The man, poor and destitute, when animated by Hope, makes the greatest exertions to improve his condition, his circumstances; looking through the vista of Time, he becomes forgetful of the past and present, and sees himself and his family surrounded by the comforts of life, occupying an honorable position in society to which every intelligent being is entitled. The invalid when confined to his bed, and while his life is like a faintly flickering light, still clings to hope, he thinks of recovering his health; it buoys him up while suffering from a painful disease, and often has the magic power of that principle, a favorable effect on the shattered system, whereas when the imagination of a sick person is operated upon by fear or despondency, the result is generally fatal, as owing to the intimate connection that exists between the body and the mind, every impression made upon the latter, whether good or bad, whether salutary or obnoxious, is felt by the system, and influences, consequently, the physical and mental functions.

Hope is sometimes so strong that it appears to the inquiring mind as an anticipation, foreboding or foreshadowing of something better, something that is calculated to heal those moral wounds which have been received in the course of time. It is well, that Hope comes within the range of the human mind, without it, man would sink under the burthen of earthly trials; energy, courage, and perseverance would forsake him in the pursuit of his enterprises, despair would seize him in misfortune, and lead him to destruction; in fact, man would not be a man, that is to say he would not show by an energetic perseverance in the avocations of life, his realizing sense of being an intelligent self-agent. Man may have plans which like castles built in the air, will, perhaps, never be realized, but still his mind loves feeding upon Hope; he may sometimes get disappointed, but Hope rises like a Phœnix again out of its ashes. Who does not hope and calculate to see better days? The poor man hopes to improve his circumstances; the rich hopes to accumulate greater wealth; the man of ambition hopes to gain the laurels of worldly fame and reputation; the student hopes his studies will meet with success; the prisoner in his lonely cell hopes to regain his liberty; the invalid hopes to the last, yes, even the grave gives a scope for hope. Take hope from man, and you take his life; give Hope, and you give him a moving cause for his actions, a new impulse for his exertions.

Without Hope, which throws a brilliant radiance on the scenes of this life, and transforms the fair garden of Nature into a paradise—the machinery of the intellectual and physical system of man stops, his energies that might have been devoted to many a lofty purpose fail—he becomes indifferent to everything around him; he sees nothing but the regions of despair; his high aspirations, his glory, his honor, are buried with him in a living tomb, as a direful memento of the destruction of every created Hope. Hence do not willingly blast the Hopes of your fellow-beings, let not the wail of Hope rush forth from the realm of woes and vanish into viewless space, because the lamentations of destroyed Hope are the death-cry of Reason parting from day—and of Soul that would fain wrench itself from life!

Independent of a Hope in regard to temporal matters, to things pertaining to this world, there is a Hope, which tells us that our present life is only a forerunner or introductory to a future or immortal existence. That Hope is not an incongruity, a mere chimera, it owes its existence to the silent pulsations of the Heart, to that voice of the inner-man which is arising like a beautiful dream from better worlds, telling us that on leaving the transitory scenes of this life, when our corporeal frames sink into the grave, and are resolved into their primitive elements, the spirit will wing its flight to the eternal world.

This Hope or anticipation tends to qualify man to endure all things, to wait patiently for a glorious future, although we do not see it with our eyes, but only live in anticipation thereof. Hope prompts man to engage in an investigation and contemplation of those governing principles by which a future state is achieved. Hence Hope is the great nursery in which our minds are prepared for an eternal destination, of qualifying the soul for the pleasures and employments of immortality. Without Hope in a future state of existence, we would be of all men the most miserable, as the apostle says, all our strivings and efforts for mental improvement would amount to nothing at our exit from this world; we would be destitute of intellectual pleasures and enjoyments, and only know and seek the gratification of our senses.

The non-existence of such a Hope would be productive of an entire demoralization of society, and be detrimental to the happiness and improvement of the human family.

It would banish religion from the surface of the earth—the world would be a vast arena of misery and abominations—a receptacle of depravity—an immense charnel-house—man would rove about like a hideous spectre in human shape only in the mad pursuit of gratification—the tenderest ties of relationship among the members of an intelligent society would be perverted and dissolved—the mountains and vallies would resound with the demonial yells and groans of the miserable wretches of so awful a state.

In order to show that I am not portraying the above supposed condition of mankind in too gloomy colors, but that actually the destruction of religious hope does lead to the most direful consequences, I refer to the memorable days of the French revolution of 1789 till the end of 1795. Diderot, Voltaire, Rousseau, Mirabeau, Condorcet, and others, had prepared the way to those bloody scenes by their works, in which every principle of natural and revealed religion was set aside, and even the existence of a Supreme Being abnegated, and only an imaginary phantom, the Goddess of Reason was acknowledged. The mysteries of atheism were publicly preached. Everything was reduced to a system of mere materialism. There being no hope beyond the grave.

Death was considered an eternal sleep; and thus every moral and religious principle, every human feeling was trampled under foot, and only revenge, hatred, selfishness, vice and misery were the dismal results of a non-existence of religious Hope. The most savage atrocities were perpetrated; the ties of friendship and consanguinity were diregarded and dissolved. In despite of the boasted Liberty and Equality, infidelity wielded the sword of revenge with infernal ferocity against professors of religion.

Rise! then, up, sweet Hope, from the deep recesses of our hearts, bury past evils into oblivion, light up our souls with courage, perseverance and virtue, strengthen our faith and confidence in God, enable us to do His will in all things, free us from the obstructions which now encompass the narrow range of our operations, prepare us for higher scenes of contemplation, guide us on our excursions through the boundless empire of Omnipotence, enable us to acquire more extensive views of Divine perfection, and finally qualify us for the pleasures and employments of a state of immortality and exaltation.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

Last Friday evening, the supporters of Mr. Fillmore, had their demonstration in Union Square, and consumed no small amount of rockets, blue lights and squibs around the Washington Monument. There was a good turn out and some stirring addresses from the elite of that camp. Though it could bear no comparison in numbers with the Democratic turn out in the beginning of the week, the parties interested, were pretty satisfied with their big doings.

The Democrats of Gotham have hard work to stick together. It is but a few weeks since the Democracy throughout the Union was jubilant on the fusion of New York Hards and Softs. On Monday evening, Tammany Hall, had at the same moment two Democratic Conventions sitting for the nomination of candidates for the Mayoralty of this city. Two candidates have been nominated—Mayor Wood, who presently fills that office, and ex-Alderman Mr. James S. Libby. The latter, is the candidate of the real Democracy, approved and ably sustained by The Daily News, that popular and ably conducted paper. The convention that nominated Mayor Wood, was much more numerous than the other, and likely to cause trouble and anxiety at a moment when the best unity is required. Though they have not yet come to any direct hostilities, daggers are drawn and vengeance sworn.

The Herald don't seem to have so much influence with the Black Republicans, as he has influence for them. By his talk he evidently gets a small share of attention when the real business of the cause is on the tapis. He does not relish any of the gentlemen on whom the choice for Governor of the State is likely to fall. The material in the Republican camp to make a Governor is so scarce, that in spite of all the compliments passed between Bennett and Greeley the former thinks the latter, malgre his "oddities and heresies," would make a tolerable Governor, "if he would only blacken his boots, comb his hair, wash his hands and brush his hat." On the event that a better is not found, and these conditions not complied with, he threatens to "throw the whole batch overboard" and see what he can do to elect Judge Parker the Democratic candidate for the gubernatorial chair.

The most stirring business in the Union presently is politics. Everything gives place to this excitement. The campaign press takes great liberties with the opposing candidates. The road to the White House is anything but pleasant.

The principal news of interest this week is the voluntary disbandment of the San Francisco Vigilance Commitee. After a grand military parade on the 18th ult., in which upwards of five thousand men took part, the vigilant army was dissolved. Hopkins has recovered, and Judge Terry is liberated with the recommendation that he resign his office. The other prisoners were likewise released. California is therefore said to be once more tranquil.

Gov. Geary has got to Kansas and inspires hopes that "Bleeding Kansas" will see better days. He has issued his proclamation commanding all armed bands to disperse and "promises to drive every marauder from Kansas who is not an actual resident, and says he will call to his aid one thousand United States troops, and fifty thousand volunteers from the North, if necessary." The Free State men breathe freer and sweeter than they anticipated under the new Governer.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

Her Majesty Victoria, royal consort, family and a numerous retinue left Buckingham Palace on the 28th ult., for Edinburgh, en route for Balmoral, her Highland residence. Great enthusiasm along the iron high-way, plenty of hats and handkerchief waving, and no scarcity of the English hurrah! Everybody was pleased with la bonne petite reine and she in return, of course, was pleased with everybody.

There are rumors that Lord Palmerston and Louis Napoleon don't speak the most polished and refined French over the Spanish affairs. The London Star professes to be in the secret, and states that John is much desposed to shake hands with Jonathan lest the Lion and the other Eagle should find it impossible to live together in the happy family. The London Times is bent on having a row some where. In its leader of the 30th ult., he says "It would seem that the era when nations shall no longer need to defend themselves, is as yet far off in the opinions of European rulers," and then sets off a long article on the preparations of Sardinia to be ready for Austria, and winds up with hopes for Italian freedom and a promise. "Should the time ever come when Alessandria (Sardinian stronghold) shall be pressed by an invading force, the transports of Liverpool, and the stores of Woolwich will not be wanting." As Alessandria is likely to become a second Sebastopol we give the following interesting particulars respecting the fortress from a Turin journal:—"The spot where Alessandria now stands was occupied in 1168 by a small town called Roveroto, situated near the two rivers Tanaro and Bormida. During the wars of the Guelphs and Ghibellines, its strong position attracted the attention of the latter, who surrounded it, in 1169, with a mud wall, and called it Alessandria. The present citadel was commenced in 1736, and completed in 1745. In 1795, the citadel was given up to the French. It was blockaded by the Russians in 1799, and capitulated. It was again taken possession of by the French in 1800, after the memorable battle of Marengo. General Marescat and Chasseloup refortified it at a cost of 30,000,000*l*, and rendered it one of the strongest fortresses in Europe; but, after the fall of the first Empire, the Austrians destroyed the whole of the works. The plan which is now to be carried out consists of a bastioned body and four detached forts—one situated on the Bormida, a second on the Tanaro, and the other two to the east and southeast of the place. This fortess, with the aid of Casale on one side and Genoa on the other, will enable a body of from 20,000 to 25,000 men to keep a much larger army in check for many months, until the arrival of succour from other quarters."

The Times has opened his columns lately to Louis Blanc, the exiled chief of the French socialists, who publishes documents received from the victims of the December coup d'etat, telling heart rending tales of cruelty which can be anything but agreeable to Louis.

The Post estimates the cost of the war with Russia at £80,000,000, and recommends that an annual sum be applied to converting personal annuities into terminable ones.

The Suisse of Berne says:—"The Lake of the Four Cantons has now its subaqueous telegraph between Fluelen and Bauen, at the foot of the Seelisberg. The sinking of the cable was effected rapidly and successfully."

The new state railway carriages prepared for the Emperor and Empress of the French, and which were used on the recent journey to Biarritz for the first time, are as handsome as Parisian taste and workmanship could provide. They are five in number, and communicate with each other by a short bridge, protected by a gilt ballustrade, so that the communication between one and the other is as easy as though they formed one. The inside is arranged with tables and sofas like a drawing-room. One of the carriages is open at the sides, enclosed round with a handsomely-gilded iron railwork, and resembles a terrace gaily ornamented with flowers.

In Italy discontent is spreading. Alarm is manifested in Naples in consequence of the now ascertained movement of the Muratist party. This party has been circulating a programme or proclamation at Naples with secrecy and activity.

A letter from Stutgardt says:—"A novel branch of industry for this place is now in operation here, namely, the fabrication of corsets, which occupies 1,300 persons. The manufactory supplies annually, 300,000 corsets, valued at from 500,000 to 600,000 florins."

Leave Independence the first day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Salt Lake City on the last day of the month at 8 a m;

Leave Salt Lake City on the second day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Independence by the last day of the month.

NOTES.

Bidders are required to inform themselves of the actual distance, the weight and bulk of the mails to be carried (the whole mail required to be taken each trip,) and all other points essential to a correct understanding of their liability for the proper performance of the required service, before making their proposals, which must be guarantied by two responsible persons, certified to as such by a postmaster or judge of a court of record; and contract must be entered into by the successful bidder, with surety, before the 1st day of December, 1856.

No pay will be made for trips not performed, and for each of such omissions not satisfactorily explained three times the pay of the trip may be deducted. For arrivals so far behind time as to break connexion with depending mails, and not sufficiently excused, one fourth of the compensation for the trip is subject to forfeiture. Fines will be imposed, unless the delinquency be promptly and satisfactorily explained, for neglecting to take the mail from or into a post office; for suffering it to be injured, destroyed, robbed, or lost; and for refusing, after demand, to convey the mail as frequently as the contractor runs, or is concerned in running, vehicles on the route. The Postmaster-General may annul the contract for repeated failures to run agreeably to contract, or for disobeying the post office laws or instructions of the Department. The Post master-General may alter the schedule; he may also order an increase of service by allowing therefor a pro rata increase on the contract pay; he may also curtail or discontinue the service in whole or in part, of pro rata decrease of pay, allowing one month's extra compensation on the amount of service dispensed with. Bids should be addressed to the "Second Assistant Postmaster General," superscribed "Proposals for Salt Lake City Mails."

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the transgression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that, when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostasy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.!" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.!" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ! Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela! Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

HORACE E. DIMICK & CO.'S
GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM,
FOR SHOT GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, BOWIE KNIVES, AND SPORTING APPARATUS of every variety, is at
No. 42 Main Street, St. Louis, Mo., (at the Sign of the Deer in Windows.)
WE are now in receipt of our stock of Goods for the coming season, which enables us to say, that we have now in store, and for sale, the LARGEST and most COMPLETE assortment of Guns, Pistols, Sporting Apparatus, and Goods selected expressly for the arming of wagon trains, for crossing the plains, the markets of Santa Fe, Salt Lake, and Oregon, &c., that can be found in any HOUSE in the WESTERN COUNTRY!
Among the most staple articles now on hand, can be found upwards of 2,000 DOUBLE AND SINGLE SHOT GUNS; 2,500 MUSKETS AND UNITED STATES RIFLES, both new and second-hand, with flint or percussion locks; COLT'S REVOLVERS, of all sizes, ALWAYS on hand, in quantities to satisfy almost any demand, and at EASTERN PRICES. Also, all the most improved patterns of Revolvers and other Pistols now in use.
N. B.—We, the undersigned, being practical men in all matters appertaining to the arming and equipping of Emigrant and Merchant wagon trains for crossing the plains, renders our experience worthy of consultation, to make it the more easy for the emigrant and trader to supply themselves with the necessary articles, viz: FIRE ARMS, FIXED AMMUNITION, PROVISIONS AND GROCERIES, of all kinds; Wagons, Tents, Horses, Mules, Oxen; in short, everything necessary for their comfort.
We also beg leave to call the attention of EASTERN HUNTING PARTIES, that wish to spend a few months on the plains, that we have all the necessary arms and equipments, and at prices as low as they can be furnished in any Eastern city.
We keep constantly on hand, (or make to order,) TARGET, HUNTING, and MINNIE RIFLES, which we guarantee to be superior to any in the country.
We also keep constantly on hand the CELEBRATED SHARP'S PATENT RIFLE, which is the safest and most destructive weapon ever invented, for sale at the Manufacturer's prices, for cash.
Please call and examine for yourselves, as it is no trouble for us to answer questions, or show goods.

Poetry.

On Time.

BY LAMAN BLANCHARD.

To one that marks the quick and certain round
Of year on year, and finds how every day
Brings its grey hair, or bears a leaf away
From the full glory with which life is crown'd
Ere youth becomes a shade and fame a sound;
Surely to one that feels his feet on sand
Unsure, the bright and ever visible hand
Of time points far above the lowly bound
Of pride that perishes, and leads the eye
To loftier objects and diviner ends,
A tranquil strength, sublime humility,
A knowledge of ourselves, a faith in friends,
A sympathy for all things born to die
With cheerful love for those whom truth attends.

Malleable Iron.

From The London Saturday Review.

When it was announced, at the late meeting of the British Association, that a paper would be read on a new method of converting cast into malleable iron without the use of fuel, the intelligence was received by many with a smile of incredulity, and not a few "practical men" went to the meeting of Section G., expecting to be entertained by the visionary schemes of some ingenious but idle enthusiast. Their expectations were utterly falsified. Conviction was forced upon their minds from which no ready assent could have been hoped; a great invention was lucidly and unostentatiously propounded; and men who went prepared for an exhibition of temerity, if not of folly, remained to express their concurrence in the graceful tribute of admiration paid by Mr. Nasmyth to one of the greatest discoveries of the age. Every one felt, after hearing Mr. Bessemer's paper, that, if any reliance could be placed upon the facts stated to the Association, a new era was at hand in all those numerous and important branches of manufacturing industry which concern the working of wrought iron and steel. Without further reference to the paper communicated to the Association, we will now describe what we have seen at Mr. Bessemer's premises at Baxter House, leaving our readers to say whether we have overstated the importance of the subject.

It is necessary to premise that common cast iron contains somewhere about 4 or 5 per cent of carbon, as well as a variable quantity of silicium and other earthy bases, phosphorous and sulphur. The object of every process for making malleable iron is the separation and removal of these foreign substances. The best malleable iron contains about 1-2 per cent of carbon; but the process of extraction is difficult and expensive. The fusibility of iron depends upon the quantity of carbon present; and no commercially available method has till now been discovered by which iron, after parting with a very large proportion of its carbon, can be brought to remain in a state more nearly approaching fusion than that of a pasty mass. Steel is produced from iron from which the carbon and other impurities have been extracted, by a tedious and costly process, the object of which is the restoration of a portion of the carbon which previous processes have removed. Steel contains, according to the purpose for which it is wanted, from rather more than 1-2 per cent. to rather less than 2 per cent of carbon. Malleable iron—or iron comparatively free from carbon—is usually produced, in this country, in the following manner:

The melted iron, as extracted from the ore in the smelting or blast furnace, is run out into bars a few feet in length, technically termed pigs. These pigs, when cold, are removed from the sand-molds into which they were run, and transferred to a second furnace, called the "fining furnace," where they are again reduced to a state of fusion; and finally, the mass thus produced is placed in a furnace, where it undergoes the process of puddling. Omitting all matters of detail, the essential part of this operation is the reduction of the iron to a pasty mass, which is stirred and rolled about by the workman until a large ball, or rather "bloom," of iron, weighing from 60 to 70 pounds, is conglomerated at the end of the rod with which he works, and is judged to be in a fit state for the final process. It is then withdrawn from the fire, and taken to a "tilting hammer" and a pair of squeezers, or to a Nasmyth's steam forge, where it is subjected to a very heavy pressure, and a quantity of melted slag and refuse, mixed with the puddled iron, squeezed out. For the purpose of our present comparison we need follow the process no further. Other methods of producing malleable iron directly from the ore are in use in various parts of the Continent: but they are extremely expensive, require a rich ore and a very pure fuel, are only applicable upon a small scale, and sacrifice a very large percentage—in some cases from 40 to 50 per cent—of the metal.

Of all our more important mechanical operations, perhaps puddling is the most imperfect and unsatisfactory. It is very expensive, both from the quantity of fuel consumed (which is about equal to the weight of metal treated) and the severe nature of the labor required. During the recent hot weather it was found neccessary to stop nearly all the Staffordshire puddling furnaces—two men having fallen dead at their work. The result is the production of an iron so far from being chemically pure that it is astonishing how much we have been able to effect with so imperfect a material. From the immense demand for iron which has prevailed for some years past, and the stimulus that has thus been given to the production of increased quantity, the quality has very seriously deteriorated. The difficulty experienced by the Government during the last war in procuring iron of a quality suitable for the purposes of warfare is too well known to need more than a passing reference.

Mr. Bessemer's experiments have been conducted upon the pig-iron. He proposes that, for the purposes of manufacture, the smelted iron, as it leaves the blast furnace, shall be run immediately into the converting vessel presently to be described; but, for the purposes of experiment, it has been more convenient to melt down pig-iron, as the metal is much sooner reduced to a state of fusion. The experiment therefore, takes up the process at the point at which the metal is ordinarily placed in the firing furnace. It must be remembered, however, that one important end answered by his invention is to do away with the consumption of fuel required for this immediate process. The "converting vessel," where the change of the melted metal from ordinary cast iron to malleable iron or steel is to take place, consists, externally, of a cylinder of iron, surrounded, near the bottom, by a hollow ring—an annular pipe, in fact—of the same metal, communicating with five small "tuyere" pipes, placed at equal distances round the cylinder. These pipes are carried through the outer and inner structure of the vessel, and each of them enters the chamber within, near the junction of the side with the floor, by an aperture about three eighths of an inch in diameter, protected by a conting of the best fire-clay. The external cylinder is lined with a thick lining of fire-brick, and the internal structure consists of two chambers, or stories, communicating by a small cylindrical opening in the centre. The lower chamber, into which the melted iron is introduced, is a simple cylinder—the upper chamber has a floor inversely arched, so that any melted metal forced up through the opening from the lower chamber may trickle back again, and the roof is in the shape of a cupola or dome. Two apertures, a few inches square, placed opposite to each other, between the floor and the top of this chamber, communicate with the external air. A powerful blast, worked by a small engine, can be let into the hollow ring which girds the outer cylinder, and thence, of course, enters the lower chamber through the tuyere pipes. A hole at the bottom of the chamber, secured in the usual manner, furnishes the means of tapping the vessel and running off the produce into the molds prepared for it.

When everything is ready for the operations to commence, the blast is set on to blow into the converting vessel—the melting furnace is tapped—and the melted iron, of the usual deep orange tint, pours slowly down the channel into the lower chamber of the converting vessel, through an aperture which is then closed up and luted. The pressure of the blast is about 9 or 10 pounds to the square inch—strong enough to force the air completely through the superincumbent mass of fused iron, and out through the apertures near the top of the vessel. As the action is continued, every particle, of the melted matter is brought in turn into contact with a stream of air. To use the language of chemistry, an energetic combination takes place between the oxygen of the air pumped in and the carbon mixed with the iron. In popular language, fire, instead of being supplied externally round and about the mass of iron, is kindled and sustained throughout every particle of the liquid metal. A heat is thus generated, vastly greater than that which can be supplied by mere external combustion. What is taking place is indicated by the tongues of flame which, in two or three minutes, begin to shoot forth from the apertures in the vessel, and which gradually increase in body and intensity until the whole mass is in a state of agitation, almost like boiling water—the difference being, however, that the agitation is caused by the external force of the air blown rapidly and continuously through the liquid iron, not by the conversion of the substance itself into an expansible vapor, as in the case of genuine ebullition. However, this state may very fairly be called "to boil," and it is indicated by the blowing out, through the apertures, of large quantities of melted slag—the refuse which is squeezed out of the puddler's bloom under the action of immense pressure, but which is here driven off simply by the action of the blast, because, being much lighter than the iron, it rises to the top, like scum upon the surface of water, now that the metal is in a state of perfect fluidity. It is supposed that at this period a very important change begins to take place, and that part of the carbon which is in a state, not of mechanical mixture, but of chemical combination with the iron, is now compelled, by the agency of the increasing heat, to part from the metal, and yield itself a captive to the superior affinity of the oxygen. This "boil" takes place from fifteen to twenty or twenty-five minutes after the commencement of the process, and continues with more or less violence until all the carbon is burned out. The moment that this is effected, and that no more carbon, or only a very small quantity remains, the metal must be run out, otherwise the action of the air would cool the metal, and make it set hard with great rapidity. It may be run out into molds of any size or shape; but the most advantageous form is that of a deep and narrow mold, as then the slag which has not been already removed, and which comes last out of the hole at the bottom of the converting vessel, lies in a thin cake at the top of the casting, and is easily taken off by a pair of shears.

It will be obvious that one principal feature in the process is, that the operator deals with the metal in a state of perfect fluidity—a desideratum hitherto unattainable with iron containing only a small quantity of carbon. Hence it can not merely be procured in masses of any size, (whereas the puddler can only produce 60 or 70 lbs. in a lump,) but it will posses the the distinguishing character of all fluids—it will be perfectly homogeneous. The texture, composition and quality will be the same throughout every part of the mass. That the fluidity is really greatly increased, notwithstanding the substraction of the carbon, is shown by the fact that it is found desirable to diminish the power of the blast from 9 or 10 pounds to about 5 pounds during the latter part of the process, as well as by the rapidity with which the metal runs out of the furnace, and its brilliant whiteness. It is impossible to overrate the advantage of having a really homogeneous product. In large masses of malleable iron, procured in the ordinary way by welding together a number of the puddler's blooms, there often occur small knobs and fragments of metal much harder than the rest; and many manufacturers consider soft malleable iron quite as trying to their tools as hard steel, from the unexpected increase of resistance suddenly offered by particular parts of the mass, and the consequent unequal strain upon different portions of the machinery. The greater the mass required, the greater the difficulty of obtaining a metal upon all parts of which equal reliance can be placed; and hence, where a very heavy strain, in a direction different from that of the fiber, is expected, strength is often obliged to be sought in an enormous thickness of material. The prodigious weight of anchors is rendered necessary by the impossibility of calculating accurately the strength of the metal in any particular part, so that the size of the whole must be increased to meet the chance of a bad piece of metal occurring here and there. One of Mr. Bessemer's numerous patents is for the application of his invention to the construction of anchors, in which he hopes to attain equal strength with a greatly diminished weight.

It is hardly necessary to point out the enormous saving in labor and fuel effected by the new process, especially in the manufacture of steel. Mr. Bessemer believes that steel, such as is now worth from £50 to £60 a ton, may be produced at a cost to the manufacturer of less than £10 a ton. In the manufacture of malleable iron, also, the saving will be very great, though less than in the case of steel. Indeed, one of the results of the invention will be the curious anomaly that steel will be produced at a little less risk, and therefore at a little less cost, than malleable iron; for it is obvious that, by tapping the furnace before the complete combustion of the carbon has taken place, steel will be produced, instead of iron. Practice and experience will, no doubt, in time enable the workman so to regulate the operation as to produce to a nicety any particular quality of iron or steel required; but until this practical knowledge has been gained, there will be some difficulty in calculating the exact length of time to be occupied in the conversion. If, therefore, the process should be continued a little too long for steel, malleable iron will be obtained—if it be continued too long for malleable iron, the metal will be set in the furnace. "The boil" appears to be the critical period. Whatever be the time occupied in arriving at "the boil," it is found that from twelve to fifteen minutes are requisite to produce malleable iron, and from seven to twelve minutes to produce the different qualities of steel.

How effectually the carbon can be removed is shown by an analysis of a chance specimen of Mr. Bessemer's malleable iron, made by Dr. Henry, who, we believe, was strongly inclined to doubt whether the process could really be so successful as it was stated to be. He found the quantity of carbon present to be less than 1-30th per cent—or less than 1-3000th part of the weight of the metal. Of silica, a trace merely was found. By the application of means already well understood, the sulphur and phosphorous will be as completely removed. A considerable portion of both is driven off without the use of any means for that special object; and by treating the melted metal with proper substances, these impurities will be withdrawn. The difficulty which Mr. Bessemer has applied himself to solve, and which he has solved, is the complete separation of carbon and the earthy bases. Apart from the cheapness and facility of his process, he has been able successfully to grapple with the half per cent of carbon which puddling can never get rid of.

The process, as described above, is open to a serious objection. The blast must be kept up to the last, or the melted metal would run into the tuyeres, and spoil the blast apparatus. Hence the air is being driven through the metal up to the very moment that it ceases to run out of the vessel; and the ingots produced are consequently very porous and full of air-bubbles. With malleable iron, this is of no importance, as it would always be rolled while in a state not far from fusion, and the air would be completely squeezed out, as the slag is squeezed out of the puddled ball. But cast steel would be useless if porous—a difficulty which is met by an ingenious modification of the converting vessel. It is slung horizontally at the end of two cranks, which, by means of a counterbalancing weight, can easily be turned through any angle. The blast is admitted by a pipe passing through the axle of one of the cranks, and thus revolving with the converting vessel. The tuyeres enter the converting vessel by a series of apertures forming a horizontal row. The cylinder can thus be made to revolve round the axis of the crank without turning upon any axis of its own; and thus the apertures of the tuyeres may be raised till they are brought above the surface of the metal. The blast can then be turned off and the agitation of the metal allowed to subside. Iron melted by existing processes sets in about three or four minutes; but Mr. Bessemer finds that he can allow it to stand for ten or twelve minutes—a period quite sufficient to allow all the air-bubbles to escape—and the cylinder may then be raised still further, and the metal poured off as gently as may be requisite, through a spout at the top or in the side of the vessel. The quality of the steel produced admits of no doubt. A fragment broken off from an ingot cast when we saw the experiment, was compared with a fragment broken off from the end of a file. It was harder, and far finer in the grain.

The experiment in question was conducted with six or seven hundred weight of Yorkshire iron of a common quality. An ingot of six hundred weight was produced in one piece in about 25 minutes. There will be no difficulty in producing masses of any size or shape. The size of the converting vessel and the number of tuyeres may be increased to any requisite extent. The blast need not be increased in strength, as it will only be necessary to enlarge the area of the floor of the vessel, so that the iron may not rise to a hight of more than 8 or 9 inches. The loss was about 13 per cent; but of this considerable quantity might be recovered, as the slag blown out during the boil contains about 50 per cent of iron, in the shape of little globules, like shot, set in the slag. It is extremely porous, and crumbles to the touch, so that it might be broken up, and the iron separated by washing, with little difficulty and labor. In the ordinary puddling process, from 17 to 25 per cent is lost, and in the Catalan and Corsican processes, not only is a weight of charcoal consumed from three to seven times that of the iron produced, but 5-13ths, or about 38 per cent, of the metal is sacrificed to secure the purity of the remainder.

Mr. Nasmyth tried some years ago to decarbrutize cast iron by blowing steam into the melted metal. This attempt failed, as the separation of the oxygen from the steam exhausted so much of the heat of the metal that the heat enveloped in the combination of the oxygen with the carbon in the iron was insufficient to compensate the waste; and the iron was cooled instead of being heated. With the freedom from jealousy which makes a truly great mind, Mr. Nasmyth paid, as we have said, at the late meeting at Cheltenham, a graceful tribute to the importance of the invention, and spoke in terms no less honorable to himself than to Mr. Bessemer, of the ingenuity of the process and the vastness of the results to which it would unquestionably lead. Mr. Bessemer, on the other hand, derives from the experience of Mr. Nasmyth the important knowledge that, by the use of jets of steam and blasts of air, he will be able to regulate with the utmost nicety the amount of heat generated, and the rapidity of the process.

The history of this invention is curious. Some two years ago, Mr. Bessemer's attention was attracted to a subject happily now of less pressing interest than it then was—namely, the manufacture of rifled cannon. The object of rifling muskets and cannon is to secure a control over the direction of that rotation which is part of the motion of every projectile, and to insure that it shall take place round an axis coincident with the direction of the missile. For this purpose, with the Minie musket and the Lancaster gun, an elongated ball is used, and the interior of the projecting tube is cut with curved groove or grooves. When a leaden ball is shot, no appreciable injury is caused to the barrel of the gun, but when an iron ball is used, as in the case of cannon, the wear and tear is very great indeed. The Lancaster guns are seriously injured, if not rendered unserviceable, after a very few hundred rounds. It occured to Mr. Bessemer that the object might be attained, without rifling cannon, by using an elongated ball, with a hole drilled half-way down its longer axis, and prolonged into two channels opening by a curved arm upon each side of the ball. The effect of the air passing through these bent pipes and out at the back of the ball, as it flew through the air, would be to create a motion of rotation round the longer axis of the ball, just as, in an emission steam engine, a rotation is created by the backward pressure of steam issuing from a bent pipe. Finding difficulties in the way of testing the invention in England, and availing himself of certain circumstances into which it is not necessary to enter, he applied to the Emperor of the French, who instantly placed the resources of the arsenal of Vincennes at his disposal, and afforded him every facility for his experiments. The balls were found to rotate as expected—a fact which was proved by causing a small projection to spring out of the side of the ball the moment it had left the mouth of the cannon, and observing the position in which this cut targets of thin board placed at intervals in the flight of the ball; but it was also found that the cannon could not safely carry the increased weight of metal rendered necessary by the elongation of the ball. Hence, Mr. Bessemer was led to make experiments on the production of a tougher metal for cannon. He tried numerous mixtures of various kinds of fusible metal, until at last he began to consider whether it might not be practicable to produce malleable iron in a state in which it would be easier to mould it to the required form than by the expensive process of forging. The result of his experiments has been the discovery of a process applicable to the arts of peace no less than to those of war.

It is difficult to assign any limits to the importance of an invention whose influence will be felt throughout the civilized world, in an improved quality and diminished cost of one of the great staples of modern industry. The first axiom of the iron trade is demonstrated to be a fallacy; and, to a mind familiar with the subject, the magnitude of the change cannot be more emphatically expressed than the simple proposition that ancient and fundamental antagonism between the terms cast iron and malleable iron has ceased to exist; for malleable iron will now always be cast. It is impossible to doubt the truth of the opinion modestly expressed by Mr. Bessemer, that others will improve on his invention, and that his process will not receive its full developement for many years to come. There is no country in which its influence will be as extended as our own, in which so large a portion of the community is engaged, directly or indirectly, in arts connected with the manufacture of iron and steel; but there are others where its effects within a narrow sphere will be yet more striking, and yet more welcome. In some countries, where malleable iron is produced direct from the ore, the consumption of charcoal has become matter for serious alarm. In Sardinia it has long been, to many reflecting minds, a subject of grave doubt whether the benefits to be derived from the developements of this branch of industry were not more than outweighed by the wholesale destruction of the forests for fuel. We are glad to learn that Mr. Bessemer has not only secured the legitimate reward of his industry and ingenuity by the grant of patent rights in almost every part of Europe, but that, alive to the greatness of his invention, he has resolved to adopt a wise and liberal policy in the grant of licenses, and to place the use of his process within the reach of all persons who may be desirous of availing themselves of its important advantages.

Extraordinary Mountain-Climbing Feat.

Ascent of Mount Ararat.

All the feats of ordinary and extraordinary mountain climbers, of which not a few have recently been recorded in the English and continental journals, have been outdone by a party of Englishmen, consisting of Major Alick J. Fraser, Major Robert Stuart, the Rev. Walter Thursby, Mr. James Theobold, jun., of Winchester, and Mr. John Evans, of Darley Abbey, Derbyshire, who in July last succeeded in accomplishing an undertaking hitherto deemed impossible—namely, the ascent of the Greater Ararat, which is 17,323 feet above the level of the sea, and 14,300 above the plain. They left Bayazid on the 11th of July, and, having crossed the plain, rode through rugged defiles and occasional fertile plateaus to the tent of Isaak Bey, a chief of the Ararat Kurds, stationed on a slope about 8000 feet above the level of the sea. At three o'clock next morning, all, except Mr. Thursby, who was unwell, were on the move, and three hours of continued ascent on foot brought them to the foot of the cone, which from its base to its summit may be above 600 feet. Here Major Fraser bore off to the south-east, while Mr. Theobold, Mr. Evans, and Major Stuart commenced the ascent on the southern side, keeping to the snow, which presented an unbroken surface to the very summit. Half-way up to the cone, Major Stuart found himself unable to proceed further and having no alternative but to descend, he sat on the snow and shot down with the velocity of an arrow. At the foot of the cone stood Isaak Bey, who looked upon his failure as a matter of course, and seemed to think that the others, too, must soon give in. At 1.45, however, Mr. Theobold crowned the summit. Great was the astonishment of the chief. "Mashallah!" he exclaimed, "God is great!—What wonderful people these English are; a few of them come here, and without any difficulty walk to the top of that holy mountain, a thing that never was done by man before. Wonderful—wonderful!" At 2.50 Mr. Evans reached the summit. He and Mr. Theobold made the descent together, by the same track that they ascended, and returned to the tents about sunset. Major Fraser, not being accustomed, like the two others, to Alpine climbing went over a ridge of stone which led up about two-thirds of the ascent, and then, taking to the snow, toiled patiently up till within a few hundred feet of the top, when he slipped on some thinly covered ice and shot down with fearful velocity about 1000 feet. By wonderful efforts and presence of mind he succeeded in arresting his perilous descent, and scrambling with difficulty to a rocky ridge that protruded above the snow, he climbed over it with immense labor; and thus recovering his lost way, he won the height about 3.30, having been thrown back full three hours by his mishap. He descended on the traces of Messrs. Theobold and Evans, and regained the tents at midnight, having been about 20 hours on foot. On the 13th, about two p. m., Major Stuart and Mr. Thursby set out, accompanied by two Kurds carrying rugs, great coats, and a small supply of provisions. They proceeded slowly and leisurely until they reached about one-third the ascent of the cone. There they were obliged to dismiss the Kurds, who, from religious fear, refused either to proceed further or to spend the night on the mountain. They chose a line of their own over a rocky surface, and left to themselves, selected a spot to pass the night, piling up stones to windward as a shelter against the cold. They saw the sun set in indescribable glory, throwing the shadow of the vast mountain far away over Georgia and Aderbijan, and even darkening the distant haze of the Eastern horizon. At peep of dawn on the 14th they resumed the ascent. Major Stuart goes on to say—"From an elevation of about 14,000 feet above the sea we saw the sun rise in unclouded majesty, lighting up simultaneously to our view vast tracks of the Russian, Persian, and Turkish empires; that was a glorious sight never to be forgotten. About 1200 feet from the summit we came upon an oak cross that had been fixed there in the rock by Professor Abich, in the year 1845; it was in perfect preservation, and the inscription in Russian characters, was still legible. This was the most difficult part of our ascent—the obstructions were frequent, and the climbing at times perilous; but caution and perseverence enabled us to overcome everything, and at nine a. m. we had the satisfaction of standing on the highest point of the mountain. Here I stuck to the hilt in the snow a kama, or short double-edged sword, which we found at the foot of Abich's cross. Here, also, as loyal Britons, we drank the health of our beloved Queen in brandy. Her Majesty will perhaps deign to accept this expression of allegiance on considering that hers is probably the first name that has been pronounced on that solemn height since it was quitted by the great patriarch of the human race; for no record or tradition exists of the ascent having ever been made before, although repeatedly tried by men of different countries, both European and Asiatic. Professor Abich made several attempts, but failed in all, as is proved by the position of the cross, by the testimony of the natives, and even by the confession of his own countrymen." They descended on the tracks of the others, and got back to the tents about four p. m. The snow on the top of the mountain was almost as dry as powder, and in walking over it they sank about half-way to the knee. The whole surface of Mount Ararat bears evidence of having been subjected to violent volcanic action, and the Major thinks that the summit is an extinct crater filled with snow. The cold was intense. They experienced no difficulty of respiration, except being sooner blown by exertion than they would have been at a lower level. Their success created no small sensation throughout the country, and the fame of it preceded them wherever they went. It was announced as a sort of wonder to the caravans travelling eastward; and the Kaimakam of Bayazid has made it the subject of a special report to Constantinople. From the sacred character of the mountain, and the traditions associated with it throughout the East, identical as they are with scriptural records, Major Stuart is inclined to think that a degree of importance will attach to this performance, in popular estimation, beyond what is due to a mere exhibition of nerve or muscle, and that this, no doubt, will tell in favor of the English national prestige. On the 15th they ascended Lesser Ararat.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, SEPT. 27, 1856.

Union and Action.

We have known many many persons to spend a great deal of time in investigating this movement: persons who have looked at every doctrine in the Church and twisted it outside and in, and tried their utmost to make something out against it if possible. To all this we make no objection, but are rather pleased than otherwise to see a thorough investigation, as it generally leads to the conviction that the principles are divine and invulnerable. It is not enough however, that a man should be forced to the conclusion that this work is of God before he becomes connected with it; it is of equal importance to himself and others, that he examine with the same carefulness, if he be a fit subject to become asassociated with such a work, if he be determined to fulfil the obligations which associations with others demand.

There is a foolish notion among some folks who have had a Sunday-school education, or rather have past some years in committing to memory favorite passages of the Bible—that is, a notion that God is going to do everything for corrupt and degraded men change them by His word from everything that is loathsome, to everything that is lovely and desirable. Such persons lisp the name of the ancient servants of God with peculiar pleasure, and proudly flatter themselves members of the same Kingdom, heirs of the same promises but it never enters their minds how such men attained that high position and the rich promises of heaven for themselves and posterity. It may do well for modern ministers who make a business of preaching to rant and rave in their pulpits about the favors heaven showers abundantly upon their unworthy heads, and it may be a very pleasant excitement for their hearers who generally feel themselves the honored favorites of Deity—not for anything the one or the other had done to deserve such signal favors and blessings but solely from a kind of faith they had in some ill-defined notions of election—still, there are moments when the din of pulpit conventionalism has died away, that these same ministers and hearers have their misgivings, and are led to inquire in their own minds if they were not indebted for their happy moments in Church, more to the tone and groan, than to the true and sound principles of revealed salvation. Sober reflection sustains the apostle Paul's doctrine of working out salvation with fear and trembling—and the solemn unpalatable truth—to christian loafers—"As ye sow, so shall ye reap."

No thinking, reasonable, and intelligent being, who sincerely and understandingly believes in the God of Israel and past revelation, but what must conclude that if one man has been more blessed than another, and is more deserving of attention than another, it is he who has honored every word that proceeds from the mouth of God. Prophets, patriarchs, and wise men in Israel were honored just in proportion as they had implicit confidence in, and were obedient to, the commandments of Him they served. Their complete abnegation of self before His law was their highest virtue, and we cannot conceive the possibility of any sane man conjuring up hopes for time or for eternity in God's kingdom founded on other than that sublime and holy sentiment—"Them that honor me I will honor."

We know of nothing that can be an honor to God but the manifest superiority of the position of those who serve Him over that of those who serve Him not. While it is the very nature of the Gentiles to be at war with each other, unity is the distinctive feature of God's people: hence the appropriateness of "hereby shall all men know ye are my disciples if ye love one another"—a fact which must reflect honor on the author of the principles by which such a work has been accomplished. Division in feeling leads to opposition, rioting, violence, murder, and renders the community, so unfortunately cursed, impotent, weak, powerless for good, and an easy prey to its enemies. Unity in feeling annihilates every social evil, gathers around any people the blessings of Heaven and Earth, and qualifies them for every good work. Nothing was, therefore, apprehended with so much dread by the prophets and apostles of ancient Israel as division among the people of God. They well knew that no opposition from without could destroy the life, power, and influence of the heaven-born truths they had been taught; but equally well did they know that the Almighty Author of their salvation would not be trifled with, and that the members of God's kingdom could as easily render themselves, by unfaithfulness, unworthy of the blessings placed within their reach as they had by faithfulness become participators therein. The watchmen in Zion had continually to remind them of the advantages arising from living together in unity: advantages which are so obvious that "United we stand, divided we fall" has become a universal proverb. No earnest disciple of any rational faith can live alone: he feels instinctively a partiality for, and a cleaving to, another of the same faith. The stronger his confidence in his principles the more he sees the necessity of uniting with others for the accomplishment of the object upon which their faith is centered. Every human institution has had its origin in this feeling, and every movement which has contributed to the amelioration of man's condition has only been successful by the united action of those who perceived the desired advantages, and who unitedly were determined to obtain them. To prate about religion, loving God, serving Christ or his kingdom, without a willing and implicit obedience to his laws, and a hearty earnestness in working together unitedly with men of the same faith for the ultimate triumph of true principles, is, to say the least, mockery. Any movement, good or bad, may and can accomplish great things if the persons engaged in it are only united and determined that it shall prevail; but no movement can accomplish anything without unity and such a determination. The members of God's kingdom are under special obligations to live together in the holy bonds of unity; not in appearance, but in reality—united in spirit. Let them unite their influence and powers for the maintenance of truth, and let every one individually see that not only are the principles true which he or she may have espoused, but see that the efficiency of those principles are not curtailed by anything in their own lives. Let the unity which is characteristic of Zion prevail everywhere, where two or three are gathered together, and truth and righteousness must triumph.

Ex-Governor Reeder Again.

Since this broken-down Governor sneaked out of Kansas he has been reciting throughout the country a stereotyped speech about "Bleeding Kansas," in which he manages to find opportunity of belching out his spleen upon Governor Young and the inhabitants of Utah. He was a short time ago in the Broadway Tabernacle, and since that, or rather since his rowdy affair a short time after, on the Hudson River steamboat, we have lost sight of him till last Friday night he turned up at New Haven in full blast, at his dirty, slandering work. We well understand why he attacks Utah and her governor. The inhabitants of that Territory are happy, peaceful, united, and rejoicing in the blessings which flow from the wise policy of their chief magistrate, and such facts form a sad contrast to the state of things in that Territory—poor Kansas, that once had the misfortune to have Reeder for its weak, vacillating governor. He is enraged at Utah and her governor for the contrast is telling. Had Utah been like Kansas, a fair and goodly land desolated and neglected from the rage of civil war, and Governor Young been despised and rejected, Reeder could have pointed to another Territory with some satisfaction, and felt a kind of sympathetic feeling spring up in his bosom, he would have had a ruined people like his own to point to, and had a kicked-out brother-governor in affliction, but to see the poor, despised and ridiculed Mormons united, happy and free, and her Governor respected and honored by the citizens he governs is more than his selfish, jealous and mean soul can quietly brook, he must therefore ease his wounded spirit with a congenial employment—slandering his Excellency Governor Brigham Young, whose eminent qualifications for the gubernatorial chair are as conspicuously greater than those of poor rejected Reeder, as the Sun's light is greater than that of the flickering lamp. Here is a rich specimen of Reeder's fine feelings:

"On the western slope of the Rocky Mountains the people in one of our Territories have demonstrated their incompetency at least for good self-government by founding their social structure upon principles which poison and demoralize every fountain of civilization and good order, and having united Church and State in their government, their spiritual leader and civil governor claims to rule "by divine right." Having thus placed himself upon the exploded authority claimed by emperors and kings, he repudiates allegiance to our common Constitution, and audaciously refuses to surrender his place at the call of the Federal Government. A pusillanimous President, bullied only with selfish aggrandizement, succumbs to the rebellion, and this Church and State potentate by divine right is left in power over a portion of our people."

As the public have abundant opportunities of hearing from such firebrands, that Governor Young "repudiates allegiance to our common Constitution, and audaciously refuses to surrender his place at the call of the Federal Government," we think it not amiss to lay before our readers the sentiments of His Excellency upon the Constitution and his relationship with the Federal Government.

Were we to run through Mormon history we could present facts that would, or rather should, overwhelm Reeder and gentlemen of his school with shame; that is, if they are capable of experiencing any such feeling, for their gross ignorance or wilful slander when they speak of Mormon opposition "to the Federal Government" or to "our common Constitution;" but as we may excuse them for past years, we shall only quote from Mormon history since they went to that Territory which is such an eye-sore to poor Reeder.

The Mormons celebrate every year since their arrival in Utah, the 4th of July—American Independence, or deliverance from Kingcraft; 24th July—Mormon Independence, or deliverance from Mobocracy. From the report of the celebration of 1849, we find heading the procession to the Governor's house "twenty-four young men, dressed in white, with white scarfs on their right shoulders, and coronets on their heads, each carrying in their right hands the Declaration of Independence and Constitution of the United States, and swords sheathed in their left hands."

Does this sustain Reeder's calumny? Would a rebellious people take the flower of their youth to carry these sacred instruments of intelligence, wisdom, and justice in their right hands and the instrument of their defence in the left? When they arrived at the grand stand, on which the Governor and officers of the Territory were seated, "Richard Ballantyne, one of the twenty-four young men, then came forward to the stand, his coronet glittering as if with rubies, and in a neat speech presented the Declaration of Independence and Constitution of the United States, in a respectful manner, to President Young, which was received with three deafening shouts, led on by President Young, of 'May it live for ever and ever.'

"The Declaration of Independence was then read by Mr. Erastus Snow."

Reeder may allege that as the Mormons grow older they forget their youthful admiration of the Constitution; we, therefore, pass over some years and quote from the report of the Celebration of the Fourth July, 1854. In the procession was "Edward Hunter, President of the Bishopric, carrying a large Bible, tastefully decorated, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, the Declaration of Independence, and Constitution of the United States; preceded by his four color bearers supporting a magnificent and sumptuous banner, inscribed upon both sides in large golden letters, 'Christopher Columbus, the Discoverer of America; George Washington, the Defender of American Independence; Joseph Smith, the Restorer of God's Priesthood.'

"Thirteen banners with the names of the 13 original States in large letters, borne by 13 Bishops.

"Declaration of Independence read by the Governor's Private Secretary.

"Seven stunning cheers by the risen assembly in honor to the memory of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence, followed by loud firing of cannon."

The Hon. O. Hyde in his address on that occasion, says:—

"We are met, fellow citizens, to celebrate one of the most important events that ever embellished the pages of political history—an event of which every American heart is proud to boast, in whatever land or country he, perchance, may roam—I mean the bold, manly, and daring act of our fathers, in the Declaration of the Independence and Sovereignty of these United States—an act worthy to be engraven, in letters of living light, upon the tablets of our memory, and to be transmitted to our children, with the sacred charge that they teach it to their children, and to their children's children, till the 'stripes and stars' float over every land, and are mirrored on the crest of every passing billow. They had not only the moral courage to sign the Declaration of our nation's Independence, but hearts of iron and nerves of steel to defend it by force of arms against the fearful odds arrayed against them—the well-disciplined armies and mercenary allies of the foolish and tyrannical George the III., King of Great Britain. The very name of America causes a thrill of patriotic devotion to her best interests to quiver in the heart of every citizen of Utah, with a zeal and a pride for the welfare of our country, that does honor to the memory of those departed heroes whose ashes are mingled in our soil, and made rich and dear to us by their own blood!"

His Excellency, Governor Young, to the same assembly, said:—

"The general Constitution of our country is good, and a wholesome government could be framed upon it, for it was dictated by the invisible operations of the Almighty. He moved upon Columbus to launch forth upon the trackless deep to discover the American Continent. He moved upon the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and he moved upon Washington to fight and conquer, in the same way as he moved upon ancient and modern Prophets, each being inspired to accomplish the particular work he was called to perform in the times, seasons, and dispensations of the Almighty. God's purpose in raising up these men and inspiring them with daring sufficient to surmount every opposing power, was to prepare the way for the formation of a true republican government. They laid its foundation, but when others came to build upon it they reared a superstructure far short of their privileges, if they had walked uprightly as they should have done. * * *

"The signers of the Declaration of Independence, and the framers of the Constitution, were inspired from on high. If the framers of the Constitution, and the inhabitants of the United States, had walked humbly before the God who defended them and fought their battles when Washington was on the stage of action, the nation would now have been free from a multitude of place hunters, who live upon its vitals. The country would not have been overrun with murderers and thieves, and our cities filled with houses of ill-fame as now; and men could have walked the streets of cities, or travelled on conveyances through the country, without being insulted, plundered, and perhaps murdered; and an honest, sober, industrious, enterprising and righteous people would now have been found from one end of the United States to the other.

"Will the Constitution be destroyed! No; it will be held inviolate by this people; and, as Joseph Smith said, 'the time will come when the destiny of the nation will hang upon a single thread; at that critical juncture, this people will step forth and save it from the threatened destruction.' It will be so."

We need add no more on that subject, as the readers of THE MORMON have seen plenty from Gov. Young and the leading men in Utah, since he uttered these sound and sober sentiments that find no echo in the bosom of every inhabitant of Utah.

But let us see how different has been the conduct of Presidents Joseph Smith and Brigham Young towards the Federal Government, to that of Reeder, who accuses them of rebellion! When Joseph was beset with mobocrats, who sought his destruction and the ruin of the people who looked to him for counsel and protection, he would defend his and their rights, but if by wire-pulling or misrepresentation the Government made a demand, it mattered not what, Joseph's voice was heard calming the spirits of his troubled, oppressed, and outraged brethren, and obedience was implicitly rendered—it was the Representative of the Government who had demanded. Such was his course. About the last act of his life was to endorse the Governor's iniquitous demand for the arms of the Nauvoo Legion—a demand which "tried men's souls," but the demand was made by a man in authority, and it was obeyed. And who can point his finger to the first act of rebellion in President Young? No man; we dare the world. Oh! Reeder would be glad to shelter himself from our charge of slander, if he could but get the shadow of such evidence. Can Reeder dare the world to examine his conduct? Can he challenge the world to show the first act of his rebellion to the Constitutional authorities of the nation? Yet he talks of Governor Young. One of his own party papers publishes this morning a letter from "Poor Kansas," "prostrate, Bleeding Kansas," that charges his rebellion with being the cause of much of their trouble. The friendly writer says:

"When the Deputy Marshal endeavored to arrest Gov. Reeder, it was Reeder who refused to obey the summons, and not the people who interposed." * * * "The United States Marshal arrayed a posse against us because Gov. Reeder told the Deputy Marshal if 'he put his finger upon him, he did it at his peril.'" Then follows what evils befel the people through his rebellion, and yet he has the impudence to talk about Utah and her Governor.

We cannot better conclude than by a quotation from the London Times about this same Reeder's last mission to New York:

"The late demonstration in New York, on behalf of Kansas, is formally as much against the American Constitution and laws as a public meeting in London to collect an army to send to Lancashire to help the strikers against the mill-owners, or to send to Ireland to help the Orangemen against the Romanists, would be against English law. Yet the meeting in New York appears wholly unconscious of anything directly illegal in its deliberations; it does not think about it. Anti-slavery enthusiasm carries everything before it; and the enlistment of fighting settlers passes off simply as one of the American modes of conducting party warfare."

Without endorsing the opinions of the Times, the facts stated are facts, and are very timely to place before this man who cries out about opposition to the Constitution and the Federal Government.

John Hancock in the Herald.

The N. Y. Herald of Wednesday, publishes a lengthy letter from one John Hancock, on "the North and the South—the Crisis Before us," in which, of course, he drags in Mormonism. John says; "I am no politician, (an avowal quite uncalled for,) I never held an office, (of course not,) and never expect to hold one"—we should think not. It is very refreshing to meet with an "humble individual" like John, who is satisfied with what nature and the people have destined he should be.

John, in spite of his avowed humility, has got venom in him, and a great dose of ignorance to nurse it and keep it warm. In opposing the plank in the Republican platform which links Slavery and Polygamy, he labors to show that Mormonism is of Free State origin, and says:

"In all the South there is not to be found a single Mormon. This monstrous and beastly sect is exclusively of free State origin. Joe Smith, its founder, was a native of New England, and went from the western part of New York to Illinois, where he established the sect at Nauvoo."

If humble John Hancock is as grossly ignorant of politics as he is of Mormonism and its history, the Herald has severely punished him, by giving his letter to the public—provided he has any sense of shame for impudent ignorance. There is not a State in the Union, without Mormonism, and if John could only see our subscription-list, he would have the satisfaction of knowing that in every State in the South, as well as the North, East and West, there will be some to laugh at his egregious ignorance about "Joe" Smith going from the Western part of New York to Illinois—the best evidence that he, John Hancock, knows nothing of that which his mild humble tongue calls a "monstrous beastly sect." If John should have occasion to refer to the Mormons again, we would advise him to get better posted. We could tell him of one city in a Southern State where the Mormons are numbered by thousands, and other thousands, in Southern States who are proud to be called Mormons.

An Attempt at Revolution in Switzerland.

During the night of the 3d inst., the friends of Prussia, under the leadership of Count Pourtalis, made an attempt to overthrow the Government of the Canton de Neuchatel and annex it once more to Prussia. They seized the Chateau, arrested the Councillors of State, and hoisted the Prussian flag; three things that any half dozen men could do any dark night in the quiet, religious town of Neuchatel. The Republicans of Chaux de Fonds, and of the mountains around the city, who neither expect to make, or would make if expected to do so, the King's wig, or shave his hypocritical face, and bow and scrape for the pickings of his royal bounty, came down their rugged hills like an avalanche upon the Count and the imbecile lackeys of Prussia, and restored the Canton to its legitimate place among the noble sons of Tell, who dare to be free. The town is occupied by the Federal troops, and the Count is eaged to afford him opportunity for reflection.

Mormonism in Germany.

From the St. Louis Sunday Herald.

From time to time we find in our foreign files some indication of how the great American religion, as Mormonism is sometimes called, is getting on abroad. From present appearances, we should judge that it is getting along finely—in the opinion of its friends, flourishing like a green bay tree—and disgracing our country in the completest manner possible. In its earlier stages nothing was said to converts about polygamy. Now it is held out as a bait and with extraordinary success. At a late meeting of the "faithful," where the "many wife" system was discussed, more than half of those present promptly avowed that this was the inducement and the sole one for their joining the sect.

The following, which we translate from a Dresden letter to the Kneinische Zeitung or Cologne Journal of August, indicates the rate at which the "Saints" are progressing in Germany:

"At length, we also have Mormons in our beautiful city. They avoid publicity, however, being desirous of escaping what might be rather jarring interviews with the police; although polygamy is here merely a doctrine of theirs—its practice being deferred for the present. The Latter-Day Saints are, in fact, developing a really extraordinary activity, which seems in Germany to have been rewarded with substantial results. They found good ground in Denmark, from which place they came to Hamburg, where a German translation of their 'Bible' was printed. Their 'apostles' appear to be abundantly supplied with money, sens them from England, as they have supplied very liberally several of the converts whom they made here, and many Saxon converts have already left for New Jerusalem via Liverpool. As we have already intimated, these Dresden Mormons form a community, keep very quiet, and it is very difficult to learn much relative to them. It is, however, true that the congregation in this city numbers about sixty people of very different rank, and that many among them are of respectable standing, and who have received excellent educations. Several married ladies and young girls are among the converts. Most of them are busied with preparations to depart as soon as possible, and escape from the tyranny of the heathen."

The above clipping, from an exchange paper, is worth a place for the information about the Dresden mission. We happen to know something of the circumstances which led to the planting of Mormonism there, and are pleased to see that the good seed keeps growing and attracting the attention of respectable and educated persons in spite of the difficulties interposed by a bigoted Government.

By-the-bye, the Herald tells a different tale about a congregation of the "faithful" to anything we have been in the habit of hearing. We have always been accused of keeping back from disciples, till they were well initiated, the very information he says was "the inducement and the sole one for their joining the sect." Curious chaps, ministers and editors.

From the Plains.

The St. Louis Republican, Sept. 16, reports that the Cheyenne Indians have of late been troublesome on the plains. On account of some outrages committed, Captain Stewart, with forty men from Fort Riley, had been upon their track, and had a fight with them, in which some ten of the Indians were killed and fifteen wounded. This same tribe is said to have subsequently killed a family of Mormons, consisting of two or three persons, and taken the mother into captivity. From the Council Bluffs Bugle, Sept. 9th, we learn that it was Col. A. W. Babbitt's train of Government property and the persons travelling with it who were attacked on the night of the 25th August, upon Prairie Creek, ten miles east of Wood River. Alexander Nichols, who was captain and conductor of the train, a gentleman from Pennsylvania, and an infant were killed. Orren Pariah, from Pennsylvania, and a young man—the latter wounded—escaped to Fort Kearney, and Mrs. Wilson, from St. Louis, the mother of the infant, was carried off a captive. A detachment was sent from the fort, who found the bodies of the murdered, and recovered considerable property through the honesty of a band of Omaha hunters who happened to be near just after the murder, and in time to prevent the pillage; but the oxen (ten yoke) and all the mules were gone. This terrible tragedy confirms our oft-repeated opinion that small parties should never venture on the plains without being well armed and organized for day and night watch. To faith in an all-wise, overruling Providence, prudent organizations and united action has our emigration been indebted for preservation and uninterrupted travelling for the last nine years.

Utah.

We have files of the Deseret News up to 1st of August. From these we glean nothing important. The wheat harvest had been heavy throughout the valleys, and had been gathered. Corn, potatoes, vines and other crops of vegetables and grain looked fine and promised a fair yield. No trouble from grasshoppers or other insects, except in Iron Co. and Sanpete, where the wire worm was doing considerable damage to the green crops.

Apricots, peaches and melons are spoken of among other articles in market.

A grand celebration of the entrance of the pioneers into the valley, came off on the 24th of July, in a wild, beautiful and romantic spot, at the head of Big Cotonwood Kanyon.

All was quiet with the Indians, and peace, plenty, quiet and prosperity prevailed.

Mr. Cleghorn, who left Salt Lake City on the 2d ult., confirms the statements above, but says there has been a number of murders committed by the Indians, probably the Pi Utes, on the emigrant road toward the Pacific. Mr. Hill's train was attacked, himself and one other were killed.—[N. Y. Herald, Sept. 22.

Thanks.

Our thanks are due to Elder James P. Park, pastor of the Scotch Conferences, for the Glasgow paper he has regularly forwarded to us for some time back, and we shall be pleased to receive the paper from Auld Reekie that has been so kindly offered. We appreciate the kindness and attention of Elder Park and other brethren who have already forwarded to our office valuable papers, which have been of considerable service.

Kansas.

Inaugural Address of Gov. Geary, of Kansas Territory; Delivered at Lecompton, September 11, 1856.

Fellow Citizens—I appear among you a stranger to most of you, and for the first time I have the honor to address you as Governor of the Territory of Kansas. The position was not sought by me, but was voluntarily tendered by the present chief magistrate of the nation. As an American citizen, deeply conscious of the blessings which ever flow from our beloved Union I did not consider myself at liberty to shrink from any duties, however delicate and onerous, required of me by my country. With a full knowledge of all the circumstances surrounding the Executive office, I have deliberately accepted it, and as God may give me strength and ability, I will endeavor faithfully to discharge its varied requirements. When I received my commission I was solemnly sworn to support the constitution of the United States, and to discharge my duties as Governor of Kansas with fidelity. By reference to the act for the organization of this Territory, passed by Congress on the 30th day of March, 1854, I find my duties more particularly defined. Among other things, I am "to take care that the laws be faithfully executed." The constitution of the United States and the organic law of this Territory will be the lights by which I will be guided in my Executive career. A careful dispassionate examination of our organic act will satisfy any reasonable person that its provisions are eminently just and beneficial. If this act has been distorted to unworthy purposes it is not the fault of its provisions. The great leading features of that act is the right therein conferred upon the actual and bona fide inhabitants of this Territory "in the exercise of self government; to determine for themselves what shall be their own domestic institutions, subject only to the constitution and the laws duly enacted by Congress under it." The people accustomed to self-government in the States from whence they came, and having removed to this Territory with the bona fide intention of making it their future residence, were supposed to be capable of creating their own municipal government, and to be the best judges of their own local necessities and institutions. This is what is termed "popular sovereignty." By this phrase we simply mean the right of the majority of the people of the several States and Territories, being qualified electors, to regulate their own domestic concerns, and to make their own municipal laws. Thus understood, this doctrine underlies the whole system of republican government. It is the great right of self-government, for the establishment of which our ancestors, in the stormy days of the Revolution, pledged "their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor." A doctrine so eminently just should receive the willing homage of every American citizen. When legitimately expressed and duly ascertained, the will of the majority must be the imperative rule of civil action for every law abiding citizen. This simple, just rule of action has brought order out of chaos, and by a progress unparalleled in the history of the world has made of feeble infant colonies a giant confederated republic. No man conversant with the state of affairs now in Kansas can close his eyes to the fact that much civil disturbance has for a long time past existed in this Territory. Various reasons have been assigned for this unfortunate condition of affairs, and numerous remedies have been proposed. The House of the Representatives of the United States have ignored the claims of both gentlemen claiming the legal right to represent the people of this Territory in that body. The Topeka constitution, recognized by the House, has been repudiated by the Senate. Various measures, each in the opinion of its respective advocates suggestive of peace in Kansas, have been alternately proposed and rejected. Men outside of the Territory, in various sections of the Union influenced by reasons best known to themselves have endeavored to stir up internal strife, and to array brother against brother. In this conflict of opinion, and for the promotion of the most unworthy purposes Kansas is left to suffer her people to mourn, and her prosperity is endangered. Is there no remedy for these evils? Cannot the wounds of Kansas be healed and peace be restored to all her borders? Men of the North—men of the South of the East and of the West, in Kansas—you, and you alone have the remedy in your own hands. Will you not suspend fratricidal strife will you not cease to regard each other as enemies, and look upon one another as the children of a common mother, and come and reason together. Let us banish all outside influences from our deliberations, and assemble around our council board, with the constitution of our country and the organic law of the Territory as the great charts for our guidance and direction. The bona fide inhabitants of this Territory, alone, are charged with the solemn duty of enacting her laws, upholding her government, maintaining peace, and laying the foundation for a future commonwealth. On this point let there be a perfect unity of sentiment. It is the first great step towards the attainment of peace. It will inspire confidence amongst ourselves, and insure the respect of the whole country. Let us show ourselves worthy and capable of self-government. Do not the inhabitants of this Territory better understand what domestic institutions are suited to their condition—what laws will be most conducive to their prosperity and happiness—than the citizens of distant or even neighboring States? This great right of regulating our own affairs and attending to our own business, without any interference from others, has been guaranteed to us by the law which Congress has made for the organization of this Territory. This right of self-government—this privilege guaranteed to us by the organic law of our Territory, I will uphold with all my might and with the entire power committed to me. In relation to any changes of the laws of the Territory which I may deem desirable, I have no occasion now to speak; but there are subjects to which I shall direct the public attention at the proper time. The Territory of the United States is the common property of the several States, or of the people thereof. This being so, no obstacle should be interposed to the free settlement of this common property, while in a Territorial condition. I cheerfully admit that the people of this Territory, under the organic act, have the absolute right of making their municipal laws, and from citizens who deem themselves aggrieved by recent legislation, I would invoke the utmost forbearance and point out to them a sure and peaceable remedy. You have the right to ask the next Legislature to revise any and all laws: and in the meantime, as you value the peace of the Territory and the maintenance of future laws, I would earnestly ask you to refrain from all violation of the present statutes. I am sure there is patriotism sufficient in the people of Kansas to lend a willing obedience to the law. All the provisions of the constitution of the United States must be sacredly observed, all the acts of Congress having reference to this Territory must be unhesitatingly obeyed, and the decisions of our Courts respected. It will be my imperative duty to see that these suggestions are carried into effect. In my official action here, I will do justice at all hazards. Influenced by no other considerations than the welfare of the whole people of this Territory, I desire to know no party, no section, no North, no South, no East, no West—nothing but Kansas and my country. Fully conscious of my great responsibilities in the present condition of affairs in Kansas, I must invoke your aid, and solicit your generous forbearance. Your executive officer can do little without the aid of the people. With a firm reliance upon Divine Providence, to the best of my ability I shall promote the interests of the citizens of the Territory, not merely collectively, but individually; and I shall expect from them in return that cordial aid and support without which the government of no State or Territory can be administered. Let us all begin anew. Let the past be buried in oblivion. Let all strife and bitterness cease. Let us all honestly devote ourselves to the true interests of Kansas—develope her rich agricultural and mineral resources—build up manufacturing enterprises—make public roads and highways—prepare amply for the education of our children—devote ourselves to all the arts of peace—and make our Territory the sanctuary of those cherished principles which protect the inalienable rights of the individual, and elevate States in their sovereign capacities. Then shall peaceful industry soon be restored—population and wealth will flow upon us—"the desert will blossom as the rose"—and the State of Kansas will soon be admitted into the Union the peer and pride of her elder sisters.

Correspondence of President Erastus Snow.

Steamer Polar Star, Missouri River, Sept. 15, 1856.

Prest. John Taylor,—Dear Bro.:—I am now returning to St. Louis from Florence, N. T., whither I have been to take a farewell of Prest. F. D. Richards, and the other returning missionaries, and to assist in closing the emigration business of this season.

The last company of emigrants with hand-carts left Florence on the 26th ultimo, under the charge of Elder Martin, and the last or train of emigrants left same place Sept. 2d, under Capt. Hunt. Elder William Walker's freight train of extra baggage was yet at Council Bluffs when I left on the 11th. I fear the emigrants who enter Salt Lake Valley this fall will not see their extra baggage before another year, although Bro. Walker is intending to push forward as far as he can. I accompanied the brethren of the "Swiftsure Train" beyond the Elkhorn River, where I parted from them on the 5th inst. It consisted of four carriages and three light wagons, hauled by four mules each.

Notwithstanding the hurry and bustle of starting off the last companies and closing up the complicated business of the season, it was a joyful termination of the laborious summer work, and a happy meeting with those faithful men of God who after long years of separation from home and kindred dear, and faithful toil and labor in foreign lands, are now about to be released from their labors, and rest themselves while they journey across the plains.

May the choice blessings of Israel's God whom they serve abide upon them, and speed them on their way to the embrace of their anxious and loving families and friends. May they ever live in the affections of the Saints of God, and the memory of their noble deeds never periah.

So far as is yet known the experiment with hand-carts is likely to succeed quite as well as the most ardent advocate of the measure could have anticipated.

At our latest advices the advance companies were in the region of Fort Laramie, and all were in excellent health and spirits moving on finely and far outstripping the ox train.

A most melancholy and distressing affair was reported in my hearing at Florence on the 8th inst., by a party of Californians just arrived from the plains.

[President Snow relates what we have written elsewhere of the massacre on the plains.]

The men who brought this information said they met Col. Babbitt (who left Florence with a mule team a week behind his train), on Wood River, a few days after the massacre.

Florence is a flourishing town, alive with business, and houses rising all around as if by magic. 'Tis a beautiful place, and is withal an excellent outfitting point.

I left Elder Andrew Cunningham to preside over the Saints there and in western Iowa. I organized a Branch at Florence, and near fifty had already renewed their covenants by baptism before I left them. He will start soon with a party of men to make claims on the western limits of the Omaha Purchase in the region of the Loup Fork.

It is to be hoped that a sufficient number of faithful energetic brethren will report themselves to him early in April, or before, to form companies for settlements between there and the mountains.

Our Conference will come off on the 6th proximo in St. Louis. We should be happy to enjoy the benefit of your presence and wise counsel in our midst, if consistent with your other duties.

I remain your brother in Christ,

ERASTUS SNOW.

Correspondence of Joel M. Berry.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 3, 1856.

PRES'T. TAYLOR—Dear Sir: As time and opportunity permit, I again resume my pen to write you, knowing that you and your readers are always happy to hear from the Elders, and to learn how they are progressing in the work of the Lord. If there was ever a time when distress of nations and perplexity with men's hearts failing them for fear of things coming on the earth were the order of the day, now is certainly that time. It is said in one of the revelations of Jesus Christ to Joseph, "Behold I the Lord have decreed wars in all the earth and those who will not take up their sword against their fellow must flee to Zion." This is one great reason why, the Latter Day Saints are gathering from the nations of the earth. The cry has gone forth among all nations; "come out of Babylon, Oh my people, and be not partakers of her sins that ye receive not of her plagues." The distracted condition of the world demonstrates very clearly the necessity of a change in the government of the children of men. Then comes the question where is there a spirit, a master spirit that could govern and control the hostile nations and restrain their wrath and restrict their revolutions to their legitimate sphere of action. No power on this side of heaven can correct the evil. It is a world that is degenerated, and it requires a God to put it right. Thousands of men would desire to do good if they only knew how, but they see not the foundation and extent of the evil, and long established opinions, customs and doctrines blind their eyes and weaken their energies. If a few see the evil and try a remedy, what are a few in opposition to the views, power, influence and corruption of the world! It might be considered by some blasphemous and treasonable to say the Saints shall judge the world, but since the old prophets have made the assertion and modern prophets have confirmed it, I shall not be thought presumptuous nor unreasonable by any rational individual when I endorse the prophetic statement. If it be really true, and no Bible believer can say it is false, it would certainly be the best policy for the world at large and "all the rest of mankind," to lay aside the ponderous volumes of law, and commence the study of the laws of God, the principles of truth and righteousness, and the perfect order of the government of heaven. The nations of the earth have corrupted themselves before God, and are not in a position to be governed by His principles, without regeneration. If men were pure and living in the fear of God it would be another thing, but the world at the present time is not made of the proper materials to submit to a congressional interposition like the one now established. The materials will not combine, and nothing short of the power of God can accomplish it. The dispositions of the nations, of kings, rulers and people are the same. The late revolutions in Europe show the uncertain state of political affairs and are an evident proof of this. Talk of peace there is war: in the councils and cabinets uncertainty and distrust with emperors, kings, presidents and princes: war in the churches and clubs, that now distract the world. Since my descent from the mountains of Utah, I have conversed with some who seem to think that all that is necessary to promote the happiness of man is, that he have sufficient to eat and drink.

If we notice the position of some of the Southern and Western States they have abundance to eat and to drink, their lands bring forth bountifully; but does this make them happy! verily no! The same false state of society exists there. Men are awfully under the influence of their depraved passions, men are frequently put to death by what is called Lynch law without Judge or Jury.

The pistol, the bowie knife, the rifle and the dirk are in frequent requisition, and misery and unhappiness prevail. It is altogether an infatuation to think that a change in government will mend the circumstances, when the whole world is groaning under corruption. There are many philanthropists who would gladly ameliorate the condition of men if they only knew how; but the means employed are not commensurate with the end desired, every grade of society is vitiated and corrupt, "the whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint." Men should not be blamed for trying to do good it is certainly laudable, but our fathers have forsaken the true God, and have objected to his guidance, control and support, and thus we have been left to ourselves, and our present position is a manifest proof of our incompetency to govern, and our past failures make it evident that any future effort with the same means would be useless, the world is diseased and it requires a soverign remedy.

I must terminate for the present, hoping to amplify in some better manner hereafter. The Saints in this place are in a progressing state and we have some good meetings, and enjoy much of the spirit of God. Praying the blessings of heaven to attend you in your labors, I remain yours, in the Gospel of Christ.

JOEL M. BERRY.

Correspondence from the Plains.

BIG PAPAU, Sept. 4, 1856.

PRES'T. TAYLOR,—Dear Bro:—I sit down at our first camping place to write you a few lines, to inform you of our good health and the general good spirit of the company, we were all greatly hurried during the last week that we were obliged to spend in Florence; Bros. Franklin and Spencer have had a vast amount of settlements to accomplish in completing the forwarding of the hand-cart and cattle-cart companies. The emigrants all went off in the best of spirits notwithstanding the lateness of the season. I think I never saw more enthusiasm or determined faith in any companies of Saints that I ever had the privilege of seeing start across the plains.

The crowd of business obliged Bro. Snow to come out with us thus far, and is with Bro. F. D. R. and Br. Spencer, are now closing up the last of the business connected with the P. E. F. emigration. Bro. Walker is still back with ten wagons loaded mostly with extra freight belonging to the hand-cart companies. Bro. Jos. A. Young went out to meet him and returned last evening reporting him to be seventy miles back, on Tuesday last. Our company is composed of fourteen persons, five wagons, and twenty-five animals—horses and mules; the names of the brethren are as follows: F. D. Richards, Dan. Spencer, C. H. Wheelock, G. D. Grant, W. H. Kimball, J. Van Cott, Jas. McGaw, J. A. Young, J. McAllister, W. C. Dunbar, Capt. Dan Jones, C. G. Webb, J. Ferguson, and N. H. Felt. We are in hopes of going to the valley in thirty days, and be there at the conference of the 6th Oct. Excuse this hasty scrawl written on a log.

My kindest remembrance to yourself, kind regards to Bro. George, Stenhouse and Dulin, and all the Saints in New York. I remain yours in the Gospel. N. H. FELT.

Religious Strife in France.

THE Paris correspondent of the Morning Post says: That tranquility of the political world, which ever follows a period of storm and excitement, is now being disturbed by a religious strife in France, which in former times would have ended with stakes and faggots. Although we have reached the year of our Lord 1856, there is no such thing as religious toleration even in what are called highly civilized countries. Let any philosopher who has been speculating in a hopeful mood on what is called civil and religious liberty progress, read the two theological journals of France, viz.—the Univers and the Ami de la Religion, now bent on dividing the Church into hostile camps—at war alike on ecclesiastical and lay questions, and appealing to the divines of France for support; whereupon letters are written by all parties in which opinions are boldly declared with a sectarian bitterness peculiar to all ages. The state of the poll at the present moment stands thus: For the Ami de la Religion, seventy-five bishops; for the Univers, five bishops. The Univers in France is like the Civitta in Italy, a journal dedicated to the support of what most men in all ages, and of various creeds, have called "abuses of the Church"—that is to say, the Univers subscribes to the infallibility of Rome, and would have the world—temporal as well as spiritual—blindly, and without question, obey the Pope. Thus when we are favored with a "miracle," which is no uncommon event in these days, the Univers bids all men to believe. No one who has watched passing events since 1848 can have failed to observe the use which certain Governments have made of the Roman Catholic Church. Austria has allowed Roman bishops to revise the whole ecclesiastical machinery of an empire which numbers by tens of thousands a variety of religious sects. The ecclesiastical conclave which sat lately at Vienna has not published the result of its deliberations on the Concordat, but the dictorial attitude of the Roman episcopacy throughout Austria clearly shows that the State has given way to the Church. The questions of education, of the burial of Protestants, and mixed marriages, are to be regulated by Rome. In fact Austria in doing what she has often done before, courted the Church for political and temporal reasons, and is again resigning her heretics to the tender keeping of Rome. All this policy will no doubt be reversed when occasion demands, and some modern Emperor Maximilian or Joseph II. will, as of old, organize a council to control the pretensions of the Papacy. In Italy, since 1848, the Church has gained power in Tuscany and the Two Sicilies, and by the aid of foreign soldiers has held its ground in Rome. In Piedmont and Spain the Vatican is less potent than of old, but it yet trades with the ignorance and superstition of those States to annoy the temporal Government and divide the people into hostile camps. Now the Univers has long been endeavoring to do the same in France, but the raw material is different from that of Spain or Piedmont, and the results are by no means promising. True, we have had miracles here, and hints of damnation for those who do not believe in their divine origin. But the thunder of the Vatican in the ears of the French nation is nothing more than a theatrical rumble. The Univers, too, has lost weight and influence by its defence of all the corrupt Governments of Europe, and an endeavor to justify those acts of cruelty, originating in political persecutions, which religious teachers, whatever their political opinions, should rather regret than defend. The Government of the Emperor of the French, unlike that of Austria, or Naples, or Tuscany, has not given its support to the pretensions of that Church party which has gained so much influence since 1848 in certain European Courts and Governments. Beyond this discouragement, the divines of France, unlike the majority of their brethren in Italy and Spain, look with regret on the language of the ultra Romanists whose opinions and Jesuitism are to be found in the Univers. The Ami de la Religion represents the moderate Church party, and certainly the majority of French pastors. It will be something gained if the good sense of the people no longer tolerates a journal which seeks to degrade religion by identifying it with foolish imposture, although there are those in France who consider the organ of the Jesuits as a necessary index to the workings of that dangerous political community.

Low Water in the Ohio.

THE Ohio river is said to be lower than ever before known. Droves of cattle have been driven over at this point.

FOR THE MORMON.

"Knowledge is Power."—Lord Bacon.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

MAN, on entering this mortal career, is, in regard to his mental, as well as physical powers a child, that is to say, he can do nothing without the assistance of superior agents; he is ignorant of the power of locomotion, incapable of the least manifestation of his intellectual faculties; he is a stranger to the causes and effects of those phenomena which are continually transpiring in the arena of Nature. As soon as the infant child has been taught walking, the knowledge of the same enables him to engage in ambulatory exercises; the narrow range of his physical operations that was hitherto confined to the cradle and room, enlarges and brings a great many new objects within the sphere of his observation. In proportion to the physical development, the mental improvement takes place, so that the first rudiments of knowledge begin to dawn upon his intellect; he becomes acquainted with the nature of some of the primitive elements, as for instance fire and water; he learns how to use them, without experiencing a fatal effect from the same. Having a knowledge of the effects of certain sharp and cutting instruments, he becomes familiar with their use, which would have endangered his life when an infant. When his intellectual improvement has progressed sufficiently and he is capable of judging and reasoning, he begins to dive into arts and sciences or engage in some useful avocation of life. When a laboring man or mechanic, he becomes acquainted with the use of a variety of tools, instruments and implements, so that the knowledge their nature gives him the power to gain his livelihood, to become useful to his fellow-man and show himself an independent intelligent being. In this phase of his existence, he can tell evil from good, this knowledge teaches him to shun vice, abhor crime and do right, so that his moral faculties, if properly guided, improve rapidly.

Knowledge is productive of many important and beneficial effects; it overcomes superstition, and tyranny; it tends to an investigation of everything leading to the happiness of man, to an improvement and advancement of the mind, so that the confines of metal and physical darkness become more and more limited. The ideas of man become directed in a channel of rational, sober reflections, unfolding, when the stream of knowledge begins gradually to flow with an accelerated progress, to his view new and interesting objects of contemplation. When man has risen so far in the scale of intellectual existence, he realizes the necessity and importance of acquiring useful knowledge, that he may comprehend the full bearings thereof. In order to prove and illustrate better Lord Bacon's assertion, that "knowledge is power," I will give the reader a skeleton outline of some of the most important branches of human knowledge as far as I can rely on my memory.

A knowledge of pneumatics, of the nature and properties of gasseous matters, of the atmosphere surrounding our globe, lead Torricelli, a disciple of Galileo, to an experiment in 1643, by which he discovered the measuremeant of the atmospheric pressure; it led to the construction of barometers, siphons (a siphon is a bent tube with two unequal branches for the purpose of drawing off liquids,) air-pumps, atmospheric railways, balloons, parachutes (a parachute is a machine by means of which the æronaut can in case of emergency leave his baloon and descend with a gradually slackening velocity,) air-fountains, air-guns and other useful instruments and machines. A knowledge of chemistry shows how to analize gases, liquids, substances; it is useful for a great many practical operations, as for instance the brewing of fermented liquors; it is requisite for manufacturing purposes; it shows how to transform iron into steel; is of the greatest importance for observing a strict regimen of diet, as it shows the process of absorbtion, fermentation, secretion, composition and decomposition in the machinery of the body. A knowledge of mathematics and the physical sciences are of great use for every branch of mechanics. It shows the construction of angles of any assigned number of degrees, the estimation of square or cubical contents of an object, the solation of the problem of equations; it shows the nature of the involution of Powers, of the Binomial Theorem; it is the pathway to the mysterious maze of the constellation of heavenly bodies; it gives the time of the revolution of satellites round their axis and round the sun of a certain system, the time of their appearance and reappearance; it gives an insight into the estimation of the strength of materials, etc. A knowledge of geology shows the different strata of the earth; how the agency of coral insects produces rocks; it speaks of the animalculite contributions to the formation of rocks since the creation of man and animals. The knowledge of electricity led to a discovery of the lightning conductor, and the electric fluid is now used in mechanical operations, as for instance in splitting large stones; it led to the construction of the electric telegraph. A knowledge of galvanism, which science was discovered by Galvani, of Bologna, 1790, is useful to a great many workers in metals; it led to the construction of the galvanic circle, which is a connection of two metallic substances of different kinds by moisture. A knowledge of magnetism in connection with its polarity enables the navigator to find his way on the vast ocean, in fact its influence is felt in all the departments of the physical creation. A knowledge of the employment of steam, as a new power of locomotion, has had the most wonderful bearings on arts, sciences, and the world at large. A sound physical education, as for instance the knowledge of swimming and of gymnastics, enables man, in case of danger, to escape the destructive effects of water, etc.

From the above it is evident, that a knowledge of sciences and arts involves a certain power over the elements, the animal, vegetable and mineral kingdoms. The electric fluid is used as a messenger of joy and woe, as is illustrated by the operation of the electro-magnetic telegraph; the air is the medium of travelling through the planetary spaces, as is shown by a aerostation; it led to the invention of the atmospheric railway, that was first constructed in 1831 in Ireland, by the engineers, Clegg and Samuda, who where the principal movers in the train of atmospheric pressure. The wind by the navigators skill becomes a natural propeller, and is thus subject to his will. By being acquainted with some of the leading properties of fire, viz., that flames tend to mount upwards, and that air is the natural and essential supporter of it; by the invention of useful machines as a proper mode of extinguishing fires, and of effecting an escape, in case of danger, from the same; by a proper knowledge of that consuming element, it is confined to a channel of general usefulness. A knowledge of pneumatics, as for instance of noxious gases, prevents a great many dangers that would otherwise result from an ignorance of the true nature of the same. The chemist or naturalist by the means of his knowledge detects the different kinds of poisons in plants, herbs, minerals, etc., and discovers the process of counteracting their pernicious effects. Preinseh, the eminent German chemist, recommends as a proper mode of detecting poisonous substances, to put a few drops of muriatic acid in an arsenical liquid, immerse a few slips of bright copper, and boil the same in a glass. If any arsenic is contained in the liquid, it will settle on the copper in the form of a crust. If the copper thus coated is put in a hydrogen generator, and the escaping gas is well tested, the arsenic will soon be detected. A knowledge of hydrostatics shows the general character of liquids, the mode of conveying and raising water, and of using it for purposes of general usefulness, as is illustrated by the construction of the hydraulic press, by means of which an enormous pressure can be produced. A knowledge of physiology gives an insight into the peculiarities of the animal system, and impresses upon the mind the necessity of observing a strict regimen of diet, of maintaining cleanliness, and thereby removing everything that might be productive of pestilential effluvia, and thus inhaling the pure atmospheric air of daily ventilated apartments, and taking recourse to many other prophylactic means, was to prevent a disorder in the body and the subsequent outbreak of diseases.

But it is not only the knowledge of sciences, but also that of arts, mechanical and manual labor, which give man power over uncivilized nations, the brute creation, over animate and inanimate matter. Only consider how almost in every department of arts and mechanical labor, the greatest utility is found. Masons, carpenters, farmers, etc., have by combining rough materials, quarrying stones, felling timber, splitting rocks, raising water from the bowels of the earth, by building houses, tilling farms, making all kinds of tools and implements, by bridging thundering mountain-streams which impeded travelling and removing thus the natural barriers of scientific explorations, of commercial and social intercourse, made improvements and introduced civilization in countries in which desolation and wilderness had their dismal sway. Those faithful and persevering mechanics and agriculturists coped with the elements, and their successful labors showed their victory over the crude and obstinate materials and forces of wild nature. The thundering fall of primeval forests by the axe of the hardy pioneer, the blasting of rocks by powder, the opening of roads in places which seemed to baffle all human skill, the decrease of wild beasts, the establishing of settlements in locations, where Nature seemed to struggle for every foot which was gained by civilization, the cultivation of soil under the most disadvantageous circumstances, all prove that a well-directed knowledge of sciences, arts, and mechanics has the power of conquering and removing the dismal mementoes of barbarism and ignorance, of transforming a wilderness into a fair garden, and making it a fit habitation for intelligent and civilized beings.

It is likewise reasonable to conclude, that when knowledge has taken possession of the mind, reason holds the ascendancy over passions, desires and afflictions, and confines them to a proper channel, because a man who is acquainted with the salutary and invigorating effects of rational enjoyments, will abhor everything that might benumb the intellectual faculties, debase the beauty of the soul, and deteriorate the moral faculties; he will shun degrading associations and pursuits which are only tending to debauchery and to a destruction of order and happiness, and only form habits of sobriety and temperance, and solely engage in the refined gratifications of intellectual pursuits. The greater the prosecution of knowledge, the more the mental faculties become sharpened and invigorated as a full exercise of the functions of the mind is requisite for the comprehension of scientific principles, hence it will be easy for a man of knowledge to see the folly and infatuation of subjecting the mind to the control of the sensitive appetite of our nature. It is evident from the foregoing, that an acquisition of knowledge is of the greatest importance, as it completes the dominion of the mind over the most refractory qualities of matter, and gives man power over physical and moral evils.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

ON Thursday of last week Mr. William T. Coleman, the President of the San Francisco Vigilance Committee, was arrested in this city on the charge of Mr. Maloney, who had been expelled from California by the orders of Mr. C. and associates. Mr. M. sets forth in his affidavit that it was his patriotic adherence to the legal authorities of the State alone that brought the wrath of the Vigilants upon him, and gives a long statement of his treatment from his apprehension till his banishment. As Mr. Coleman was among the wealthiest of the Golden State, Mr. Maloney wanted Judge Whiting to hold him to bail in the sum of $100,000: he was, however, set at liberty on the bail of $50,000.

The Democrats of New York are this week wrapt in mourning by the sudden death of Lorenzo B. Shephard, Esq., an influential and prominent leader of the party, a man of high attainments, and universally respected. He was found dead in his bath-room on Friday morning. On Sunday his corpse was followed to its resting place by a vast concourse of sorrowing friends.

Mr. John A. King, of Jamaica, Long Island, was nominated at the Republican Convention at Syracuse for Governor of this State. The Herald comes out against him, won't support him, and is hard upon the Republicans for passing by "Philosopher Greeley" with one solitary vote, after all his labor for the cause. The Herald is evidently more annoyed at the light appreciation of the "power of the Press" than their slighting Horace.

The report of Mr. Corwine, the Commissioner sent by the Administration to examine into the circumstances leading to the riot at Panama in April last, in which American citizens in transit for California were outraged, robbed, and murdered, alleges that the riot was the result of a preconcerted plot, as many of the passengers were supposed to be en route to join Walker in Nicaragua, and that the Governor and authorities were aware of the preparations for a row and took no steps to hinder it. Mr. C. represents the new Granadian Government powerless for protection to travellers, and recommends that our Government should take decided measures to insure safety to travellers in future. Some suppose that if Secretary Marcy had not been opposed to war that by this time "Uncle's" troops would have been on the Isthmus.

British vessels of war are reported to be gathering towards Vera Cruz to enforce the demands of British subjects upon the Government of Mexico. The young Republic finds it a hard thing to be poor with relentless creditors and few friends. Some time since the Spanish Minister, Alvarez, went there on a similar mission, backed by the Spanish fleet, and was successful in arranging things amicably; but the last advices from Spain show he is "ordered to cease his functions near the Mexican Republic," which is regarded as the dissatisfaction of the Government of Isabella with his moderation. Might makes right with the descendants of Japheth.

The French Red Republicans had a gathering on Monday evening, in honor of the French Republic of September, 1762. Few persons present, warm speeches, lots of love for Murat and Robespierre, great rejoicing over Louis Napoleon's sickness, and best prayers for an early revolution in France, in which they all hoped to join.

Mr. George Peabody, "the wealthy American banker," in London, who has been absent from this country for twenty years, arrived last week. He has been well received by the merchants and upper-ten, congratulated, addressed, and invited to public dinners in the chief cities of the East, but has declined the honor of all public dinners, save one in his native town.

Hon. Anson Burlingame, of Brooks, rifle, Canada Falls notoriety, addressed the "Black Republicans" on Union Square on Wednesday evening: there was considerable opposition.

Speaker Banks was announced to address the "merchants and others," from the steps of the Exchange in Wall street, on Thursday, but the President and Directors objected to the honor intended their building, for the double reason, that business might be hindered, and they refused to lend the appearence of their support to any partizan demonstration. These objections were, by some means overruled, and Mr. Banks spoke at 4 P. M., on the all-absorbing topic—the Presidency. The Antis crack him up, the Pros say he leaves New York smaller than he entered it.

The steamer Niagara, was burned on Lake Michigan, on Monday evening, about four miles from Port Washington. In a few minutes, the steamer was a burning mass. About 170 passengers were on board; only 80 of whom have been rescued. It is conjectured it was the work of an incendiary.

Mr. Erastus Brooks of the Express has received the Know Nothing nomination for Governor of this State.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

ENGLAND.—The Royal British Bank stopped payment on the 3d inst. Being a joint stock bank and receiving small deposits on drawing accounts, its chief depositors were small tradesmen who were in the habit of depositing the amounts to meet their current expenditure. Among them it has made quite a panic.

The American ship Ocean Home bound from Rotterdam to New York with German emigrants, who with crew and officers numbered 115 persons, came into collision with the Cherubim, another American ship, on the morning of the 5th inst., off the Lizard. The Ocean Home sunk in twenty minutes afterwards taking to a watering grave seventy-seven persons. The master and twenty-one of the passengers and crew were landed at Plymouth the same evening in a most destitute condition, having lost everything that belonged to them. The Cherubim received but little damage, and proceeded on her voyage to Liverpool. Among her passengers were the widow and five children of Mr. Rowcraft, late British Consul at Cincinnati, whom President Pierce recently dismissed for taking part in the enlistment business. Mr. Rowcraft was in good health when he sailed for England, but died suddenly on the fourteenth day at sea.

Mr. Roebuck, the radical M. P. for Sheffield, has been presented by his constituents with a purse containing 1,100 guineas, obtained by public subscription. The total amount subscribed was £1,400. The remainder of the sum collected is to be spent in a portrait of Mr. Roebuck, to be hung up in a public place in Sheffield. Mr. R. is highly esteemed by the working classes, being ever found on their side in the House of Commons, and an inveterate enemy to routine and red tapeism.

Sir Richard Westmacott, the sculptor, died in London on the 1st inst., in his eighty-second year.

The Liverpool Post, Sept. 4th, announces the death of Rear Admiral Sir John Ross, C. B., the celebrated Arctic navigator. He was in his 86th year, and, up till the period of his brief illness, was strong and active to a surprising degree. This gallant Arctic voyager entered the navy as far back as 1786, and during the late war was constantly engaged actively. His most important services were rendered in the Arctic regions, where in 1818 he proceeded along with Sir W. E. Parry.

IRELAND.—It is intended by the citizens of Dublin to give a complimentary dinner to 2,000 Irish soldiers from the Crimea.

The Cork Constitution states that the Arctic, United States surveying ship, which had taken sounding from St. Johns, Newfoundland, to Valentia, on the Irish coast, with a view to submarine telegraph communication between the two hemispheres, is about to leave Cork immediately to continue her soundings back to St. Johns.

FRANCE.—Accounts from Paris announce that the commander of the French frigate Virginie has succeeded in establishing in the mind of the Emperor of Japan, the advantages from friendly relations with France, and a treaty of commerce is shortly to be concluded, based upon the same concessions granted to Great Britain and the United States. Louis, Eugenie and "the blessed bady" were still at Biarritz.

The sums subscribed, both in and out of France, for the relief of the sufferers from the late inundation up to the 27th August, amount of 10,110,515 francs, or upwards of £404,420 sterling. England of that sum has contributed £50,000.

SPAIN.—The new government has not got settled yet but seems to do things a la Napoleon. Six Madrid journals were seized on the 31st. ult., and the Gazette publishes the decree dissolving the constituent Cortes.

The marriage of the Infanta Donna Amalia of Spain and Prince Adalbert of Bavaria took place at Madrid, with great pomp, on the 26th ult. The marriage portion of the Infanta stated in the contract is 7,000,000 reals, and the Prince gives, as pin-money, to his bride 44,000fl. annually.

GREECE.—A band of brigands lately entered Lepaisti, in Macedonia, and took away into captivity the schoolmaster of the place with all his scholars; the briganda have demanded a ransom of 500,000 piastres.

CHINA.—The Overland Friend of China, in its summary, dated Hong Kong, July 10, says:

"In all the surrounding country we hear of the existence of much anarchy—repeated defeats of the Imperialist fleets and armies; and it is not unlikely that with the next mail we shall have to tell of panics at Shanghai and Canton again.

"Notwithstanding her internal troubles, China is still able to supply plenty of tea. The total export for the year ended the 19th ult., was nearly 6,000,000 pounds in excess of the export of the year previous, and 20,000,000 pounds (or an increase of nearly a fourth of the whole export) over that of the year ended June, 1853.

TURKEY—Diplomatic relations have been again opened between Turkey and Russia. The Ambassador of the latter power has arrived in Constantinople and it is to be hoped means to behave himself. Lord Lyons the British Admiral means to cruise about the Black Sea till every vestige of Russia is out of Turkish territory.

WEST INDIES.—Cholera is disappearing from Madeira. 5,000 persons have fallen victims in a population of 16,000. At Funchal the deaths are now no more than five or six daily.

Latest from Europe.

BY the arrival of the Washington, we have news from England, up to the 10th inst: His Imperial Majesty the Emperor Alexandra of Russia, was crowned at Moscow on Sunday, the 7th inst. The ceremony took place in the Uspenski Ssober, and the act of coronation was performed by Archbishop Philaretis, the Metropolitan of Moscow. The proceedings were very grand and great enthusiasm was everywhere manifested. Count Orloff was created a Prince; Prince Woronzoff, a Field Marshal, and Gens. de Berg and Soumarokhoff, Counts.

Prussia has lodged a protest with the Swiss Federal Government against any interference on its part with the affairs of Neufchatel. A Paris letter, in the Independence, of Brussels, says:

It is said that there are a community of views between France and Prussia on the Neufchatel affair. The latter proposes to abandon any pretensions to the Canton of Neufchatel in return for an indemnity to be fixed by the common accord, under the mediation of the great Powers of Europe. The Congress of Paris, which is about to re-assemble to settle the points left undecided as to the frontiers of the Danubian Principalities, will probably terminate the Neufchatel affair at once for all.

It is reported that the relations between Russia and Sweden are becoming more and more unfriendly.

Owing to the failure of the Royal British Bank having caused great uneasiness in England, the Governor of the Unity Bank issued a notification to the public, in which he states that every depositor may have his money if he chooses to apply for it, and that the paid up capital of the bank (£150,000) remains intact.

A boat belonging to the ill-fated emigrant ship Ocean Home has been picked up. It contained Edward Harvey, second mate; Frederick Snow and James Monaghan, seaman, and one passenger, name unknown.

The Chinese insurgents took possession of Tanyang, July 6, which brings them close to Souchow, the capital of the province and outlet of commerce from Shanghae.

An imperial fleet, of forty sail, is blockaded near Nankin.

Weather at the South.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Sept. 24, 1856.

THERE was a heavy frost in this section of the State last night. It is feared that the cotton crop has sustained much damage.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Loss of the English Mail Steamer Tay.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 21, 1856.

The English mail steamer Tay was lost near Lopez Island, on the 30th of August. The mails and the passengers and crew were saved.

Destructive Fire at Boston.

BOSTON, Sept. 22, 1856.

The East Boston Steam Flouring Mills, located on the wharf adjoining the ferry on the East Boston side were nearly destroyed by fire shortly after noon to-day. The building was of brick five stories high, and of great extent, and contained a large quantity of grain, rice, &c. The loss is about $75,000, and fully covered by insurance, mostly in the Boston offices. E. D. Brigham & Co., are agents.

The National Intelligencer Goes for Fillmore.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23, 1856.

THE Intelligencer drops its neutrality this morning, and supports Fillmore for the Presidency, on the basis of the action of the Whig National Convention.

Great Fire at Macon, Ga.

MACON, Ga., Sept. 23, 1856.

THE building occupied by the Marine and Mechanics' Banks, the old Washington Hall, and all the other buildings on the north side of the Washington Hall block except that occupied by the Bank of Middle Georgia, and a similar wood building, was consumed by fire early yesterday morning.

The American Pomological Society.

ROCHESTER, Sept. 24, 1856.

THE American Pomological Society commenced its session in this city this forenoon. The most distinguished fruit growers of the Union are here. Delegates from twenty States have reported themselves. Hon Marshall P. Wilder, the President, delivered a beautiful and able address at 11 o'clock. The exhibition of fruit at Corinthian Hall from all the States is a most beautiful display. The session promises to be the most important and successful ever held.

Table Manners.

THE following extract is from "The Widow Bedott Papers" satirizing the fashionable practice of guests' flattering the entertainment of their hostess, while she on her part disparages it, may touch our readers mirthfully, and, at the same time, help their digestion.

"What delightful biscuit," says Miss Grimes.

"They are so," says Miss Skinner but Miss Gipson never has poor biscuit."

"O shaw!" says Miss Gipson, 'you ain't in airnest; my biscuits is miserable—not nigh so good as common. I don't think the flour's first rate."

"Miss Gipson, how DID you make crackers!" says Miss Stillman; 'I never tasted none so good."

"Now you don't MEAN so," says Miss Gipson. "I can make good crackers, but them's very poor; the oven wa'n't jest right when I put em in."

"I must have another piece o' this cheese, it's so good," says Miss Lippencott. "Where DID you get it!"

"Well, I got it of old Daddy Sharp; he ginerally makes excellent cheese, I tell Mr. Gipson old Sharp's failed for once—that's what I call poon cheese."

"DID taste o' this plum sass, Miss Peabody," says Miss Brewster; 'I never seed the beat on't."

"I'd rather have these peaches," says Miss Peabody; "they're DELLICIOUS. It's a mystery to me how Miss Gipson always has such luck with her preserves. I never dew, and I always take pound for pound tew."

"This apple-jel's the clearest I ever see," says old Miss Parker. "How DID you make it, Miss Gipson? Didn't you do it in the sun? I'm aure it don't look as if it had been nigh the fire."

"Now don't speak o' that jel," says Miss Gipson. "I told Carline I was ashamed o' my jel after seein' Miss Parker's, and I was a most sorry I'd made any presarves since I'd eat some of Miss Peabody's and Miss Skinner's, theirn was so much nicer." So they went on. The whipt cream and custard had to be gone over. Miss Gipson had to tell jest how't was made—what flavoring she used, and all that—though she declared she was ashamed on't. The CAKE was praised up; they must know how much butter there was in THIS, how many eggs it took FOR THAT and so forth. Miss Gipson, of course, run it down; she COULD make good cake, but somehow she failed that time. A person that didn't know how wimmen always go on at such a place, would a thought that Miss Gipson had tried to have everything the miserablest she possibly could, and the rest on 'em had never had anything to hum but what was miserabler yet.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the came now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Oh Give Not Up to Sorrow.

SELECTED.

Oh give not up to sorrow,
And never know despair—
Let Hope light up the morrow,
With all its holy cheer.
Why should we mar the moments
That past us swiftly fly,
By cruel dark forebodings,
When Joy itself is nigh?

Though dark misfortunes meet us,
And friends and fortune fail,
And many objects greet us,
To tell the sadden'd tale—
Let's view it as our share of toil,
That's nobly to be borne—
And light will be a burden,
Howe'er the heart was torn.

Oh give not up to sorrow,
And never know despair—
Let Hope light up the morrow,
With all its holy cheer.
He who can light the darkness
Will every care disarm—
The storms of life will rage to-day,
To-morrow bring its calm.

Entry of the Emperor into Moscow, Sep. 7.

THE Daily News has a long letter from its special correspondent at Moscow, describing the solemn entry of the Emperor into Moscow. The description is very picturesque. The correspondent writes: "Down the principal street, the Tvertskoi, a broad central space, carefully sanded, was rigorously kept by a double line of soldiers, composed partly of the ancient and historical Strelitzes, and partly by the Ishmaeloffski Regiment, formed three deep, and marshalled by their officers in brilliant uniform. They were all superb infantry, and looked both fierce and splendid, the latter in their dark green uniforms with scarlet facing, the others in the ancient military costume of Russia, caftan and cap, nearly the same as worn at the present day. The street is not straight in its line and uniform in the size of its houses, like Regent street or the Nevskoi, but winds gracefully over an undulating surface, while every house has a strong individuality both in its design and decoration. They were all along decorated in bright colors, and filled in every window and balcony with well-dressed people, and I must say that notwithstanding the irregularity of the buildings, I never saw a finer or more picturesque effect produced. The crowd was very great, and extended with more or less of density all the way to the Palace of Petrovski, a distance of seven versts, or about five English miles, from the city; so that there could not have been much less than half a million of people assembled to welcome their Czar in the ancient capital of his empire. We had to wait a long time for the entrance of the cortege, but had ample amusement meanwhile in watching the movements of the crowd, scanning with curious eye the Turkey carpets, Russian silks, and even Russian bearskins, with which the balconies were decorated, or distinguishing the various squadrons of cavalry that shot past like meteors, en route to their respective stations. Who are those splendid cavaliers in bright cuirasses over white uniforms, and mounted on superb black chargers, that prance, and curvet, and sidle, and rear, to the great inconvenience of the crowd, but the manifest admiration of the latter? They are the grenadiers echeval, creme de la creme—one of the picked regiments of the immense Russian army. They are making for Petrovski, to form part of the Emperor's bodyguard.

Who are those steady, sober-looking fellows in light blue uniforms, mounted on steady business-like horses, and looking as if Sir Richard Mayne might place himself at their head at a moment's notice? They are the mounted gendarmerie, a most efficient body of men, who keep the peace of this great city with its half-European, half-Asiatic population, in a way that would do honor to the London police. They are followed by an elfin troop, the grim-looking Cossacks of the Ukraine, mounted on hardy little horses, and helping the gendarmes to look after the people, while the gendarmes look after themselves. Three o'clock! the magic number of booms from the great clock of the Assumption; the distant roar of the cannon of Petrovski comes rolling on the ear; it is answered by the guns, and immediately the vigorous beadles of five hundred churches commence ding dong, with bells great and small, sonorous and shrill, gong-like and cymbal-like, until the tympanum is bewildered, and one imagines that nothing less than the approaching end of the world can have created such a clangor. Every eye is now strained, as aides decamp gallop past, soldiers fall into line, and priests in golden vestments emerge from their churches, and wait in their several vestibules for the coming of the Czar. We had not long to wait, for soon the head of the grand procession bursts upon the view, and never in the grandest spectacle was there seen a more gorgeous parade. First came the Leghi of the Caucasus, covered from head to foot with bright chain armor, mounted on prancing Georgian horses, and looking as they rode past, lance in rest, and battle-axe in hand, like venerable knights of the crusades. Close behind followed the pale, slim Circassians, in their white caftans and splendid turbans, and mounted on black horses as slim and graceful as themselves. Then we had the Persians of the district of Eviran, in conical black caps, as you may have seen them some night in the Speaker's gallery of the House of Commons, their little graceful figures glittering in the gold broacades of Shiraz ann Teheran. They are the dandies, the veritable "swells" of the the procession, and seem to have a sufficient consciousness of that interesting fact. A Tartar group follows in flowing robes of green velvet, embroidered in gold, and managing their mettlesome steeds as Tartars only can manage them. Lastly come the Mingrelians, in red caftans and strange little caps, compared to which a blue-coat boy's would be a sombrero; and the avant garde closes with strong squadrons of Cossacks of the line and of the Ukraine. Following this most gallant and striking pageant came the representatives of the Haute Noblesse, splendidly dressed, and mounted on horses of immense price. Plumes waved in every direction, the trumpets sounded a fanfare, and these princes of the land, whose every name had its history, passed, slowly on to the sacred gate. As you have long since had the programme, I shall not trouble you in detail about Laquais, the Negres de la Cour, the Piqueurs or Veneurs, and the running footmen, the latter by the way proceeding at the most leisurely pace possible. All eyes were now fixed on the Emperor, who, dressed in a general's uniform and mounted on a magnificent grey charger, rode slowly into view. As he made his appearance the cheers were deafening, and when he stopped before the little church of Our Lady of Kazan, took off his golden casque, and piously received the benedictions of the priests, the popular enthusiasm knows no bounds. His Imperial Majesty looked well, though grave, sat his horse with grace and dignity, and frequently acknowledged the salutation of the people. Close behind followed his staff, a perfect army of generals and field officers in the most varied and brilliant uniforms that can be imagined, and then in a long line the splendid gilt carriages of which I have already forwarded you a description. The first contained the Empress Mother, who was much cheered, and then followed that of the Imperatrice Regnante, in the beautifully carved antique English chariot, to which I have before alluded. These two were respectively drawn by eight horses, while the remainder, containing the dames d'honneur and officers of the Court, had only six. The Empress wore the kakochnik, or national Russian head-dress studded all over with diamonds, and her robe was a splendid compromise between the Sclavonic caftan and the modern French toilette. Attending upon the carriages of the two Empresses were strong squadrons of Chevalier Gardes, the most magnificent cavalry in the world, the horses of the private soldiers being quite equal in beauty and spirit to those of the officers; but I believe they are all noblesse together, and provide their own appointments. They certainly looked and rode splendidly, and, as soldiers of parade, nothing could be finer. It took a long time to pass all these great personages and great carriages through the gate, and it also took some time to descend by an intermediate and narrow flight of steps cut in the battlemented wall, for those who had spent the morning on the ramparts. When I arrived at the quadrangle in which the Cathedral of Assumption stands the Emperor had already entered the Church, the priests were chanting the Te Deum, and his Majesty performing the prescribed solemn rites of the Greek Church. He remained but a very few minutes, when cortege was formed, and proceeded across the quadrangle to the Church of St. Michael the Archangel, and of the Annunciation, where the sacred reliques were presented by the Metropolitan of Moscow to his Majesty to kiss, and his Majesty stopped for a moment to offer a prayer over the tombs of his ancestors. The Metropolitan wore vestments of golden tissue, the same as the priests, the only difference of costume being a square velvet cap, the distinguishing mark, I presume, of his high office. The whole of the ceremonial was exceedingly brief, and at its conclusion, the whole Court ascended by a broad escalier covered with scarlet cloth, into the Palace of the Kremlin, where of course the pageant terminated, in as far as the public were concerned. I observed with pain that the Empress mother, as she ascended the steps, was supported on both sides, and seemed to suffer much from weakness and exhaustion."

The Burning of the Steamer Niagara.

One Hundred Lives Lost—Boat and Cargo Sunk.

From the Milwaukie Daily American, Sept. 20.

FROM Capt. Sweeney, of the steamer Traveller, and passengers, we learn the following particulars of the burning of the Collingwood steamer Niagara, and the loss of about 100 passengers and crew.

Yesterday afternoon the officers of the steamer Traveller, while laying at the pier at Port Washington, discovered to the north about twelve miles a volume of smoke and steam, and on bringing a glass to bear they discovered that it was the steamer Niagara in flames. They at once got up steam and run for the burning vessel, which they reached in about three-quarters of an hour. When they reached her she was one mass of flames, and all hands except Capt. Miller and seven passengers had left the wreck. These were clinging to the wheels, and were at once rescued.

MR. AINSWORTH'S STATEMENT.

Mr. Harvey Ainsworth, from Royalton, Windsor Co., Vermont, was aboard with his wife, three children, father, and sister-in-law, with a child. He alone of all the party was saved. They were on their way to Baraboo, in this State, near which place he had purchased a farm last spring, and was on his way to settle. Mr. A. was standing alone on the stern of the boat on the hurricane deck, when he first saw the smoke and streaks of flame breaking through the deck, above the engine, between the beams. He immediately ran forward to where his family were standing.

The cry of "fire!" "fire!" was immediately raised from a score of voices.

Men, women and children rushed on deck, with horror depicted upon every countenance, and numbers rushed to the guards and sprang shrieking into the water, to be buried in their liquid graves. Mr. Ainsworth gathered his family around him, and unaided, uncoiled the large hawser at the bow, and threw it over the guards.

He then let his wife and children down, and finally descended into the noose of the hawser himself and hung fast until the flames had burned off the rope, and let him drop into the water. Mr. Ainsworth then got hold of a boat upside down, to which a number of poor drowning wretches were hanging in the last agonies of death. He thinks that at least a dozen persons were hanging to the boat when he seized hold. One after another of these dropped off, until only himself remained. He then succeeded in getting three men, (Mr. Chalmers, of N. B.; J. P. Kennedy, and Hugh Kennedy) in the boat with him. The four persons were all finally picked up by a small boat from the schooner.

Mr. Ainsworth thinks that there were about one hundred cabin passengers on board when the boat left Sheboygan, besides a large number in the steerage. Mr. A. lost all his baggage, and about $1,000 in money.

Mr. Ainsworth states that the conduct of Capt. Miller was well calculated to quiet the terror and save the lives of the passengers, and that he was the last man to leave the burning wreck of his vessel.

Of the pecuniary loss by this terrible disaster we learn nothing, though it cannot be less than from $200,000 to $300,000; it is nothing in comparison to the fearful loss of human life.

The surviving passengers have published a card, speaking in the highest terms of the captain and crew of the Niagara, for their untiring exertions in endeavoring to save the people up to the last moment, and concludes: "To the captains and crews of the schooner Dan Marble, the propeller Illinois and steamer Traveller, we would return our sincere and heartfelt thanks for the assistance so nobly given in our time of need. May God reward them richly for their noble acts. It has been thought by many that the fire originated among the merchandise from matches or other combustible matter, and we would take this opportunity to say to those merchants who are in the habit of packing matches, fireworks, and other combustible matter, among boxes and barrels of merchandise, that they are trifling with the lives of hundreds of their fellow men, and if they do not desist they may be again the cause of bringing sorrow and desolation to many a happy home.

Terrible Catastrophe!

Capsizing of the Lake House Ferry Boat—Forty Persons Precipitated into the River—Ten to Fifteen Lives Lost—The Drowned—The Coroner's Inquest.

YESTERDAY morning, Sep. 19, the most intense excitement was created in our city by a report that the Lake House Ferry Boat had capsized with a large number of passengers on board, and that many were drowned. In a few moments the occurrence was known all over the city and thousands hurried to the scene of the catastrophe to ascertain if their friends were among the unfortunate passengers. When our reporter reached the ferry landing the greatest excitement prevailed among the immense throng assembled, and the river at that point was covered with small boats, provided with hooks and grappling irons, engaged in searching for the dead. The docks and streets swarmed with people, among them husbands, wives and children breathlessly awaiting the result of the efforts to recover the bodies.

The facts in relation to the accident are, as nearly as we can gather them from those who saw all that occurred, as follows: A few minutes before seven o'clock yesterday morning, the boat, at the North slip, was crowded with passengers, laboring men who were on their way to commence work, and the schooner —— was passing down the creek and had signalled the ferry-men to let go his line. The schooner was perhaps once or twice her length from the line, and the passengers on the ferry-boat in their anxiety to cross ahead of the schooner, and in spite of the remonstrance of the ferry-man, commenced pulling the boat across after the line had been partly slackened. The boat was an old scow which had been temporarily used at Wells street, the regular boat being hauled off for repairs, and was crowded with people, the number being variously estimated at from thirty to forty persons, all men and boys. When the boat reached the middle of the stream the schooner had come nearly up to ferry line, and the ferryman slackened the rope for fear the schooner would carry it away. This swung the boat partially round, greatly frightening the passengers, and causing it to hit the martingale of the schooner. A moment after the boat capsized, throwing the passengers into the water. The scene that ensued beggars description. Some thirty or forty human beings were huddled together in the water struggling for life, the people on the shore and on the schooner were throwing in boards and sending boats to the rescue of the drowning men, men were running wildly about in the effort to do something to save life, and shouting to each other and to the men in water.

In a very few moments several small boats had rescued a portion of the sufferers, some had climbed upon the capsized ferry-boat, others had been taken on board the schooner, and a few swam to the shore. A number were known to be drowned, and as soon as the living were saved every exertion was made to recover the dead and by dark ten bodies had been found.—[Chicago Weekly Tribune.

Kansas.

THE Herald has often stated that the true and only issue is whether Kansas shall be made a slave State by the force of the bayonet or not. It has also asserted that Fremont, if elected, will veto it if it applies as a slave State; and that the only issue is whether it shall be a free soil State, &c. Now there is just enough in the surface appearance of things to make many good people believe this to be a true statement of the issues in the Presidential election. And yet nothing is in reality further from the truth. The true issue is whether Kansas, or rather the people in Kansas, shall have the inalienable American right to make their own fundamental laws or not—and if, after they have organized themselves into a legal Territorial Government, under the express sanction of the Nebraska and Kansas act, and acknowledged by the proclamation of their Governor, under his express certificate, (and that, too, Gov. Reeder,) whether then a handful of men shall still disturb the public tranquility by again meeting without the sanction of any law, and form what they call a new Government, with the avowed view of overthrowing the Government previously established.

The question is whether an American citizen disfranchises himself by moving upon the public Territories of the Union. The question is not whether Kansas shall be a free or slave State, but whether the freemen and citizens of Kansas shall have the right to make their own organic laws, and form their own government or not? Those who desire to force Congress by legislation, to regulate and govern the people of Kansas on these points, make war upon the fundamental rights of every American citizen. This is eminently so as to Kansas, for Congress by express act in advance invited and induced citizens to emigrate there, upon the basis that they were not to be interfered with by Congress afterward in making or enforcing their own peculiar local laws, or in making an organic law.

Heretofore the practice used to be, for Congress to supervise the laws made by Territorial Legislatures; but in this case they solemnly announced a different principle, and gave their sanction to emigration, with the right to frame even their incipient Territorial laws without supervision. They have thus vested rights under the law. When they assemble in Convention to make a Constitution for State organization and admission, it is clear there is no power in Congress, to the President by veto, to interfere to re-model.

The clause in the Constitution of the United States is simple. "Congress shall have power to admit new States." And this is all. Congress cannot make or form "new States," but after they have made themselves Congress can "admit," and nothing more. This is their whole jurisdiction. The sovereign power to create States belongs alone to the sovereign people. Congress only represents on points defined by compact the enjoined sovereignty of the States; but the sovereign people alone can make States. The making of a State springs from sovereignty, and belongs not to Government. The government that can form or mold, or re-model a State at its discretion, can make it de novo, or destroy it when made. This is the work of revolution when the constitution ends. These are great questions which lie at the foundation of American liberty. There may be confusion and bloodshed in Kansas, but the common sense and conservatism of American society will bring every thing right in time, if let alone by fanatics and demagogues. The people know how to save themselves by the ballot-box. There may be great excitement and apparent revolution—so it was in the case of Michigan, and troops were ordered out from Ohio and Michigan at one time to meet in deadly conflict, on account of a disputed line, when the latter was admitted. Much was said, and great excitement produced when California was admitted Northern emigrants and Northern enterprise then seized upon and settled up that Territory, and molded it into a non-slaveholding State, or rather an empire—under circumstances that looked like fraud and force at the time, and yet we survived it. And now if slaveholders, with the example of California before their eyes, choose to be wide awake and rush into Kansas for settlement, shall we complain? And are we to say it is revolution because American citizens assert their inalienable right to sovereignty—under the express sanction to do so under an open law of Congress? No—our motto is equality to all, and the right of an American citizen to make his own laws everywhere.—[N. Y. Daily News, Sept. 26, 1856.

OBEDIENCE.—People obey willingly where they are commanded kindly.

Occupation of French Women.

DID you ever see a lady play the fiddle, reader? There is certainly no impropriety in the employment. St. Cecelia doubtless had a favorite Straduarins; yet there does seem to be something indefinable bizarre, fantastic, out of place, in fair hands taking up the fiddle and the bow. But if a femenine violinist be a novelty, what would you say to a lady carpenter? Here are some hundreds of them hammering, sawing, chopping away, with tremendous vigor and celerity. These eyes have seen the grandam of eighty polishing off a plank with a plane to a nicety. They have seen a trim damsel of seventeen, with colored handkerchiefs tied coquetishly round her head busily fixing beams and girders, while a great-bearded, bloused man sat majestically by, smoking his pipe, or, if he condescended to interfere in business matters at all, unpacking dolls' houses, or dabbling with a glue-pot. What labor will not French women undertake? They follow the plough, they keep books, they open box-doors, they take tickets at railways, they drag your luggage to the Custom House, they cut your chops and beef-steaks at the butcher's, they dance on the tight-rope and on stilts, they buy old clothes, they keep shooting galleries, they enter lions' dens, they measure you for boots, they shave you.

Chartism Dying Out

AN English paper gives the following picture of the position of the prominent advocates of the People's Charter—the whole Charter, and nothing but the Charter:

"The Chartist cause is in a very disorganized state just now. Many of the leaders have undergone dreadful vicissitudes. Feargus O'Conner died a pauper and insane. John Frost underwent fourteen years' transportion, and is now about to commence lecturing to obtain a livelihood. Dr. M'Donall, one of the most intelligent of the party, was committed to jail, fell in love with the jailor's daughter and married her. Upon his release, being utterly unable to obtain a livelihood, he went to Australia, where he died. His wife and children have returned home, and are now in the workhouse. Bronterre O'Brien is in a state of deep distress. Earnest Jones struggles to carry on the People's Paper, from the columns of which we learn that the whole weekly revenue of the Chartist movement amounts to some six or seven shillings; it once amounted to several hundreds of pounds."

The Visitors from Oude.

THE Queen of Oude held a levee at Southampton recently. On entering the reception-room the two Princes of Oude were seen standing at the farther end, dressed in a magnificent costume. The heir-apparent had on a cloak of scarlet gold. His head-dress consisted of a coronetted-shaped cap of rather large size, the most prominent ornament of which was a string of precious stones projecting from the cap. In his hand he held a scimitar sheathed in a magnificent scabbard. His uncle, the brother of the ex-King, was dressed in a blue and silver cloak, with head-dress of the same materials, and of a fez-like shape. By the side of the heir-apparent were two gigantic Nubian eunuchs and two other officers of state. Two officers of the royal suite stood by the side of the Prince's uncle. Major Bird led each visitor forward, and mentioned the name to the Princess; the visitor bowed and retired to the other end of the room. As soon as the room was full of visitors, the Princes sat down on a sofa, and the visitors on chairs. Amongst the visitors so introdnced were the Earl and Countess of Hardwicke, the three Ladies Yorke, Viscount Royalston, Admiral Aycough and family, Sir George and Lady Pollok, the Mayor, High Sheriff, and some of the Magistrates of Southampton, and a number of the gentry of the town and neighborhood. Soon after 4 o'clock, about 30 ladies of Southampton were admitted into the presence of the ex-Queen. When the visitors entered the apartment, the Queen was sitting on a sofa, attended by eight native ladies, one of whom held over her head a species of fan. Her Majesty was dressed in splendid shawls, but her head, neck, and one arm were uncovered. Her hair was cut rather short, and brushed back over the head a la Chinois. She wore two massive ear-rings, but no other jewelry about her head. Her features bear a striking resemblance to her grandson's the heir-apparent to the Oude throne. She is a stout good-looking personage; is not very dark, and appears younger than she really is. The interview lasted about a quarter of an hour.

Golden Rules of Life.

ALL the air and the exercise in the universe, and the most generous and liberal table, but poorly suffice to maintain the human stamina if we neglect other co-operatives: namely, the obedience to the laws of abstinence, and those of ordinary gratification; or if the fabric we inhabit be imperfect or deranged, or if any of its fine proportions clash with each other. Instinctively, as we acquire a certain knowledge of what is good and bad for us, clear as our perceptions may tell us what we like, and what seemingly suits us, still every man lives to find out to-day, that which he did yesterday was either right or wrong, which at the time of committing he thought was for the best. For instance, we rise with a headache, and we set about puzzling ourselves to know the cause. We then recollect that we had a hard day's fag, or that we feasted over bounteously, or that we stayed up very late; at all events, we incline to find out the fault, and then we call ourselves fools for falling into it. Now this is an occurrence of almost every day happening; and these are the points that run away with the best portion of our life before we find out what is for good or evil. Let any single individual review his past life, how instantaneously the blush will color his cheek, when he thinks of the egregious errors he has unknowingly committed: say unknowingly, because it never occurred to him that they were errors until the effect followed that betrayed the cause. All our sickness and ailments, and our brief life, mainly depend upon ourselves. There are thousands who innocently practise errors day after day, and whose pervading thought is, that everything which is a greeable and pleasing cannot be hurtful. The slothful man loves his bed; the toper his drink, because it throws him into an exhilarative and exquisite mood; the gourmand makes his stomach his god; and the sensualist thinks his delight imperishable. So we go on, and at last we stumble and break down. We then begin to reflect, and the truth stares us in the face, how much we are to blame.

Tea for Sick Horses.

LINSEED TEA is not only a valuable restorative for sick horses, but it is exceedingly useful in diseases of inflamation of the membranes peculiar to the organs of respiration and digestion; it shields and lubricates the same, tranquilizes the irritable state of the parts, and favors healthy action. We have prescribed linseed tea in large quantities during the past month for horses laboring under the prevailing influenza; they seemed to derive much benefit from it, and generally drank it with avidity. Aside from the benefit derived from the action of mucilage and oil, which the seed contains, its nutritive elements are of some account, especially when given to animals laboring under soreness in the organs of deglutition, which incapacitates them from swallowing more solid food. In the event of an animal becoming prostrated by inability to masticate or swallow more food, linseed tea may be resorted to, and in cases of irritable cough the addition of a little honey makes it still more useful. In the latter form it may be given to animals laboring under acute or chronic diseases of the urinary apparatus, more especially of the kidneys.

TO PREPARE LINSEED TEA.—Put a couple of handsfull of the seed into a bucket, and pour a gallon and a half of boiling hot water upon it. Cover it up a short time; then add a couple of quarts of cold water, when it will be fit for use.—[American Vet. Journal.

Why Does a Lamp Smoke?

BECAUSE the points of the jagged edges being easily separated from the wick, load the flame with more carbon than it can consume; and, as the heat of the flame is greatly diminished by those little bits of wicks, it is unable to consume even the usual quantity of smoke. The same is the case when the wick is too high. Why does a glass chimney diminish the smoke of the wick? Because it increases the draught, and so supplies more oxygen to the flame; it also reflects the heat, and so combustion is more perfect, and but little carbon escapes unconsumed.

Our Times.

THE longer we live, and the more we associate with our fellow-beings, the more we are convinced that the plan of Jesus Christ for the redemption of the human family is precisely the means to accomplish that end, and that anything of human invention added thereto is just so much vanity and vexation of spirit. There is no subject to which the attention of men has been so much and so often directed than to that of religion, and no subject withal so little understood. There are some persons in the world who profess to be contented with their religious notions, and who, at times, rejoice in a kind of hope, associated with sighing, groaning, and moaning; but the greater portion of mankind are more often squeamish over the name of religion than otherwise. This feeling does not arise from anything of a repulsive character connected with the principles taught by Christ, but from the maze in which they have been enshrouded for generations, and the acerbity and bitterness with which religion has been discussed by those who have professed to be its ministers and living under its sacred influence. It is impossible for any intelligent person to read the page of ecclesiastical history without feeling that the sacred and holy name of religion has been abused, outraged, and rendered offensive by the many crimes which have been committed in its name by those who have professed to be the most pure and most devoted at its shrine. No man who has intercourse with the masses but what knows that, at the present time, a feeling of aversion to religion is strong, deep-rooted, and every day becoming greater and greater. When interrogated very few persons would avow their aversion to religion, but the fact is nevertheless visible that this generation is absolutely without God in their thoughts, and live and act as independently as if to Him they owed neither being nor continuity of existence. For that class of persons who rejoice in iniquity we never profess to write—we think it labor lost to wet our pen for such; but to those who walk in the ways of darkness, and err from lack of that knowledge which, did they possess, they would rejoice in, we have deep sympathy. The religions of men are shrouded in darkness. For generations men have claimed no light from heaven—they have sought none—they have contented themselves with human wisdom, human inspiration to interpret ancient sacred history, and the result has been confusion, division, and mysticism. Men who have had a more than ordinary share of that perception common to humanity have managed to gain a hearing, spread themselves, and gather around them some less favored, who have almost worshipped them as deities; their words have been written and preserved as the fulness of wisdom and light, and served as the basis for a christian society, an ism, that has been hedged round and round with superstition, to the exclusion of further light and knowledge. Thus men have been bound up by the name of a Luther, a Knox, or a Calvin, for generations. Daring spirits that have ventured, even at the risk of anathemas and the brand of apostacy, to question the limited creed, have in turn, for some supposed better interpretation of the Bible, gathered around them admirers and disciples who have in their turn likewise as sacredly watched and preserved their every word as their fathers had done before to others, and in this manner "old lights" and "new lights" have each their cast iron creeds that know no extension. Each from policy has circumscribed truth, it matters not how obvious, if not in harmony with their rituals and professions of faith; and thus the light of heaven and of experience has been repulsed from their minds, and men have lived enshrouded in the darkness of their own bigotry. Pride and vanity have given to the world, under the name of Jesus, the imaginations of men's minds, till He, the fullness of light and truth has been rejected, and the great and sublime plan of salvation passed by and considered as "a thing of nought," fitted for the darker ages of the world but not for this enlightened age. With these facts, who can be astonished at the wide-spread aversion to religion and the stalwart growth of incredulity?

We thank God for Mormonism—uncircumscribed by creeds, it rejects no truth; pledged to no man, it follows the direction of the Author of salvation; it has saved thousands from incredulity, planted hope in the bosoms of tens of thousands who knew no hope, and caused many a heart, before cold and indifferent, to rejoice in the plan of salvation. Give it a hearing.

Interest attached to Mormonism.

From the Western Standard, August 23.

THIS number of our paper completes the first half year of its existence, and we deem this a fitting opportunity to tender our thanks to our patrons for the kind feelings they have evinced towards us in our undertaking. The numerous expressions of interest in the success of our publication, with the many flattering testimonials that we have received from various sources of its worth and character, have encouraged us very much in the prosecution of our labors; and our desire is that we may never fail in vindicating the truth, or in giving satisfaction to all our readers, so long as we may be called to act in this capacity. Mormonism is rapidly assuming such a position in the earth that every auxiliary which can be brought to aid in diffusing correct ideas in relation to it and its objects, is absolutely needed; and we sanguinely look forward to the day, when Mormon presses will be so numerous that those who have the slightest desire to arrive at correct conclusions in relation to it, can do so with very little difficulty. If we may judge by the operations of the past few years, and the rapid conversion of this powerful engine to its proper and legitimate use, viz: the diffusion of truth, we certainly are warranted in indulging in such a hope. We do not affect to despise the obstacles that we, as a people, have to encounter in bringing about so much-to-be-desired results—we are well aware of their numbers and magnitude; but we have so much confidence in Mormonism, its entire truthfulness, its power to combat and overcome error, and its perfect adaptability to the wants and circumstances of every people, however enlightened or debased they may be, as well as in the Being by whom it is supported, that we can not doubt its ultimate and complete triumph over everything that may oppose. The press has its mission to perform in aiding to consummate this glorious victory—already it has performed much, and much more yet remains for it to perform. Every press that is converted to the dissemination of truth is a host within itself in breaking down the ranks of error. It is an instrument peculiarly adapted, in the work of God, for the wants of the age, in counteracting the influence of the pernicious literature with which the earth is flooded, and spreading the knowledge of that kingdom, which, the prophet informs us should fill the whole earth.

For years, our enemies had every advantage over us; they could publish the most gross and diabolical slanders about us, and we had to submit to them. True, we might deny them and demonstrate their untruthfulness and inconsistency; but our denial and all our remonstrances were comparatively unheard, and we were as though the press was peculiarly an Anti-Mormon engine. That day however—and we thank God for it—is past, and there is no longer any necessity for us to submit tamely and have the lie crammed down our throat, without the power to reject the nauseating dose. We can now meet our enemies on their own ground, with their own weapons, and, with God to defend the right, we have nothing to fear from the contest. Already the potency of Mormonism is being felt, and tacitly acknowledged. On the steamboat, in the car, the stage, or wherever men do congregate, let Mormonism be broached, and all are interested; every one is desirous of hearing every one's ideas on the subject. It is, indeed, the all-absorbing topic of the day, and mankind unwittingly avow it by the continual interest they manifest in relation to it. Here, in San Francisco, where the attention of all has been attracted for the last three months to the Vigilance Committee and their acts, no sooner do they cease to be interesting than Mormonism is immediately taken up as a subject of ever-abiding interest in which all are concerned.

No other religious body of people that have an existence claim a tithe of the attention that we receive; this is palpably evidenced by the fact that one of the great political parties considers us of sufficient importance to make their crusade against us a plank of the platform upon which they expect to ride into favor and power. We are not of the opinion of an individual we have heard about who considered himself honored in being kicked, neither have we any desire to receive honor from such a source; but we do think that the position they have assumed is a more full recognition of the importance of Mormonism than we were looking for at the present time from any party who did not believe it to be what it really is. This has ever been the case in the treatment we have received from the days of its early promulgation up to the present time. When but a bare handful we attracted notice far beyond that which, if we had been judged by our external appearance, we really deserved; and from that time to the present, through every phase of our history, as a petty township, county, counties, and territory, our opponents have shown by their acts that they fully estimated Mormonism as a living, energetic principle that would eventually circumscribe them and all their effete and lifeless systems. This they know intuitively, and they get their knowledge from that being who is ever found opposing truth and purity.

Mail for Utah.

THE Mail leaves Independence for Utah Territory the 1st of every month. Letters should be posted in New York about the 17th, or 18th, to be certain of attaining Independence by the 1st of the succeeding month. Letters must be pre-paid—under half an ounce, three cents.

Judge W. I. Appleby.

ACCORDING to announcement, this gentleman delivered a lecture on Mormonism in our hall on Sunday evening to a very respectable and attentive audience. We were not present ourself, but from what we were informed everything passed off with the accustomed quiet and order, and evidently the lecturer and audience were pretty satisfied with the hour they had passed together. The next morning we were a little surprised to find in the Herald the following:

"DISTURBANCE AT THE MORMON MEETING.—At a meeting held by the Mormons, at Brooks' Assembly Rooms, last night, while Judge Appleby was in the act of defending the leading doctrines of his sect, especially polygamy, a young man, apparently English, rose, and in his excitement, flatly contradicted the elder, by calling out, "You are a liar!" A tumult immediately ensued. The whole audience rose en masse, and certainly would have inflicted summary punishment upon the intruder had he not been forcibly withdrawn by a friend who was with him. The young man, whose name we could not ascertain, stated that he had been at Utah, and found such a den of wickedness and vice as can scarcely be imagined, and, believing the statement of Judge Appleby calculated to lead the unwary astray, made this counter statement, although not in a calm manner. After the offender had been removed, the meeting proceeded, and the speaker took occasion to remark on the persecution suffered by the brethren throughout the world."

The Judge went to the Editor who expressed his regret at the misrepresentation, said the report was handed in with the name of John Stewart, and courteously consented to publish the following refutation which appeared next morning.

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.
NEW YORK, Sept. 29, 1856.

I was very much astonished in seeing an article in the columns of the Herald of this morning, headed "Disturbance at the Mormon meeting," stating that while I was addressing the meeting last evening, at Brooks' Assembly Rooms, on Polygamy, &c., a young man arose and called me a liar, &c. A more wilful and malicious falsehood was never uttered. There was a congregation of some three hundred persons present and listened to the discourse with breathless attention. There was not a word uttered by any one in relation to the doctrine advanced. No one arose in the meeting. There was no tumult, nor signs of any, neither was polygamy mentioned, or the least reference or insinuations made relative to it during my discourse, which was from Rev. chap. 14, v. 6 and 7. All appeared well satisfied, and the meeting throughout was conducted and dismissed in a peaceful and becoming manner. All present will bear testimony to the same. Why is it that nearly every article published in relation to the Mormons must be a tissue of falsehoods and misrepresentations? I pronounce the author of the article a base calumniator and falsifier, and he dare not meet me or the congregation and make the statements contained in his article. You have been basely imposed upon by some one. Justice to yourself, the Mormons and the community requires a correction of the same.

W. I. APPLEBY, of Utah."

We are not at all displeased with this occurrence; it will open the eyes of many and make them more careful in future how they receive reports. Sometimes persons have shewn us reports that professed to set forth with great precision what the Mormons have said and done, somewhere at a distance, which had the appearance of truthful narratives, but a better arranged lie than that of the reported disturbance we despair of finding. We should think John Stewart would be a splendid Utah correspondent for some of our city papers. Don't all speak at once.

California.

THE last news from California is of no particular importance. The Vigilance Committee rooms had been thrown open for public inspection and visited by great crowds of the curious of both sexes, who were all anxiety to see the famous place that had been a terror to evil doers, and, as some allege, not always a praise to them that do well. The Alta California gives a very extended account of the different rooms of the building and their occupation, which give evidence of considerable preparation for the tug of war had it come. The ladies are said to have contributed greatly to their embellishment by the great number of boquets they had showered upon the Vigilants as tokens of their approbation of the hanging and banishing of the last three months. Suicides and murders are still to be found in the summary of news. While the citizens congratulate themselves that "there is not a prisoner in the jail of the county awaiting trial," highway robberies of the most daring character are of daily occurrence in the interior of the State. The labors of the Vigilants have driven loafers, gamblers, robbers and murderers from the city into the country, where they are more desperate than before. Their means of existence being more precarious, it drives them to greater desperation and recklessness. The elections for November are going on briskly, and each of the three candidates are sure to be in the White House! Durkee and Rand, members of the Vigilance Committee, are in the hands of the United States Marshal for capturing, at the orders of the Committee, the United States arms from a small sloop on its way to San Francisco two months since. A petition is in circulation, addressed to the Hon. P. T. Herbert, in which he is informed that he had forfeited his claim and rights as their representative; "that he had deeply injured the fair fame of the State of California, both at home and abroad;" and he was therefore respectfully requested not to make California his future residence. This is followed by a memorial to the House of Representatives, begging them to "no longer permit him to remain a member of their honorable body."

Nicaragua.

BY the last advices from Nicaragua Gen. Walker is reported to have executed a number of his officers and men for insubordination. Dr. Livingston, who was by Walker's friends reported to have been shot by the partizans of Rivas, is still alive. The notorious Col. Schlesslinger turns up at Matagalpa, in the interior of Nicaragua. He publishes an address to the soldiers of Walker's camp, inviting them to desert from the man who had deceived and ruined them all to further his ambitious projects. He calls his old commander—"William Walker, a faithless traitor."

Conference.

THE Philadelphia half-yearly Conference of the Church will be held in that city on the 5th and 6th instant.

The Western Standard.

IN another column we publish an article from this ably conducted paper, in which the editor, after a six months' trial of his strength and resources, speaks with confidence of continuing in the struggle for liberty and the dissemination of true principles. At the establishment of this new organ of the Church we expressed our satisfaction of the specimen copy forwarded to this office, and had sanguine hopes that the youthful editor would render great service to the cause of truth in his new position. We have received regularly from that time to the present copies for ourself and subscribers, and are pleased at being able to say that we have been more than satisfied with the Western Standard. The editor has shown himself to be a man of no ordinary talent, who has gathered around him and on his side of the battle a host of correspondents whose contributions in defence of their principles do honor to their names. We wish it heartily great success and a thousand more subscribers. Who calls in the East?

Hon. George A. Smith.

WE have for some time past been favored with the society of our honorable colleague. He has been with us considerably in this city, and with us has visited several branches of the Church in neighboring States. We have enjoyed much close communion with "Brother George A.," and feel assured that the Saints who have had opportunity of making his acquaintance and enjoying his society have considered themselves blest and favored in becoming acquainted with him. He left on Thursday evening for St. Louis, where he has been expected some time, otherwise the state of his health would have counselled a longer sojourn with us.

C. W. Coward, Esq.

THIS gentleman, who has for some time back been on mission with President Erastus Snow, to the St. Louis Stake, arrived, accompanied by his son William, in this city on Saturday morning and at noon of the same day they left by the steamer Atlantic for Liverpool. We were absent from town and had not the pleasure of seeing Elder C., but we hope to be favored with his company on his return.

President Pierce.

THIS distinguished gentleman left Washington on Tuesday morning for a visit to his native town, Concord, N. H. He arrived here late in the evening, and was met at the station by a small party and conducted to the Astor House, where he was entertained by a few intimate friends. There is no scarcity of drums, fifes, banners, torchlights and squibs in New York, and a little more attention might have been paid to the Chief Magistrate. The hatchet might have been buried for one night at least. He left next morning for Worcester, en route for Concord.

From the Plains.

THE Council Bluffs Bugle of Sept. 16 says: "By recent advices from Col. Babbitt himself, from Ft. Kearney, the report of last week's issue, in regard to the massacre is confirmed. Up to the 1st inst., no news of Mrs. Wilson. The troops had found and captured 3 yoke of Mr. B.'s cattle. Mr. B. had made the distance from Florence to the Fort in 4 1-2 days, and will pass on to Laramie where he hopes to learn more in regard to the massacre by the piratical Cheyennes.

"The Col. speaks in the kindest terms of the conduct of Maj. Wharton, commandant of the post. No care, expense or attention was spared by him or his good lady to make amends to the sufferers in this sad calamity."

Latest from Utah.

ACCOUNTS from Utah represent the Saints as in a very unsaintly earthly condition. Between the drouth and the grasshoppers, which have proved very ruinous to the crops, for the last two seasons, the people are threatened with want. Brigham Young takes time by the forelock, and has exhorted, and ordered the greatest care to be taken of whatever the country may produce. This is right, if he should never again be chargeable with such a thing. The 4th of July was observed in the Territory with some pomp, but it was reserved to the 24th of July, the anniversary of the settlement of the Saints in Deseret, to bring out the full and overflowing feeling of the whole people. Politically nothing has transpired, and the mail, just in, represents the health of the Territory as quite good; and with the exception of a failure of the crops, from causes mentioned, the industrial interests of the country are in a flourishing condition. Whatever else may be said of these people, all must do them the justice to admit that their industry and perseverance has no equal in the country. Already they have all sorts of mills, iron works, &c.—[Missouri Democrat.

Loss of Life in California.

FROM a pamphlet published in San Francisco, we obtain the following information:

Taking a portion of the notices of murders that have been published since 1852, and other evidences that we have on record previous to that time, and since, it will be seen that the number of those who have met an untimely end by murder is truly appalling. The District Attorney of San Francisco, in 1852, stated in a public speech, that for the previous four years twelve hundred murders have been committed in the city of San Francisco. Any one conversant with the history of "The Great Pacific Emporium" since that time, will readily agree that crime has not diminished with the increase of population. It was stated on or near the close of the year 1855, by the public press, that for the year just past five hundred murders had been brought to their notice. The compiler of this work feels perfectly safe in saying that not less than five thousand murders have been committed in California within the last six years. I will also here mention, that from the examination of the old files of daily papers, it appears that the accidental deaths have not been less than in those by murder, for the same time.

With these facts before the public, can we not readily account for the great number of men that have disappeared in California, whose friends and relations cannot obtain the least intelligence from them.

Canadian Correspondence.

WE received the following letter from Mr. Lyman a short time ago, and as he is the brother-in-law of the late Patriarch John Smith, and was his early associate in the Presbyterian Church, in St. Lawrence Co., in this State, we have thought that it might be interesting to many of our readers, and especially to those more intimately connected in a family capacity. It is always gratifying to learn of those with whom we are associated by the ties of consanguinity becoming interested in the principles of truth. We know that it would have afforded very great pleasure to our late venerable Patriarch and his good lady, the sister of Mr. Lyman, and we doubt not but that their families and friends will be equally interested:

ORONO, C. W., Aug. 20, 1856.

DEAR SIR: Your valuable paper continues to come to me, for which I am very thankful. I wish in sending missionaries abroad that we may not be forgotten; an able good man sent into Canada might do much good, for I think that superstition, bigotry and prejudice abounds in this part of the country as much as in any other place in North America. A few faithful laborers sent through British North America, I should think might be a blessing to the people. I have resided in Canada since 1828, although at that time I had not the least idea of stopping more than one year. I never have had an opportunity of hearing but two Mormon preachers, and in them I lost all confidence before I heard them speak. The reason I assign for this was: I had been intimately acquainted with Bro. John Smith ever since 1810; from that time, and after his marriage with my sister, I considered him a man of the strictest integrity. We both became united with the Presbyterian Church on the same day. When I called on the preachers above alluded to, expecting to hear something about Bro. Smith and family that would be gratifying, I was told by one of them, "We do not belong to that class of Mormons; they hold to the plurality doctrine." [We suppose they were Strangites, and not Mormons.—ED.] As I said before, I had always considered John Smith an honest man; but, as I told him when I went to Potadam to see him, before he started for Kirtland, Ohio, he was deluded, and that if Joseph Smith had actually found the manuscript Mormon book, as was represented, it would have been exhibited to the world; for I considered on the authority of the Book of Mormon rested the whole foundation of the so-termed Latter Day Saints, so far as human agency was considered.

Should you write to Bro. Geo. A. Smith, I wish you would say that I am anxious to hear from him as often as I can; that he must not wait for me to write, for my health has been very much impaired for the last two years; that his aunt and his cousins are in pretty good health; that his aunt lives at home; and that my eldest son lives at Colton and my eldest daughter in Vermont. It is gratifying to me to see the account of so many of the Saints emigrating to America. I cannot but view with interest the difference between the emigrants that usually land from Europe, and from accounts that I see of the regularity in the mode of management of the Saints. I should suppose that that very incident ought to satisfy any prejudiced mind that it is the Lord's work. Perhaps, Mr. Taylor, I am trespassing too much upon your time by troubling you with my illiterate scribbling. Truly yours,

RICHARD LYMAN.

SEPT. 13th.—When I wrote the above, I thought perhaps that, if I sent it, it might be an unwelcome epistle; but when I came to see the MORMON to-day, I concluded not only to send what I had written, but add more to it, in hopes that it may reach you before Geo. A. leaves for the Valley, and perhaps he may think it worth his while to come to Canada and see his uncle Dick once more this side of the grave. I do not think of any one I should be more rejoiced to have visit me at this time; and should he come, I think that one of my sons would be inclined to go to Salt Lake with him. At all events I should be anxious to have him come, as my son intends to start in a few days for the far West, and has often stated that he intends to go and see George A. Smith before he returns. Were I not afflicted with the infirmities of age, I should be for emigrating to Utah, I can assure you. I have been highly entertained in perusing your paper from time to time, and I am not a little disappointed when the MORMON fails of reaching me, which is once in a while the case—whether accidental or not, I cannot say. The paper that I got to-day was doubly interesting; it was issued on the 5th; and had I been along and could have participated with you and George A. Smith in your excursion, it would have been highly gratifying to me and perhaps beneficial to my head, which has been very much disordered for the last eight or ten months, with a kind of dizziness. You will perceive by my writing that my hand as well as my head is disordered. Perhaps you may think if we had the Maine Liquor Law in Canada, my head and hand would be more steady, but it is not so; for I have been strictly a strong temperance man for the last six years. I will only add, pray for me and mine, and may God continue to bless and prosper you in the work of the Lord. Yours, &c.,

RICHARD LYMAN.

PRES. JOHN TAYLOR.

Correspondence of Judge Appleby.

THE following letters should have found a place in The Mormon before this, but from the press of other matter that had been on hand some time before.

NEW YORK, Sept. 10, 1856.

PRES. TAYLOR,—Dear Sir: Agreeably with an invitation and previous appointment I left New York last Saturday afternoon, in the cars for Westport, Conn. On my arrival at the depot there, I found our worthy and respected Bro. E. R. Young, waiting with his carriage to convey me to his hospitable home, some two or three miles distant from Westport. After a short but pleasant ride we arrived at his residence, where his interesting and lovely family were waiting to receive us. I met with a hearty welcome and friendly shake of the hands—a reception only known and realized by the Saints of the Most High—bound together by the silken cords of the Gospel of the Son of Peace, for where that reigns, there we meet a brother, a sister, and a friend. After partaking of a bountiful supper, we passed a very agreeable and pleasant evening in conversation on the principles of the Gospel, and plan of salvation which has again been revealed from the Courts of Glory, by the administration of Angels—and in which we were rejoicing, after which we retired to rest, and soon were sunk in the arms of Somnus. After breakfast next morning, Bro. Young conveyed me, together with several members of his family and friends, in his carriage, about seven miles near South Norwalk, to attend a meeting of the Church of Latter Day Saints, and fulfil an appointment that had previously been made for your humble servant to address them in the afternoon in a pleasant grove, on the premises of Mr. William Price, a respectable congregation was present, and good attention paid to the discourse. I was much blessed in delivery, and the spirit of the Son of God rested upon me in mighty force. I bore a faithful testimony to the truth of the work, the mission of Joseph and the organization, &c., of the Kingdom of God now on the earth, many were in tears, and I believe several there will yet obey the truth.

After meeting was over a lady observed that she "had said a great many harsh things against the Mormons, through prejudice created and fostered by the falsehoods continually circulated against them by their enemies, but said she, "I am not going to do it any more, after what I have heard to day." A gentleman also came to me, said he, "I have been much pleased and edified with what I have heard this afternoon, I believe it is truth, and I have made arrangements to convey you next Thursday to see my aged father, who now lies on a bed of sickness, to talk with him and instil into his mind the principles of truth." I informed him I expected to return to New York on the following Tuesday morning, and therefore could not comply with his request, but that Elder Joseph Bouton, who was then present residing in Norwalk, would go with him; to which he cheerfully assented. I hope the lady, father and son, may all embrace the truth and be saved in the Kingdom of God which is now organized on the earth, and whose brilliant and effulgent light, is illuminating all lands in its upward and onward course, rising like the light of the king of day, in the eastern horizon, and in his fiery car travelling in dazzling majesty and splendour, upward to his meridian glory. After the conversation referred to, myself with several of the brethren and sisters were invited by Mr. Price and lady to partake of their hospitality; we cordially accepted the kind invitation and accompanied them to their residence near by, where we were kindly and courteously received and made welcome. After partaking tea with them, we rode to the city of Norwalk—tarried and preached there in the evening in a hall belonging to the Universalists. After which we rode home to Bro. Young's where we arrived about half-past ten o'clock, soon after our arrival the clouds gathered blackness, and it commenced raining, and continued on at intervals all night, and the following day. On Monday I was engaged in writing, &c., and in the evening we had meeting again at Bro. Young's, the spirit of God was in our midst, and we had a refreshing time.

On Tuesday morning I left Bro. Young's, came to Wesport station, and arrived in New York about noon the same day, Bro. Young accompanying me. I enjoyed my visit much, and in meeting with the Saints at South Norwalk (some of whom I baptized some eight or ten years ago) and with Bro. Young the President of Westport Branch, a man endowed with a kind, noble and generous heart, whose soul is in the work—always willing to aid, go, and come, to help build up the Kingdom of God, and for the welfare of his fellowman. His house is always open to make the Elders and Saints of God welcome, together with his interesting family, a place of rest and peace to the servants of the Lord that are on missions travelling through the States, proclaiming the principles of eternal life, and exaltation to a lost and ruined world, may peace and the blessings of heaven be and abide with him and his, and with all the faithful Saints.

On Friday next I leave here to attend a Woods Meeting of the Saints on Cream Ridge, New Jersey, to continue over sabbath, after which I expect to go to Washington city to attend to some business I have with government and contemplate returning in a few days afterwards to New York, when I shall be in readiness to assist you in any department that will conduce to the interest of the Saints, and the building up of the Kingdom of God.

As ever I remain you Brother and true friend.

W. I. APPLEBY.

WASHINGTON City, D. C., Sept. 18, 1856.

PRES. TAYLOR—Dear Sir: I am now, eleven o'clock P. M., in the far famed Metropolis of the United States, seated in my bedroom, with the bright beams of the moon shining in at the windows, by the light of a flickering lamp, have taken up my pen to address a few lines for your valuable and interesting paper, trusting the same will be conducive of good, and for the benefit of the Saints. The busy bustle of life, so apparent through the day here, has long since subsided, calmness, and silence, are scarcely broken, except now and then an occasional omnibus, or carriage rolls over Pennsylvania avenue; fit time for meditation, and reflection and exercising one's thoughts in the stillness of the night; especially, one so beautiful as the present, when nearly all nature are wrapt in slumbering silence, enjoying that repose which the great Creator hath ordained for the creatures of his care; in such seasons I like to write. After leaving New York last friday, afternoon, I arrived the same evening at Bro. Wikoff's on Cream Ridge, New Jersey, where I was kindly received; here I found Elder Cannon, with some Saints that had just arrived from Philadelphia, to attend a wood's meeting of the Saints near by, on the lands of Mr. Charles Hopkins, an old acquaintance of mine, and a gentleman. Meeting had been held in the woods on the day of my arrival by Elder Trecedar, the President of the Branch there, a good, worthy and humble man.

On Saturday morning Bro. Wikoff, conveyed us in his carriage to the meeting ground Elder Cannon addressed the congregation in the forenoon, and I addressed them in the afternoon, and in the evening in the Saints Church at Hornerstown. On Sabbath morning we again assembled Elder Harrison, (having arrived from Philadelphia on Saturday evening,) delivered an excellent discourse, the congregation being very large. In the afternoon I addressed them on the renewal of the covenant and establishment of the everlasting Gospel revealed to Joseph by the angel: text Rev. 14 c. 6 and 7 v. Elder Cannon bore testimony. Breathless attention was paid to our discourses, although the congregation was the largest on Sabbath that I ever saw at a woods meeting, (Camp meetings excepted) estimated at five hundred carriages, and two thousand persons, some estimated them higher still. In the evening I preached again in the Church at Hornerstown. People were present from fifty miles distant that had never heard our Doctrines before, several acknowledged "they had been very much prejudiced against the Mormons on account of the reports circulated concerning them, but now their prejudice was gone, they had heard for themselves, and were astonished at our doctrines and the truth we advanced." Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, Episcopalians, and Quakers, were present, we were treated with marked attention, and respect. I had the pleasure of seeing scores of my old friends and acquaintances, who were pleased to see me—and if I had three months time to spare, I could occupy the whole in filling the numerous invitations tendered me to visit them, but my labor and visits are in the vineyard of my Lord and Master.

I was well pleased with the meeting, the Saints rejoiced in the truth of the gospel, a good spirit prevailed, and the Elders, spoke with ease and influence and in the power of the spirit of the Lord and the Holy Priesthood which they bear, and nobly, and fearlessly, bore testimony to the truths of the gospel revealed, the divine mission of Joseph, and the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth; I believe much good will accrue on account of the meeting, and so desirous were many of hearing us again, that at the particular requests of many. I consented to return there next Sabbath and preach for them in the woods again.

On Monday afternoon, Bro. Wikoff conveyed Elder Cannon and myself in his carriage to Bordentown to meet the cars, on my way to this place where I arrived on Tuesday evening Elder Cannon, stopping at Philadelphia.

Yesterday I was very busily engaged with the Department of the Interior, endeavoring to get my accounts I have against the Government settled up, but of all the places for "going it slow," putting off and procrastinating the settlement of claims, and accounts, the Department here is certainly the most celebrated, I think about the first of next January my accounts with several others will be attended to. Washington is a great place, it is celebrated for some peculiar Institutions, and they are so openly manifest to every observing mind that not to discern, one would have to shut their eyes, especially if they took a walk up Pennsylvania Avenue in the evening. But it is in high life, and upheld and supported by the Honorable ones—at the same time they will cry out "O the immorality of the Mormons," while they are wallowing in the filth and mire of their own venal corruption—surely there is a day coming when virtue and integrity will be rewarded, and may God judge and reward the hypocrites.

I leave here to-morrow morning, and shall expect to be in New York on Tuesday or Wednesday next. Marshal Heywood is here and well; he sends his respects. He expects to leave for Utah in the November mail. As ever I remain yours in the Gospel. W. I. APPLEBY.

The Burning of the Mount Vernon Hotel—Painful Rumor.

THE Philadelphia Inquirer say that they have had an interview with a gentleman who resides at Cape May, who informs them that it is now the general impression there, that Mr. Cain, the father of the Cain family, who were burned up by the destruction of the Mount Vernon Hotel, was murdered and robbed before the hotel was set on fire. The jewelry of all the members of the family was found near the charred remains, but not a dollar of gold or silver coin has been recovered, and there is every reason to believe that there was considerable in their possession. Young Cain, who escaped from the hotel, but was so badly burned that he died soon afterwards, alleged that he saw a man in his room when he left it. The remains of the girls were found near those of the father, and it is inferred, from their peculiar position, that they were also murdered. This portion of the family could not have retired to their rooms, as the contents of their pockets, &c., were found near them.

FOR THE MORMON.

Germany.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

The geographical, political and historical position of Germany is of a very complicated nature, so that not only foreigners, but even natives, unless they are very familiar with geography and history, find sometimes great difficulties in forming a correct idea of that country, the following sketch will therefore perhaps be not uninteresting to the reader.

Germany is situated in the middle of Europe, between the 45 and 55 degrees of northern latitude, and between the 5 and 19 degrees eastern longitude, being 700 miles in length and 520 in breadth. It is bounded on the north by the German Ocean, Denmark and the Baltic; on the south by the French Cantons of Switzerland, Italy and the Adriatic Sea; on the east by Galitzia, the grand duchy of Posen, Russia Poland, Russia Proper and Hungary; on the west by Holland, or the Neitherlands, and France. Germany embraces only those countries in which the German language is spoken, and which belong to the German Confederation. The number of inhabitants is about 30 millions. Germany, or the German Confederation consists of the following states or governments: of the German possessions of Austria; the German parts of the kingdom of Prussia; the kingdoms of Bavaria, Saxony, Hanover and Wuertemberg; the grand duchies of Hessia, Baden, Meeklenburg Schwerin and Strelitz, Electoral Hessia, Grand Ducal and Ducal Houses of Saxony, as Saxe-Weimar, Saxe-Gotha, Saxe-Coburg, Saxe-Meiningen and Saxe-Hildburghausen; Bruuswick and Nassau, the grand-duchies of Holstein-Oldenburg, Anhalt-Dessau, Anhalt-Bernburg, Anhalt-Koethen, Schwarzberg-Sondershausen, Schwarzberg-Rudolphstadt; Hohenzollern-Hechingen, Lichtenstein, Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen; Reuss, elder branch, and Reuss, younger branch, Schaumberg-Lippe, Lippe, and Waldeck; the free cities of the Hanseatic League, Hamburg, Bremen, Lubeck and Frankfort on the Maine. The principal rivers are the Danube, the Rhine, the Elbe, the Oder, the Weser, the Muldau or Moldau, the Moselle, the Maine, the Enns, the Neckar, the Isar and the Inn.

The Danube rises in Switzerland, becomes navigable below the City of Ulm, and runs through Bavaria, where it passes the towns of Ratisbon and Passau at its junction with the Inn; through Upper and Lower Austria, where it passes the Cities of Linz, Ips, Vienna and Wagram, where the famous battle was fought between Napoleon I., Emperor of France, and the Archduke Charles of Austria; through Hungary, where it passes the Cities of Presburg, Waitzen, which latter place is noted for the battle that was fought there in 1849, between Kossuth and the Austrians, Budo or Ofen, and Pesth; through Sclavonia, where it passes the towns of Vukovar, Semlin, Belgrade, the latter place is well fortified, and is noted for the treaty of 1739, by which Hungary was ceded to the House of Habsburg; through Walachia, where it passes the towns of Gladova, Widin, Rahova, etc.; the river at last runs through the southern part of Bessarabia and Moldavia, passes the Cities of Ibrail and Ismail, and discharges in several streams in the Black Sea. The following rivers are the principal tributaries on the right side of the Danube, the Lech, the Isar, the Inn in Bavaria; the Enns in Upper Austria; the Raab, the Drave, the Save in Croatia and Slavonia; on the left side, the Morch or Morava in Moravia; the Waag, the Theiss in Hungary; the Temes in Sclavonia; the Ozerna and Aluta in Wallachia. The course of the Danube up to Waitzen is a south-eastern, from there through Hungary up to Vukovar, a southern, and from there up to the Black Sea, a south-eastern. Although the river has up from Vienna a depth of from 12 to 20 feet, the navigation is dangerous on account of the many sand banks and hidden rocks. A great number of steamers and sailing barks are continually plying between the different towns of that river, and are imparting with their hundreds of passengers, a sene of life and bustle, quite interesting to the beholder. The scenery on each side of the river is in some places strikingly beautiful, inasmuch as the two banks are either dotted with elegant villas, the ground of which are adorned with vases, classical statues and fountains, or with ruins of castles as mementoes of the Feudal times, or scenes of rustic beauty, or wild, rockeries rising out of the midst of green fields or picturesque groves claim the admiring gaze of the traveller.

The Rhine rises on the mountain of St. Gothard in Switzerland, forms a beautiful cataract near Schaffhausen, passes the towns of Basle, Manheim, Koblenz, Cologne, runs through the grandduchy of Baden, the Rhinish Provinces in mostly a northern direction, and discharges in the German Ocean. The principal tributaries of the Rhine are the Maine, the Moselle, the Neckar, and the Aar; the latter runs from the Jura Mountains in a southwestern direction. The Oder, the spring of which is in Moravia, near the small town of Oderberg, passes Rattibor, Kosel, Oppeln, Breslau, Liegnitz, Kuestrin, and Stettin, receives as tributaries the Neisse, the Ohlau, the Wartha, and discharges near Wollin Island, where it forms a gulf, called the Frische Haff, in three streams in the Baltic. Its course is mostly a northern one. The Elbe rises on the Giant Mountains in Bohemia, passes the towns of Koenigsgraetz, Dresden, Hamburg, discharges near Kuxhafen in the German Ocean, and receives as principal tributaries the Moldau, Alster, and the Eger. The Elbe runs from the Giant Mountains in a southern direction up to Koenigsgraetz, then in a western, and at last in a northwestern direction. The Muldau or Moldau, the spring of which is in the Bohemian Forest (the Boehmer Wald) passes Prague, one of the finest and most noted cities of Europe. Its course is mostly a northern one, and it discharges in the Elbe.

The greatest lakes are those of Constance, on the shores of which are situated the towns of Lindau and Bregenz, on the north side of the Vorarle Mountains, in Switzerland, the Bodensee (see signifies late,) in the same country, and the Chilmsee of Bavaria.

The northern part of Germany has generally the character of a flat, even country, but it rises gradually towards the south. The Highlands of Southern Germany form a natural slope for rivers to run towards the ocean. The first range of mountains, in coming from the sea, that is to say, from the north, is the Hartz, about 3000 feet above the level of the ocean; next comes the Vogesian ridge, the Schwartzwald, (the Black Forest,) in a western direction in Baden; the Erz Mountains, the Bohemian Forest, (the Boehmer Wald,) separating Saxony and Bavaria from Bohemia, the Moravian Mountains between Moravia and Bohemia, the Giant Mountains between Silesia and Bohemia; those four ranges of mountains form nearly a regular square, whose centre is a deep valley, in which is situated the Kingdom of Bohemia. The Schneekoppe is the highest point of the Silesian Mountains. Independent of Switzerland, the Saxon, Bohemian, and Silesian Mountains afford a most magnificent scenery, especially about ten miles round Dresden, the capital of the Kingdom of Saxony; the rocks on each side of the river Elbe are wonderful specimens of the denuding agency of water, being cut in all directions into chasms, gorges, and passages, as if mechanical tools had been used to hew them into particular shapes. Some rocks look like perpendicular, gigantic walls, others appear as if two sugar-loaves were put together, the small end of one resting on the small end of the other. From the Bastei, a very romantic rock 600 feet above the bed of the Elbe, the surrounding country appears to the admiring gazer as a vast amphitheatre, huge columnar hills start up at once from the ground, at a considerable distance from each other.

Germany abounds in lead, iron, copper, zinc, galmei, amber, sulphur, arsenic, saltpetre, alum, vitriol, quicksilver and even silver is found. Mines of the above ores or minerals are especially in Upper Silesia, being wrought with great success, in consequence of which a great many foundaries and other establishments for the purpose of working metals have been built. Silver is found to some extent in Upper Silesia, on the estate of Count Henkel, of Donnersmark, the mines, however, are wrought by the government, for which the noble proprietor receives an annual, stipulated rent. Arsenic is extensively found near Reichenbach, a small town in Lower Silesia, and so are, comparatively speaking, ores and minerals found in nearly all parts of Germany. Amber and chalk is mostly confined to the shores of the North Sea, near Ruegen and other places. Germany is said to have more mineral waters than all Europe besides, those of Spa, Pyrmont, Aix-la-Chapelle, Karlsbad, Marienbad, Schlangenbad, Teplitz, Baden-Baden, Reinerz, Salzbrunn and other places are well known, and much used for medical purposes.

The soil is, generally speaking, very fertile, although in some places very sandy, as for instance, in the province of Brandenburg in Prussia, and fit for agricultural and horticultural purposes, as the country yields every kind of grain, fruits and vegetables of the moderate zone. Bavaria, Baden, Silesia, Wuertemberg, etc., have in summer the appearance of beautiful gardens. The highroads or chaussees as they are called, are lined for hundreds of miles with a variety of fruit-trees, of which the weary traveller can take as much as he wants. There is an abundance of fruits, which are not sold by the weight, but by the measure. Vegetables are raised to such an extent, that the gardening products of a small town like Liegnitz in Lower Silesia alone yields an annual clean revenue of $40,000. Shiploads of garden stuffs, and of grain, such as wheat, rye, barley and oats, are exported to England by the way of Hamburg, Bremen and Lubeck. The climate from April to October is very pleasant and temperate, with the exception of a few weeks of intense heat, from the middle of July up to the middle of August, but the autumns are often wet, and the air in winter is cold, piercing and severe. The lakes and rivers abound in fish, the forests are full of game, but in some districts infected with wolves, lynxes, bears, and in the forests of Prussia on the Russian frontier, uri, a species of buffaloes were some 60 years ago very numerous, but now they are mostly exterminated. The name of the town of Auras, in the neighborhood of which those animals were frequently seen, is derived from them. I have to mention here that in the extensive forests of Poland and Russia, the uri are still met with, although they are decreasing very fast.

After having given a brief outline of the geographical and physical position of Germany, I will now give a synopsis of the different kingdoms, states, etc., constituting the same.

The Austrian possessions of Germany contain Upper and Lower Austria; Tyrol, Styria and a part of Silesia. Vienna, the capital, on the Danube, has, including the garrison, about 400,000 inhabitants, is the residence of the Emperor, and the seat of the military, civil and ecclesiastical authorities. Independent of former historical events, as for instance, the war with the Sublime Porte 1589 and 1683, the Congress of 1815, Vienna is noted for its gallant defence under General Messenhauser, commandant of the National Guard, against the army of Prince Windischgraetz in 1849, and became also notorious for the treacherous execution of Robert Blum, delegate of the German National Convent, by the Austrian government in the same year. The Viennese are well known for an honesty and simplicity of their manners, and for their great taste for music. Lanner and Strauss, the celebrated composers, number among their first class citizens. The lover of fine arts and refined pleasures has there an ample opportunity of gratifying his taste. Among the many curiosities and institutions of a literary, scientific and artistical character I mention the museum or pictures gallery of Prince Lichtenstein, containing a choice collection of the most celebrated painters of the world, but especially of the Italian school. The scenery round Vienna represents a picturesque chain of mountains towering up at a distance, of fine woods, country villas, beautiful meadows, hamlets and villages. The romantic forest of the Brigit occupies a prominent place in the lovely panorama of Austria's capital, the delicious walks of which invite to retirements of rural beauty.

The Prater (a park or forest on an island in the Danube), is next the most interesting and romantic place for an enjoyment of rural scenery in the immediate vicinity of the metropolis. The forest which partakes of the character of a large village, has refreshment houses in the Italian, Turkish, Chinese and Swiss style; this and a variety of amusements, the different exhibitions of all kind of toys and curiosities, a train of elegant carriages of every description, the moving multitude with all the comical and interesting characteristics of full-blooded Austrians, the charming music that comes floating in the air from the banks of the Danube, make the Prater a favorite resort not only of the Viennese population, but also of strangers and foreigners.

Departures.—The following Elders, comprising the Australian mission, took passage on the Gen. Wool for Melbourne on the 21st inst.: A. P. Chesly, Joseph Kelly, R. Snow, W. M. Wall, Thos. S. Johnson, G. W. Parish, John C. Whitbeck, Martin P. Crandel, Thadeus Flemming and James Phelps.

Arrivals—Elders John Hyde, Jun., and Alma L. Smith, missionaries to the Sandwich Islands, arrived in this city, the former on the 13th and the latter on the 21st inst., in the enjoyment of good health and spirits.

Eld. Robert Skelton, who left Great Salt Lake City in October, '52 on a mission to the East Indies, arrived in this city on the 20th inst., on his way back to the Mountains. Eld Skelton left Calcutta, East Indies, for Macao on the 5th of May and arrived there on the 19th of June, having touched for a few days at Singapore on the passage. At Macao he remained nine days, and thence took steamer to Hong Kong where he embarked on the Cæsar on the last of June, for San Francisco. Eld. S. is in good health, and appears to enjoy the spirit of his mission.

On Monday last, the 26th inst., we were highly pleased at meeting with Eld. John T Caine, who arrived in this port the evening previous on the Francis Palmer from the Sandwich Islands. Eld. Caine left Great Salt City—having been appointed with a number of others by the General Conference on a mission to the Sandwich Islands—in May, 1854. This mission he has satisfactorily filled and is now returning to the Valley of Deseret. His health appears to be good.

A San Bernardino correspondent writes, Aug. 23: "The Democracy of this county have had a county meeting; at which Messrs. Wandell, Skinner and Boyle were elected Delegates to represent San Bernardino at the Democratic Convention to be held at Sacramento on the 9th of September.

Our schools have entered upon their third quarter of the current year, and are flourishing You may expect Gen. Rich at San Francisco by the 25th of next month. A general time of health prevails."

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

Mr. George Steers, the distinguished American ship builder, met with his death on Thursday last near Calvary Cemetary. Mr. S. was driving to the country for his wife and family, when the horses in his carriages took fright and ran away. In attempting to leap from the carriage his feet got entangled by the reins, and he lighted upon his head, and was dragged on the road for a considerable distance. He died the same evening. He was greatly respected by the community. The Adriatic and Niagara are monuments of his skill and ingenuity that will preserve his name among men of first class talent.

The paper reading portion of Gotham are presently all excitement from the presence of two French swindlers who have taken refuge in the United States within the last three weeks. The parties are the principal cashier of the Northern Railway Company of France, Charles Carpentier, and the sub-cashier of the same company, Louis Grelet. Both have been speculators. The former a prince at the profession, though but twenty-five years of age. The latter has been apprehended, and justifies, or rather assigns as a reason for his conduct, the example of the wealthy who were around him, particularly a Rothschilds, whom he regards as no better than himself, only more fortunate. The amount said to be absent, and laid to their charge, is variously represented, but is somewhere in the neighborhood of from 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 francs. Grelet admits he is guilty of breach of trust, but maintains the money found upon him was his own private property, and that supplied him by friends. Carpentier is still at large; but is closely pursued by a clever London detective, aided by American officers of Justice.

The Rochester Union of Sept. 25th, publishes an account of the seduction of a married lady residing in Port Hope, C. W., by a young man, the friend of the husband, and the shooting of the seducer by the injured lord. There is hope for Port Hope, C. W., if that punishment be persevered in.

On Wednesday evening the carmen of New York and Brooklyn, favorable to the election of Mr. Fillmore, had a grand torchlight procession through the principal streets of the city on Wednesday evening. The Express says there were 3,500 carts in procession, and gives a very spirited report of the whole affair. Whatever may be the opinions of persons on the utility of such demonstrations, one thing may be said, the procession was long and enthusiastic. We hear from many quarters that Fillmore stock is rising considerably.

A distressing accident occurred on the 18th inst., in the coal pit of Logan & Dohram, in Limetown, Washington county, by which two men and a boy were instantly killed, and two others seriously, if not fatally injured. The foul air in the pit, it appears, ignited from some cause or other, while the men were at work within it, and an explosion ensued, which resulted in the death of John Hughes and son, and David Ashcraft. Two brothers, named Samuel and Thomas Hutchinson, were seriously injured, but were taken out alive, and are now in a fair way of recovery. Hughes leaves a wife and several small children to mourn his fate. His little son, who was killed with him, was aged about 11 years, and was a very interesting boy. Ashcraft also leaves a family.

The Democracy of New York had a large turn-out at Poughkeepsie on Wednesday. Several steamers were chartered from the city, and arrangements made with railway companies for the accommodation of the "unterrified," who were expected to assist. Several Senators and distinguished gentlemen in the Democratic ranks were present.

Ex-Governor Floyd, of Virginia, addressed a large concourse of persons from the Exchange steps on Thursday afternoon. His address on this occasion was intended to counterbalance the one delivered last week by Speaker Banks.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

England.—About 10,000 Chartists had a demonstration on the 15th inst., to welcome to the Great Metropolis the pardoned exile John Frost. They assembled in small bands at previously assigned places in different parts of London, met and united in one body at Finsbury Square and proceeded on in procession, singing democratic songs, to Primrose Hill, where Mr. Frost and some leading men of the people did some spouting.

For some months past the very pious have been rejoicing in the success of their movement against military music on Sundays, and the people who enjoyed these first-class gratuitous performances have been as greatly annoyed. A meeting of the British National Sunday League has lately been held in St. Martin's Hall, London, and a resolution adopted that the music in the parks of the metropolis and in the towns of the kingdom, on Sundays, has been productive of great moral good.

The patriotic of Europe, have for some time back, been contributing to furnish the fortress of Alessandria, in Piedmont with a hundred cannons; some reported opposition to the movement by Louis Napoleon has elicited from Signor Manin, ex-President of Venice, that the French government offers no opposition to his receiving in Paris subscriptions for that object—a curious fact.

France.—Prince Adalbert, of Bavaria, with his bride, is visiting the Emperor Napoleon at Biarritz.

The Algerines have had a little affair with the French troops on the 2d inst.

The crops of the French had been gathered, and were heaped up around the village of Dra-el-Mizam, when 6,000 Kabyles came down to burn them. The French had there but a native detachment, one battalion of the 45th regiment, and a squadron of Chasseurs d'Afrique. The natives were put forward in advance, and the regulars remained in concealment. The Kabyles came on furiously and drove back the native contingent, but suddenly found themselves charged with the bayonet by the battalion of infantry. Notwithstanding the superiority of discipline and arms on the side of the French, the great disparity of numbers rendered the contest severe and its result, for a time, doubtful, until the Chasseurs d'Afrique charged finally, with great effect, and the enemy fled. On the 5th the mountaineers came down again, but they had not reckoned on the considerable reinforcements the French had received in the interval, and they were driven back with loss.

It is said that an expedition against the Kabyles will at once take place. Any operations that the French may have contemplated against the Riff pirates, are, for the present, postponed.

The late affair at Neuchatel is the only topic of interest in Europe.

Switzerland.

The Suisse, under date of Berne, Sept. 4, publishes the following:

"This morning the castle and the town of Neuchatel were still in the hands of the insurgents, when suddenly the report was spread that the town was surrounded by Republican troops. The Royalists first thought they had to deal with volunteers from Chaux-de-Fonds, but they were considerably surprised on finding themselves face to face with the patriots of the valley of Travers. 500 men, commanded by Colonel Denzler, had advanced during the night, and as they approached the town they were joined by reinforcements from all directions. They halted near Neuchatel, at the foot of the hills. A sanguinary engagement ensued, but it was soon decided, and the Republican colors were hoisted upon the castle.

"The Royalists lost 12 killed, 50 wounded and more than 100 prisoners. We are not yet aware of the loss on the Republican side. One of the Counts Pourtales was taken prisoner; he is dangerously wounded; his death is even reported. Some of the leaders of the insurrection, including Colonel de Meuron, have escaped. The councillors of State, Piaget, Humbert and Jeanrenaud are prisoners. The Government has resumed its functions, and the Prefect Matthey has returned to Neuchatel. Order is therefore re-established.

"The Federal Council decided to-day that the persons compromised in this affair and guilty of high-treason should be sent for trial before the Federal courts. MM. Amiet, the Procureur-Général, and Duplan Veillon, are charged with the prosecution.

"Although the Royalist insurrection at Neuchatel may be considered at an end, the canton of Neuchatel will nevertheless be occupied by federal troops."

The two following proclamations were issued at Neuchatel:—

"With God for the King and the Country.

"Citizens of Neuchatel,—The hour of deliverance has struck at last. Let the shout of 'Long live the King!' be your rallying cry. Call the faithful to arms. I declare the principality in a state of siege. Each district must immediately provide a committee to assume the authority in the name of the King, and must intimate its assumption of office to the authorities at the Castle of Neuchatel.

"The Commander-in-chief,

"Count Frederick de Pourtales, Colonel."

The second proclamation is as follows:

"La Sagne, Sept. 2.

"Long live the King! The flag of the King floats once more upon the castle of our princes. Citizens of Neuchatel, let us render thanks to Heaven!

"Let the faithful rally round me!

"Lieutenant-Colonel DE MEURON."

The Swiss Federal Council has issued the following circular to the Governments of the different Cantons:

"It is our painful duty to inform you that according to various despatches we have received, the Royalist party in the Canton of Neuchatel made yesterday an armed attack upon the seat of Government, and arrested some of its members.

"Our line of conduct under the circumstances is so clearly traced by the 16th article of the Federal Constitution that we need not hesitate for one moment how to act, we have therefore commissioned our colleagues the Federal Coucillors Fornerod and Frei-Horosee to restore constitutional order in the canton of Neufchatel, using force, if necessary, and to see the constitutional functionaries reinstated.

"We have placed Colonel Bourgeois Doxat at Yverdun at the disposal of the Federal Commissioners as military chief.

"The Cantons of Berne and of Vaud have been requested to provide each two battalions, to be placed under the orders of the Federal Commissioners.

"STAEMPLI, President.

"SCHIESS, Chancellor.

"Berne, Sept 3."

A New Paper.

We are pleased at being able to place on our exchange list, the American Presbyterian—a new paper from the city of Brotherly Love. The copy before us is, in every particular, very creditable, and we wish its conductors all the success they can desire in doing good. Should they only succeed in bringing a few of their cotemporaries—particularly the Evening Bulletin and the United States Gazette and North American, into the habit of speaking the truth occasionally, they will accomplish a mighty work. As the task is onerous, we trust the new paper may be blessed with much patience. We have labored considerably to that end, but are free to confess our faith in their reformation is nothing to boast of. Better success to the American Presbyterian.

The Shakers.

The number of Shaker Societies now in this country is eighteen, located in seven different States. There are none in any foreign country. The denomination was founded through the instrumentality of a female, Ann Lee, who was born in 1736. She was introduced, as she believed, into the spirit world, and received communications from Christ and Moses, from whom she received instructions in regard to the principles of the dispensations which they ushered in. The Shakers hold that there have been four dispensations of God to man—the first beginning with Adam and extending to Abraham; the second extending from Abraham to Jesus; the third from Jesus to Ann Lee; and the fourth from Ann Lee onward. The first society was established in 1792, at Niskayona, near this city.—[Albany Argus.

United States Mails Salt Lake City.

Post Office Department, May 31, 1856.

PROPOSALS for conveying the mails of the United States from the first day of December, 1856, to the 30th day of November, 1860, on the following route, will be received at the Contract Office of this Department until 9 A. M. of the 15th of October, 1856, to be decided the next day, to wit:

No. 8911 From Independence, (Mo.) via Fort Kearney and Fort Laramie, in Nebraska Territory, to Salt-Lake City, in Utah Territory, 1,150 miles and back, once a month.

Leave Independence the first day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Salt Lake City on the last day of the month at 8 a m;

Leave Salt Lake City on the second day of every month at 8 a m;

Arrive at Independence by the last day of the month.

NOTES.

Bidders are required to inform themselves of the actual distance, the weight and bulk of the mails to be carried the whole mail required to be taken each trip,) and all other points essential to a correct understanding of their liability for the proper performance of the required service, before making their proposals, which must be guarantied by two responsible persons, certified to as such by a postmaster or judge of a court of record; and contract must be entered into by the successful bidder, with surety, before the 1st day of December, 1856.

No pay will be made for trips not performed, and for each of such omissions not satisfactorily explained three times the pay of the trip may be deducted. For arrivals so far behind time as to break connexion with depending mails, and not sufficiently excused, one fourth of the compensation for the trip is subject to forfeiture. Fines will be imposed, unless the delinquency be promptly and satisfactorily explained, for neglecting to take the mail from or into a post office; for suffering it to be injured, destroyed, robbed, or lost; and for refusing, after demand, to convey the mail as frequently as the contractor runs, or is concerned in running, vehicles on the route. The Postmaster-General may annul the contract for repeated failures to run agreeably to contract, or for disobeying the post office laws or instructions of the Department. The Post master-General may alter the schedule; he may also order an increase of service by allowing therefor a pro rata increase on the contract pay; he may also curtail or discontinue the service in whole or in part, of pro rata decrease of pay, allowing one month's extra compensation on the amount of service dispensed with. Bids should be addressed to the "Second Assistant Postmaster General," superscribed "Proposals for Salt Lake City Mails."

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immergé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lascivité, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

PARTICULAR NOTICE TO SALT LAKE, SANTA FE, AND CALIFORNIA TRADERS.
HORACE E. DIMICK & CO.'S
GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM,
FOR SHOT GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, BOWIE KNIVES, AND SPORTING APPARATUS of every variety, is at
No. 42 Main Street, St. Louis, Mo., (at the Sign of the Deer in Windows.)
WE are now in receipt of our stock of Goods for the coming season, which enables us to say, that we have now in store, and for sale, the LARGEST and most COMPLETE assortment of Guns, Pistols, Sporting Apparatus, and Goods selected expressly for the arming of wagon trains, for crossing the plains, the markets of Santa Fe, Salt Lake, and Oregon, &c., that can be found in any HOUSE in the WESTERN COUNTRY!
Among the most staple articles now on hand, can be found upwards of 2,000 DOUBLE AND SINGLE SHOT GUNS; 2,500 MUSKETS AND UNITED STATES RIFLES, both new and second-hand, with flint or percussion locks; COLT'S REVOLVERS, of all sizes, ALWAYS on hand, in quantities to satisfy almost any demand, and at EASTERN PRICES. Also, all the most improved patterns of Revolvers and other Pistols now in use.
N. B.—We, the undersigned, being practical men in all matters appertaining to the arming and equipping of Emigrant and Merchant wagon trains for crossing the plains, renders our experience worthy of consultation, to make it the more easy for the emigrant and trader to supply themselves with the necessary articles, viz: FIRE ARMS, FIXED AMUNITION, PROVISIONS AND GROCERIES, of all kinds; Wagons, Tents, Horses, Mules, Oxen; in short, everything necessary for their comfort.
We also beg leave to call the attention of EASTERN HUNTING PARTIES, that wish to spend a few months on the plains, that we have all the necessary arms and equipments, and at prices as low as they can be furnished in any Eastern city.
We keep constantly on hand, (or make to order,) TARGET, HUNTING, and MINNIE RIFLES, which we guarantee to be superior to any in the country.
We also keep constantly on hand the CELEBRATED SHARP'S PATENT RIFLE, which is the safest and most destructive weapon ever invented, for sale at the Manufacturer's prices, for cash.
Please call and examine for yourseles, as it is no trouble for us to answer questions, or show goods.

Let Us Speak of a Man as We Find Him.

SELECTED.

Let us speak of a man as we find him,
And censure alone what we see,
And if a man blame, let's remind him,
That from faults there are none of us free;
If the veil from the heart could be torn,
And the mind could be read on the brow,
There are many we'd pass by with scorn,
Who we're loading with high honors now.

CHORUS.

Let us speak of a man as we find him,
And censure alone what we see,
And if a man blame, let's remind him,
That from faults there are none of us free.

FULL CHORUS.

Let us speak of a man, let us speak of a man,
Let us speak of a man as we find him.

Let us speak of a man as we find him,
And heed not what others may say,
If he's frail, then a kind word may bind him,
When coldness would turn him away,
For the heart must be barren indeed,
Where no bud of repentance doth bloom,
Then pause ere you cause it to bleed,
When a smile or frown hangs it down.

CHORUS.

Let us speak of a man as we find him,
And censure alone what we see,
And if a man blame, let's remind him,
That from faults there are none of us free.

FULL CHORUS.

Let us speak of a man, let us speak of a man,
Let us speak of a man as we find him.

Work for Women.

Scarcely a day passes that we do not receive one or more visits from women who need employment, and too often we are forced, sadly against our feelings, to turn a deaf ear to their supplications for something to do. It seems verry sorrowful to know that there are thousands of willing hands in our city, for which no work can be found, even at the paltry remuneration for which they are content to labor. During one entire week we have been seeking employment for some two or three girls whose position has painfully appealed to our sympathies, and have so far been totally unable to do anything that will render them comfortable and independent through the winter that is coming so fast upon us.

True we have found Jewellers, Engravers Watchmakers willing to receive them as apprentices, but, their board must be paid for a few weeks, until they can be of some service, and they have not the funds that will enable them to do this. All our readers must be aware that hundreds of women are drawn into lives of abandonment for want of employment, by which they may decently and comfortably live. The majority of girls of the middle classes are brought up without trades, and are imperfectly educated, when, therefore, they are thrown upon their own resources, they must necessarily be thriftless and helpless. But two kinds of business are open to them, that of the drudgery of "General Housework," and the poorest, and least profitable kinds of sewing. They are usually physically incompetent to take upon themselves the work of a servant, and must wear their youth and hope away in the monotonous and dreary toil of the needlewoman. We have talked with many such, and found them in every instance anxious to learn some business which would place them above want and temptation. This is a Christian City, we boast of our Philanthropy and Religion, we give largely to foreign missions, to the suffering from flood, fire, famine and pestilence, yet we have no fund upon which we can reckon to save human souls from starvation or perdition.

A very interesting young girl, scarcely more than a child indeed, called upon us a short time since to solicit us to take her to learn type-setting. She had been deprived of her only parent by a sad accident, had not a relative that she knew of in the world, and was destitute of means even to obtain another meal. Her father had designed her for a teacher and was educating her for that position, but his death cut her off from the possibility of completing her studies and threw her helpless upon ther world. She had sought employment for weeks, but though she could obtain a situation as learner at many kinds of business, she could not give the six months required for nothing, and she had come to us with the hope that we might do something to save her from hunger or sin. A gentleman had promised us to teach some young women the art of telegraphing, free of charge, and to find them situations after they had learned, We thought this would do for her, and at once called upon several prominent and wealthy persons, to ask their aid in paying her expenses, until she had acquired a knowledge of the business. The sum needed was but a trifle, yet paltry as it was, probably not more than $25, it could not be obtained. One had given largely to the sufferers by the Inundation in France, another to the sufferers in Kansas. Some had given all they could spare to political parties, one had sent $3000 to the heathens in "Borraboola Gha," China we mean, and had no sympathy or cheer to impart to the heart of ophans and heathens that clustered round his door. This is not as it should be, cannot some fund be raised and placed in the hands of honorable and conscientious men and women for the purpose of aiding those who desire to qualify themselves for something better than needle-women or paupers. We have Rosine and Magdelen Associations as a remedy for vice, why not some society for its prevention? Will not some good angel, some Mira Townsend take the matter in hand and show us what may be done in a christian city to save those that ill paid labor is driving to crime, disease and death.—[Woman's Advocate, Sept. 27.

Foundlings.

A gentleman of our acquaintance informs us that upon one evening last week, while sitting in his door-way, a woman passed along bearing upon her arm a basket. Her manner attracted his attention and he accosted her, and after some difficulty and great embarassement upon her part he discovered that the basket contained a babe. Upon further interrogation she stated that she was going to to leave it at the house of a certain gentleman in the neighborhood, but was finally dissuaded from her purpose, with the advice to call and see him personally.

It may not be known to the public, yet the fact actually exists, that there are hundreds in this city, who, every year bear their burthen in shame or add the crime of murder to it. It is a sad commentary upon the frailty of human nature, and in a city that boasts of its high social refinement, yet this great moral degradation exists. The infanticides that form the subjects of "local items," babes found in cigar boxes, in sewers and sinks or swathed it may be in clean linen, tell a story that is no compliment to the morals of either our city or our race. There are women who hurl their offspring into the Mississippi in the desperation of their shame: children have opened their eyes for the first time within the precincts of the Police Office, whose charities and kind offices mothers have sought as the last and only chance. The establishment of a Foundling Hospital, conducted upon the proper plan, is a matter well worthy the consideration of the philanthropists, and especially the medical profession of our city. In other countries, and particularly in France, a system prevails which, recognizing the frailties of our kind, at the same time prudently provides for them. The Paris correspondent of the Hartford Free Press relates some interesting particulars concerning the Hospitals of France. Situated on the frontier of the great emporium of fashion is a large and well-constructed edifice—the interior is kept exceedingly tidy—the floors of polished oak, and the walls of plaster polished like glass The babes are kept in cradles covered with white drapery and ranged in rows along the rooms.

A separate apartment is allotted to children, affected by eye diseases, and another for sick children, both extremely well arranged. Children are now received into the Hospital only when the parents sign a paper resigning them to the care of the State. If healthy, they are allowed to remain in the Hospital but a very short time, being sent into the country and placed in the care of nurses, who receive one or two dollars a month. After two years of country nursing the children are brought back to Paris and transferred to the Hospital for Orphans. There are on the average 900 in the Hospital, and as many as 15,000 out at nurse in the country. There are 150 Fondling Hospitals in France.

Whenever a woman desires to abandon her child, and she appears before a magistrate for that purpose, it is his duty to warn her of the act, but he is nevertheless obliged to accept the child if she demands it. If she will keep it he is empowered to give her aid. If the child is abandoned, the clothes are saved, or some token is kept, by which to maintain the identity of the child, and to enable the parents to reclaim it, if they wish to do so at any future time. In former times Government made it easy for a mother to rid herself of her child—it being only necessary for her to take the child to the Hospital during the night, place it in a box and ring the bell, when it was at once drawn into the Institution, and no questions asked. This arrangement was abolished some years ago, for the avowed reason that it encouraged vice, but really because such numbers of children were abandoned that the cost to the State was enormous. The crime of infanticide, however, has greatly increased since the change was made.—[Missouri Republican, Aug. 22.

Statistics of Poisoning.

A letter on the sale of poisons, signed "Walter Wilson, Birmingham," appears in the Times. He finds by the Registrar-General's statistics that 536 persons upon an average are annually poisoned—ten in every week, or one in every sixteen hours, irrespective of those who die from the same means (whose true cause of death is only known to those who possess the dreadful secret of murder,) and are registered with those who die from "cause unknown," "sudden death," or by the "visitation of God." "On examination of the books of the General Hospital, Birmingham, I find that 63 cases of poisoning had occurred in eight years, and out of that number arsenic had only been used in three instances. The number of females was 42, and males 21. The deaths out of that number were only 5, making, in round numbers, 1 death to every 12 cases of poisoning. It will not, I think, be unreasonable to infer that the average deaths from poison in proportion to those who have been the subjects of poison will be the same throughout the country—viz., 1 in every 12. According, then, to this computation, we have another important fact, that 6432 persons of all ages annually either takes poison themselves or have it administered to them by others, and almost in every instance avowedly for the purpose of self-destruction or murder by other parties." "In 1831, the number of chemists and druggists in England was 5835, while in 1851 there were 3632 men and 12 women carrying on business under the age of 20 years, and 11,701 men and 298 women of 20 years of age and upwards (exclusive of 15,163 surgeons and apothecaries), making a grand imperial host of 15,643 persons, unrestricted, uncontrolled, and irresponsible, with a stock in trade sufficient to depopulate the whole continent of Europe. The present law for restricting the sale of arsenic was passed in 1851. The average number of deaths annually for three years previous to this enactment was 649, and for the three subsequent years (inclusive of the year 1851) was 523, the deaths being only lessened 26 out of 549. This shows that other poisons are resorted to, and if deaths from poison are to be lessened by an enactment, all those that are available and purchaseable should be purchased with difficulty by those persons who require them otherwise than for legitimate purposes. The interests and general safety of the public demand a judicious restriction."

Good Sense.

Stand up, young sir, pull your hands from your pocket, throw off your coat and take fortune by the throat. You may be thrown again and again, but hang on. Put away the nonsense that the world is all against you. 'Tain't so. Your destiny is in your own strong arm. Wield it like a man! With an unbending will, and honor and truth for a guide, the day is your own.

No capital, ha! You have capital. God has given you perfect health. That is an immense capital to start on. You have youth and strength, all invaluable.

Add a will to do, put your sinews in motion and you will win. A man in full health and strength, should never whine or despair, because fortune does not pour a stream of golden eagles into his pockets. If you have no money, work and get it.—[Cayuga Chief.

Gratitude.—While we retain the power of rendering service, and conferring favors, we seldom experience ingratitude.

You will never have a friend if you must have one without a failing.

The Rag-gatherers of Paris.

The rag-gathers (chiffoniers) of Paris have long possessed a mutual benefit society, and they recently demanded and obtained permission from the police to hold a meeting for the purpose of examining its accounts and revising its statues. The meeting was held a few days ago at a public house bearing the sign of the Vieux Drapeau; in the Quartier St. Marcel. Forty-eight delegates, nominated by the whole of the rag-gathering fraternity, were present, and each of them on entering deposited 20c., which were disbursed in paying for the room and for sundry bottles of vin ordinaire. The senior delegate was pro tem. called to the chair, which was half of a cask turned bottom upwards, and six delegates who knew how to read and five who knew how to write were proposed as candidates for the posts of president and secretary. An election of these two dignitaries having been made, the senior resigned his seat to the elected president. Taking possession of the cask, the latter embraced the senior, and then delivered a speech in which, after expatiating on the honesty of rag-gatherers as a body—proved, he said, by their always giving up anything of value they might happen to find, and by their rarely figuring before the tribunals for robberies or other offences—he gave an account of the operations of the benefit society since the last meeting, and pathetically exhorted his "dear brethren" to be friendly to each other and united. The secretary then read one by one the statutes of the society, which are 52 in number, and asked if any delegate had any alteration to propose in them. Only two were subjected to discussion—the 17th, which provides for the "fraternal division" among the rag-gatherers of particular districts of the heaps of rubbish and filth that may be deposited in them; and the 52d, relative to the contribution to be paid per month to the society, and the amount to be allowed to sick members. The first-mentioned article, after due debate, was modified to the effect that not only should the heaps aforesaid be reserved to the rag-gatherers of the districts, but that on no account should one rag-gatherer presume to encroach on the heap of another; and the second was, on account of the present dearness of food, modified so as to make the monthly contributions of members 50c., instead of 25c., and the daily allowance to the sick 60c., instead of 30c. The statutes having been formally approved, a resolution adopted in previous meetings, declaring that the eldest member of the rag-gathering fraternity, one S—, aged 85, called "the General," should for the rest of his life be freed from any monthly payments to the society, but should enjoy all its advantages, that he should besides be allowed 250 grammes of tobacco a month, should have a seat of honor at all meetings and banquets, and should at the latter be entertained gratis, was passed unanimously with loud applause. The treasurer was then called on to produce his accounts and cash. The accounts having been examined were declared correct, and the balance in hand, which consisted of 77f. 95c., and was deposited in an earthen pot, was counted, and was also found exact. The delegates then removed to a public house called the Pot Tricolor, at the Barrier de Fontainebleau, where a banquet was provided for them. This place has always been the grand rendezvous of the rag-gathering fraternity, and formerly it was divided into three parts—one, called the "Chamber of Peers," for the elite of the calling—that is, those who possessed a good basket, a good lantern, and a crochet with the handle ornamented in copper; the second, called the "Chamber of Deputies," for those who possessed such things of an inferior quality or in a dilapidated state; and the third, which was called the "Saloon of the True Proletaires," for the "lower orders," who had neither basket, nor lantern, nor crochet, and who consequently, were obliged to pick up rags with their fingers, and carry them in bags. But on the present occasion it was determined that, in accordance with the progress of democratic ideas of late years, and as a mark of friendly feeling, all distinctions of rank should be broken down, and that the aristocracy, middle class, and lower orders of the profession should meet at the same table. The chairman, on taking the chair, proposed that henceforth this determination should be rigorously adhered to as a fundamental rule of the rag-gathering community, and his proposition was adopted with acclamations. The guests then proceeded to attack the good things provided for them. The dish of honor was a gigantic olla podrida; the wine was ordinaire, and was contained in a high earthen jug called the Petit Pere, which was constantly being replenished from a cask called the Mauric aud; and the dessert was composed of the strong cheese Girarme, of radishes, and of a petit verre of a horrible sort of brandy. The banquet was very gay; and at the dessert several toasts were drunk—one of them to "the press," which, said the president, enlightened the world, and, by its large consumption of paper, caused rag-gatherers to live. A collection made for the poor closed the banquet; it amounted to 9f. 75c. At former gatherings the utensils of the table were chained to it, but on this occasion they were left free. The guests, however, were required to deposit the value of them, and when they gave them up on leaving the deposit was restored.

Receipt for Making German Yeast.

The following is the receipt for making what hitherto has been strictly "German Yeast:"

"Take brewery, or, by preference, distillery yeast, and filter this through a muslin or silk sieve into a tub or vat containing about four or five times the quantity of soft or cold spring water. The water must be as cold as possible, and in summer ice should be dissolved in it. As soon as the liquid yeast comes into the water the whole must be well stirred up (in preference with a broom) until it is thoroughly mixed, and has a good foam or light head; then leave it until quite settled and the water becomes clear; then draw the surface water gently off, so as not to disturb the settled substance.

"The tub should have cocks at different heights to allow the water to be drawn off gently by opening the highest cocks first. This done, you again pump the tub full of cold water, and stir it up again; let it settle, and draw off as before, and repeat this operation until the water becomes tasteless and clear—that is, till the water has cleansed the yeast of all bitterness.

"Then add to the settled substance, for every 12 gallons of yeast employed at the commencement, half-an-ounce of carbonate of ammonia, and one ounce of bicarbonate of soda, which should be previously dissolved in a pint of cold water; mix this liquid with the pruified yeast, and leave it in this state for the night, or 12 or 14 hours.

"Then pump cold water again into your tub, stir it well up as before, and when settled draw it off, which concludes the purifying process.

"This done, the yeast in its settled state must be emptied into a clean bag, tied up, and placed between two boards large enough to cover the bag, which is intended to press the liquid substance out, which must be done as gently as possible, so that the substance becomes gradually freed from water and forms itself into a substance similar to bread-paste or dough, which can then be formed to size and weight as needed. In Austria the weight is something near 1lb. when dry, in square forms and about one inch thick.

"The whole process should be conducted in a very cool place, and when once the pressed yeast has become moistly dry it should be kept in a cool place, as otherwise the yeasting process will begin; whereas, kept in a cool place, it will keep from eight to ten days in summer, and from 10 to 15 in winter, but not longer in Austria."

Spicy Dialogue.—Emma—My dear friend that woman has been talking about you so again! She has been telling the awfullest stories you ever heard; why, she railed away at you for a whole hour!

Julia—And you heard it all, did you?

Emma—Yes.

Julia—Well after this you bear in mind that it takes two to make a slander—one to tell it, and one to listen to it.

A Man Starving Himself to Death by the Direction of Spirits.

The Dayton (O.) Gazette details a very remarkable instance of monomania, which has just been terminated in that city in the case of the Rev. Joshua Upson a Universalist clergyman, who died at 12 o'clock last Sunday night. He has lived in an almost skeleton condition abstaining from nourishment for fifteen, twenty and even thirty days in succession. He has maintained and believed that he did this under the direction of "the spirits," who promised, by this course of discipline, to develope him into a more extraordinary "medium" than has hitherto been known. He lived under the impression that hundreds of disembodied spirits were constantly talking with him directing him, encouraging, rebuking him, prescribing what he should eat, what he should say, fortelling every day the least change in his physical condition, and punishing him severely when he refused to act in accordance with their directions. The Gazette says:

"Professedly by their information, he pointed out with singular accuracy many of the symptoms that would manifest themselves in his own case, sometimes for weeks before they actually occurred. With limbs hardly larger than an infant's, unable to rise from his bed, and frequently suffering exquisite tortures; yet supported as he said by the 'spirits,' he exhibited the most extraordinary hope, cheerfulness and and enthusiasm. The 'spirits' continually signified to him that he should recover to fulfill his mission; to afford a wonderful specimen of a spiritually developed man, and to proclaim the truth to a world sunk in doubt and unbelief. In this the 'spirits' were mistaken, but there is not the slightest reason to doubt Mr. Upson's sincerity. Though the victim of what seems to us a delusion, he was, we have reason to believe, an honest and good man."

Where the Emigrants go to.

The following table gives the destination of the emigrants who arrived at this port from the 1st of September, 1855, to the 30th of July, 1856. It was prepared for the Committee on Public Lands of the House of Representatives, by the person in charge of the Castle Garden depot. The figures are interesting as showing the States emigrants generally prefer:—

Destination.	Emigrants.	Cash.
Fifteen slave States and D.C.	3,256	$194,888 01
Six New England States	8,134	121,523 73
New York	39,943	1,291,628 09
New Jersey	2,272	214,955 79
Pennsylvania	9,421	546,033 78
Ohio	6,117	479,633 99
Indiana	1,369	101,861 63
Illinois	7,713	698,456 31
Michigan	2,889	179,300 86
Wisconsin	10,457	1,045,661 38
Iowa	1,855	248,335 40
California	806	165,125 13
Kansas	9	128 00
Minnesota	805	35,166 00
Utah	1,829	55,670 93
Oregon	1	10 00
Totals	105,797	$5,398,369 54
To slave states	3,256	194,888 01
To Free States	102,451	$5,203,481 53

This table shows what a large excess of the emigrants remain in the free States; but the few who find their way to the South appear to have more money than the free State settlers. The large emigration to this State must be taken with some grains of allowance. Many emigrants have not determined where they will finally settle when they land, and remain in this city until they get posted as to favorable localities. Another point is, that hereafter when estimates are made of the amount of money brought to this city, it must be borne in mind that an emigration of 100,000 will bring nine to ten millions of dollars into the country, for it is notorious that emigrants conceal their real wealth, for fear of robbery or extortion.—[Herald.

The Microscope and Telescope Compared

The late Dr. Chalmers, Professor of Theology in the University of Edinburgh, thus contrasts the relative powers of these two instruments:

"The one reveals to me a system in every star; the other, a world in every atom. By the one I am led to believe that this great globe itself, with all the mighty burden of its oceans and continents, is but as a single grain of sand on the high fields of immensity; the other teaches me that every grain of sand may harbor the tribes and families of a busy population. The one tells me of the insignificance of the world I tread upon, the other redeems it from all insignificance, for it tells me that on the leaves of every forest, in the flowers of every garden and in the waters of every rivulet there are worlds teeming with life, and numberless as are the glories of the firmament. The one suggests that far and beyond all that the telescope has yet revealed, there may be fields of creation which sweep immeasurably along, and carry the impress of the Almighty's hand to the remotest shores of the universe. The other intimates that within and beneath all that minuteness disclosed by the microscope, there may be a region of invisibles, that could we draw aside the mysterious curtain that shrouds it from our senses, we should see there a theatre of as many wonders as astronomy has unfolded; a universe within the compass of a point, where the wonder working God could raise another mechanism of worlds, and fill and animate them all with the evidences of his glory."

A Yankee Gun.

The English tell some large stories, and justly too, about their heavy ordnance. An American gentleman, who was listening in a London coffee house to a description of one of these monsters, said abruptly—"Pooh! gentleman; I won't deny that's a fair-sized cannon; but you are a leetle mistaken in supposing it to be the largest in the world. It's not to be named in the same minute with one of our Yankee cannon that I saw in Charleston last year. Jupiter! that was a cannon! Why, gentlemen, it was so large that the sailors had to employ two yoke of oxen to draw in the ball." "The deauce they were!" exclaimed one of his hearers, with a smile of triumph. "Pray, can you tell me how they got the oxen out again!" "Why, my dear, sir," said the Yankee, "they unyoked 'em, and drove 'em up through the vent hole!"

Hurry.

No things differ more than Hurry or Despatch. Hurry is the mark of a weak mind, Despatch of a strong one. A weak man in office, like a squirrel in a cage, is laboring eternally, but to no purpose, and in constant motion without getting on a jot; like a Turnstile, he is in everybody's way, but stops nobody; he talks a great deal, but says very little; looks into every thing, yet sees into nothing; and has a hundred Irons in the fire, but very few of them are hot, and with these few that are, he only burns his Fingers.

Mont Blanc.

The first ascent of Mont. Blanc was accomplished in 1741 by Richard Pocock, an Englishman. Of 88 persons who have since that time reached the summit, 57 were English, Irish or Scotch; 12 French; 6 citizens of the Sardinian States; 5 Americans: 3 Swiss; 2 Poles; 1 Neapolitan; 1 Russian; 1 Swede. Three of those were ladies."

It is related of a certain New England divine who flourished not many years ago, and whose matrimonial relations are supposed not to have been of the most agreeable kind, that one Sabbath morning, while reading to his congregation the parable in Luke xiv., in which occurs the passage, "And another said I have bought five yoke of oxen, I go to prove them, I pray thee have me excused; and another said, I have maried a wife, and therefore cannot come;" he suddenly paused at the end of the verse, drew off his spectacles, and looking around on his hearers, said, with emphasis, "The fact is my brethren, one woman can draw a man farther from Heaven than five yoke of oxen."

"Why," said a country clergyman to one of his flock, "do you always sleep in your pew when I am in the pulpit, while you are all attention to every stranger I invite?" "Because, Sir, when you preach, I'm sure all's right; but I can't trust a stranger without keeping a good look out."

Extraordinary Freak of Nature.—Mary, a negro woman, belonging to Dr. John H. Hundley, near Mooresville, Ala., gave birth on the 10th inst, to three living infants, two whites and one black. It will puzzle the medical fraternity to account for this singular event.—[Augusta Sentinel.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, OCT. 11, 1856.

A Visit to Philadelphia.

A FEW weeks since we intimated through THE MORMON our intention of visiting the City of Penn, but at the moment appointed for our departure we were unexpectedly favored with a visit from Mr. James Taylor, of Toronto, Canada, our own brother, and his eldest daughter. We had not seen him for nearly twenty years—a long and deeply interesting period of time to us; one in which we had passed through many trying scenes for religion's sake, and one likewise in which we have had much cause to rejoice. From inclination and courtesy, therefore, we deferred our visit, till a more convenient season, to enjoy his society. After passing two weeks with us, he left with an understanding of those principles to which we had devoted our life, and the duties of which had for so many years prevented us from meeting. Since then we have been busily and closely confined to the labors of the pen for church history, and for a change was not at all disinclined to accept a kindly invitation to attend the semi-annual Conference of the Church at Philadelphia. Accompanied by Judge Wm. I. Appleby and Elder T. B. H. Stenhouse, we left this city on Saturday at mid-day, and arrived, safe and sound—no small favor in these days of accident—in the evening at the City of Brotherly Love, where we met President A. M. Cannon and other brethren ready to bid us welcome. Our sayings and doings at Council and Conference will be found in other columns; but we take the opportunity of saying a little about our visit. We were well pleased with the progress of the principles of Truth in the district of country represented at Conference, and are no less so in the progress the Saints are making in the understanding of the principles of God's kingdom and their responsibility and relationship thereto. The members of the Church are awakening up everywhere to realize the duties and obligations of membership in this great cause, and are becoming more stable and reliable. Everything has its time. On the first dawn of Truth the principles of light and salvation have to struggle with the accumulated traditions of ages that have in some measure a place in every mind. Many men do wrong, or act imperfectly, not so much from want of will to do right as from the lack of understanding. Books and sermons are in their place good enough, but there is no education to equal the hard facts of experience. That is the potent teacher: there is no mistaking its lessons, however much we may neglect to profit by them. The Saints realize more and more that the Tabernacles and Temples of modern Israel are no less tangible things than those of ancient Israel, and require no less application of mind and sinew to rear the former than it took to rear the latter. They know by their every day experience that all they accomplish well requires time, careful application, and means to work with, and thus are they insensibly taught that all that is done in the kingdom requires the same; and when they are by some wise dispensation of Providence placed in one position or another it changeth not their responsibilities to keep building up. The Elder who travels to preach is building up the kingdom, and if called in from mission to follow another occupation his obligations change not—he is still building up. The readiness with which the Utonians leave home for the distant nations of the earth, or for home missions, teaching the Indians domestic and frugal habits, is a powerful lesson to the scattered Saints. They are beginning to see and understand that position or country is nothing; that the motto of the wise is all the time—"diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord;" and whatever we do, do it with an eye single to the glory of God. It was pleasing to us to witness the unanimity of feeling in the Priesthood at Conference, and the attention and interest of the Saints to the instructions of their teachers.

We spent a very happy day with the Saints last Sunday, and we believe that all enjoyed themselves at Conference, felt refreshed, and renewed their determination to greater diligence and faithfulness. Elder Cannon, the presiding officer, though a young man, seems generally beloved and respected by those over whom he presides. We are pleased to see brethren living together in unity: the rich blessings of Heaven will distil upon them in their councils and deliberations like the dew of heaven upon the tender herb. The unity among the Saints is the legitimate offspring of the unity of the Priesthood, and while that is visible not only those within the fold but those who are without will feel its influence, and be drawn to bend the knee to their Great Creator.

The Elders who had come from a distance stayed over Monday, visiting the Saints, and, we believe, were kindly and attentively received and ministered to by those visited. We returned on Tuesday, well pleased with our visit.

Advantages of Location.

FROM the organization of the Church upon the fertile fields of Ohio to its expulsion from the rich prairies of Illinois, the Saints temporarily gathered in regions highly desirable for soil, climate, timber, approach and the various facilities for easy and readily forming numerous, compact and wealthy settlements. But amid all these natural advantages, closely encircled by hosts of the wicked coveting the fruits of others' labors, what was invariably the result? Those who became weary in well doing banded together for the overthrow of the righteous, lusted after the possessions of those whose brethren they had been, struck hands and plotted with the reckless, laying their evil deeds at the doors of the innocent, and invited kindred spirits from far and near to the feast of plundering, burning, mobbing and killing. Assailed by apostates within and enemies from without, and finding no protection in the laws of the land, which they had never broken, the upright were repeatedly and successively constrained to abandon their loved homes and the accumulated comforts of their toil, until they found an asylum in the fastnesses of the mountains.

The wicked are rapidly increasing in their settled and deadly hatred to the truths of Heaven; the priests of Baal are accusing their hearers with indifference to their teachings; the hearers retort with allegations of inefficiency in the priests; (and both are right, for, "as with the priests so with the people;") the editors, not knowing what is the matter, pitch into both priests and people, and the adversary, fully aware of the shortness of his time, is stirring them up and all together, with a view to again banish the gospel and priesthood from the earth.

With such an extensive and fierce array, how is it to be accounted for that the Saints here have remained unmolested so long? Simply because they are a thousand miles from those who seek their destruction, in a region where the scanty timber is closely locked in rock-bound safes too formidable for Gentile skill and perseverance at so small a remuneration; where the few small and scattered spots suitable for cultivation have to be irrigated with much care and labor, and at great expense, by building dams and making long canals together and conduct the tiny streams, scantily fed by mountain snows, upon the vegetation parching beneath burning suns; and where, when human skill and labor have done all that time would permit, drouth and the devores so often cut off the expectations of the husbandman.

As has been frequently observed, and as all passers-through well know, Deseret is not desirable by the Gentiles for settlement; and as oil and water will not mix, so the violent possession by Gentiles of the buildings and farms now gladdening these wastes must needs be through their abandonment by the present owners, which would speedily cause their reversion to their elementary condition, and their evacuation by all Gentiles, for they will not labor where the toil is so constant and excessive, and the return therefrom so slight and uncertain. That such are and would be the facts depends not alone upon the testimony of our nine years experience here, nor upon that of Gentile eye-witnesses, but as well upon the heretofore nearly unprecedented conduct of the few who have apostatized in Utah.

Formerly such characters almost invariably continued to hang round our settlements, waiting to join the onslaught, and notified and invited their friends from a distance to participate in the feast of burning and abandoned dwellings, of vacated fields, sacrificed property, the tears of outraged innocence and the blood of martyrs, so fiendishly spread by ruthless mobs. Now they no sooner become disaffected than they prepare to leave, and will steal an outfit rather than tarry where a livelihood is so hardly obtained, and where the flesh pots and corruptions of Egypt are so empty and unpopular. Instead of seeking the center, as formerly, the acum of the boiling pot, owing to the altitude and forbidding appearance of the vessel, now floats off, affording the contents an opportunity to become clarified and fitted for appropriate use.

And if apostates here, who are tenfold more the servants of the devil than at first, will not tarry and harrass, as has been their custom, how can it be expected that Lucifer can induce his servants, even though aided by all the priests and many of the editors, to leave their families and pleasant homes and endure a dreary march of over a thousand miles, solely for the purpose of expelling a righteous people from houses and lands which the ungodly could not be persuaded to occupy, even for a brief period? At present that is too uninviting a task. This then is a most excellent abiding place for Saints, because it contains nothing covetable by the Gentiles, nor even by apostates.

Such being SOME OF THE FACTS in the case, and the country's being settled by those who love order, delight in justice and in doing good to all men; by those who have partially tamed rocks and deserts that others would not and will not cope with; and by those who are most loyal to the Constitution of our Government and determined to obey the commandments of the Most High, how can there arise the least disaffection at home, or the slightest opposition abroad? Upon no principle save that of darkness in minds once enlightened, and from the fact that the nations of the earth, with all their boasted enlightenment and progress, are bound fast in the strong fetters of satan, and are scoffing in the spacious mansion of worldly pleasures at the few who cling fast to that rod of iron which leadeth to the tree of life.[—Deseret News, Aug. 13.

Utah.

WE have this week received the Deseret News for August, together with letters from different parts of the Territory. We are pleased at being able to publish President Woodruff's cheering letter. After long months of hard toil and short rations, the doubtful harvest at length surpasses expectation. The News contains an account of the celebration of the Twenty-fourth of July in the different cities, which were evidently got up in first-rate style, and as usual passed off harmoniously, and with great rejoicing. We publish a report of a Literary and Musical Festival at Great Salt Lake City, which, while it shows the character of their rational and refining enjoyment, will no doubt suggest to some favored by nature with peculiar gifts for taking part on such occasions that they need not fear getting rusty the other side of the plains. Strange folks these "Salt Lakers;" at the time every outsider is talking about them being scared to death by grasshoppers and crickets, they are singing and dancing as if nothing had happened. It is good to be a Mormon.

From the columns of the News we publish the arrival of the first of the emigrants from the East. By private correspondence we were pleased to learn that Elder Alexander Robbins, formerly of this office, and Dr. Clinton, had arrived in good health.

The Indians in Oregon.

THE Herald publishes a letter from Oregon in which the annonymous writer states that the Walla-Walla Indians were wending their way to Mormon settlements where, says he, "they would receive a hearty welcome, and be supplied with arms and ammunition. Would the Herald just invite that correspondent to look at the first map he can find, of the Territory of the United States, and he will learn that his lie has not the slightest appearance of truth to enable it to pass. The Indians referred to are in the extreme north of Oregon, and Mormon settlements are about 700 or 800 miles distant. The Mormons have always been going to do prodigious things! To do the thousandth part of what their enemies have "blocked" out for them would require generations. The Herald for its own sake might look a little to the ruling passion of some of its correspondents.

Information Wanted.

EVAN EVANS, near Bluff City, Iowa, late of Argoed, Wales, wishes to know the whereabouts of JOHN PASCO, late of Argoed, Wales, who emigrated in the ship Caravan to America, and also of JEREMIAH JEREMIAH, who emigrated in the same ship, on the 19th of February.

Nicaragua.

BY the arrival of the steamship Tennessee, there is more news of fighting. Walker having heard of a party of men, adverse to his government, occupying a ranche at Jan Jacinto ordered a party to attack and drive them. Lieut. Col. McDonald who commanded returned without accomplishing the task with a loss of six men killed and wounded. Another larger party of citizen volunteers attempted to drive them without success likewise, and at a loss of fifteen killed, wounded and missing: among the latter the three leading officers. At latest advices Walker was about to despatch a body of artillery.

The New York Daily News.

SINCE the election campaign commenced this paper has taken an important position in the struggle, and has secured the pens of some highly talented writers. It has daily shown accumulating resources of men and matter, till it has been forced to enlarge its size to suit the increasing demand. On the 1st of October it presented itself to the public in a highly creditable appearance. The Democracy has a warm and talented advocate in the Daily News.

Arrivals.

Elder Philemon C. Merrill, from his mission to England, reached this city on the 13th inst. He came in a little in advance of his company, for the purpose of making preparations for camping, herding stock, &c. Elder Merrill reported the company in excellent health and spirits.

On the 15th, Elder Samuel A. Woolley, from his mission to Hindoston, and Dr. Jeter Clinton, from his mission in the States, arrived from the same company; and on the 16th several more of the company rolled on to the public square in the 17th Ward, among whom were Elders Enoch B. Tripp, Elisha Edwards and Edwin Whiting, from their mission in the States.

The remainder of the company arrived on the 18th. The missionaries seemed much rejoiced with the privilege of again greeting their families and friends in the mountains, and of participating in the blessings which only Saints enjoy.

Elders Whiting and Edwards, with highly commendable forethought and care, brought several grafts from the choice varieties of apple trees in the Western Reserve, Ohio.

Minutes

Of a Council and Half-Yearly Conference of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints"—held at Philadelphia October 4th and 5th, 1856.

ACCORDING to appointment, the Priesthood of the Philadelphia District met in Council at Andress & Bro.'s Hall, Eighth street, Philadelphia on Saturday evening, April 4th, 1856. President John Taylor presiding. The meeting was called to order by Elder Angus M. Cannon—Hymn, "Come all ye sons of God," was sung. Prayer by Prest. Taylor. After singing another hymn, Prest. Taylor arose and expressed his satisfaction at having again an opportunity of meeting the Priesthood, and spoke as follows: "Brethren, it ever affords me much pleasure in meeting with those who love truth and are desirous of keeping the commandments of God. I rejoice with you in being a member of the kingdom of the Most High, and would not change my position, for the highest authority that mortal man can hold in the nations of the earth. Presidents, Kings, and Emperors hold but a temporary power, a power that the people dispute; but those who are faithful in the Kingdom of God are destined to be undisputed rulers throughout time and eternity. It is the will and order of Heaven that men should be prepared for authority and possessions before they receive them. They must, therefore, be tried to give them a perfect knowledge of their weakness, and a knowledge of the means by which they may become strong and qualified at a future time to discharge the multiplied duties which faithful, honest, humble and upright men are destined to fulfil; therefore said Christ, "He that is faithful over little shall be made ruler over much." No man is faithful or can ever rule in God's Kingdom unless he has consecrated himself to build it up: none other can hope to hear: "Well done good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord." I rejoice, therefore, brethren, to know that you are doing your best to carry out the instructions you receive through your President. Let us continue in well doing, and the Lord will bless us, and gradually prepare us for future usefulness.

"I now wish to ascertain your feelings towards Elder Cannon. Previous to the departure of your late President, Elder Jeter Clinton, I asked whom he could place as his successor, upon which he recommended Bro. Cannon. As he is my nephew I think it right to remark that previous to this I had not the slightest intention of placing him in that position, as I feared it would require a man of riper years and experience, but as he was recommended by Bro. Clinton I concluded to sanction his appointment for the time being. It is my desire that every man should show himself—and rise by his own capacities and labors, and I never wish a relative of mine to be placed in any position because of that relationship. You can now speak freely your sentiments concerning him."

On resuming his seat the brethren gave testimony to the faithfulness of Elder Cannon, and manifested—that their united desires were that his appointment be confirmed. Prest. Taylor called for any who might have contrary sentiments to speak. None existing, it was moved, seconded and unanimously carried, that Elder Angus M. Cannon preside over the Churches in the Philadelphia District.

Elder Cannon returned thanks for the manifestation of kindly feeling towards him, and said he should endeavor to discharge his duties in the future as he had labored to do in the past, and trusted that the blessing of the Lord would crown with success their efforts to build up his Kingdom.

A representation of the different branches of the Churches was given by the delegates sent to Conference, which was very satisfactory. Upwards of sixty persons having been added to the Church by baptism, and the prospect of extending the Work of the Lord being very encouraging.

President Cannon said he was pleased at being able to state that the present position of the Branches of the Church was indeed very good. The greater portion of the Saints had renewed their covenants, and were desirous of carrying out the instructions of the Priesthood.

President Taylor said he intended that Elder Appleby should visit the Churches in the eastern States; he should, therefore, during the Conference give him an appointment to that effect. After making a few remarks on the publication of THE MORMON at New York, he introduced Elder Appleby, who spoke of the position of President Taylor in relation to that paper. He said: Brethren, I rejoice to meet with Elder Taylor in the East with such a paper, through which he can speak to the Saints and the world. THE MORMON is a glorious organ of the Church, a blessing to the Saints, a defence of their rights, a fearless exponent of true principles, and an unmasker of the folly, darkness and jugglery of the enemies of the Saints. The advantages of such a paper are evident to every person—the instructions weekly imparted by the editor, the rays of light from the First Presidency that are reflected there, the progress of the cause of truth, are likewise recorded, together with general information from the nations of the earth, which renders THE MORMON an interesting and instructive paper. I know, from my acquaintance with Elder Taylor's books, that he has spent largely of his own private means for its support, much more than what the Saints have any idea of; but, inasmuch as President Taylor intends that I shall visit the Saints, I shall draw their attention to this circumstance and have those who are seeking reward in the kingdom engage in the labor of defending it likewise. I shall urge upon the Saints to take hold and sustain THE MORMON, as I know its advantages to the Church. In Utah we never think anything, within the reach of being accomplished, too much for us to do. As there are some of my old friends here, let me say, brethren, I know that Mormonism is the work of the God of Abraham, and I never felt more desirous of sustaining it than at the present time. I rejoice in it, and feel, like President Taylor, to sing out, Hallelujah to the Hosts of Hosts.

President Taylor said he believed the Saints were doing well and were awakening up to understand things better, and were taking steps to help along the great cause in which lie all our hopes for time and eternity.

After a doxology, Elder Appleby concluded the meeting by prayer.

Adjourned till the following morning at half-past ten.

Conference assembled in Washington Hall.

Present—of the Quorum of the Twelve—John Taylor. High Priests, 4; Seventies, 3; Elders, 45; Priests, 20; Teachers, 9; Deacons, 7.

Elder Cannon called the Conference to order. The congregation sung. Prayer by Elder Jacob Hofheins. The choir sung.

President Taylor addressed the Saints on the nature of conference business, setting forth that it was a day in which all men in authority should be placed before the Saints for a renewal of their support or rejection, and likewise to understand the financial position of the branches of the Church with which they stood directly associated.

On motion of President Harrison, Elder Angus M. Cannon was called to preside over the Conference.

Elder Martin Lenzie was appointed Clerk: Elder T. B. H. Stenhouse, Reporter.

Moved and carried, That this Conference uphold President Brigham Young as Prophet, Seer, and Revelator to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints throughout the earth, with President Heber C. Kimball as his First, and Jedediah M. Grant as his Second Counsellor.

Moved and carried, That we sustain John Smith as Patriarch to the whole Church.

Moved and carried, That we acknowledge and sustain Orson Hyde, P. P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, Geo. A. Smith, Amasa Lyman, Ezra T. Benson, C. C. Rich, Lorenzo Snow, Erastus Snow, F. D. Richards, as the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, with Orson Hyde as President.

Moved and carried, That we sustain George A. Smith as Historian of the Church.

Moved and carried, That we receive and sustain John Taylor as President of the Church in the Eastern States.

Moved and carried, That we sustain Presidents Taylor, George A. Smith, and Dr. Bernhisel, as the Delegation of Utah to Congress, and in such capacity we will sustain them by our faith and prayers, and firm determination to be guided by their counsels and instructions relative thereto.

President Taylor moved, That Judge W. I. Appleby be received by the Church in the Eastern States in the capacity of a Travelling High Priest, whose duties will be to visit the branches, to assist and counsel the officers of the same, in setting them in order wherever he travels, in comforting and teaching the Saints their duties, and especially in instructing them on their responsibilities relative to THE MORMON, and in carrying out the counsels he may receive from time to time. Carried.

Moved by President Taylor, That we sustain and uphold Elders T. B. H. Stenhouse and G. J. Taylor, as Assistants in the publication of the MORMON. Carried.

Moved and carried, That Elder Angus M. Cannon, in conformity with the unanimous resolution of the Priesthood assembled in council last evening, be received by the Church of the Philadelphia District, as the President thereof, and that we sustain him by giving diligent heed to his counsels and instructions as a worthy man of God, enjoying the confidence of his brethren.

Moved and carried, That we sustain Elders John F. Snediker, Jacob Hofheins, and Alexander Ott, as Travelling Elders on mission to the German population in the Eastern States, and to others as instructed by their respective Presidents.

A statistical representation of the branches was given, likewise a report of the progress of the Saints by the delegates, after which the following Elders were sustained Presidents of branches:

Samuel Harrison, Philadelphia.
James Sewell, Minersville, Pa.
James Jardine, Mount Carmel, Pa.
John Galloway, New Mines, Pa.
M. Mortimer, West Haven, Pa.
Thomas Evans, Pittaville, Pa.
John Charrington, Centreville, Del.
Richard Treceder, Hornerstown, N. J.
Thomas Smith, Stanton, Del.
Theodore McKean, Toms River, N. J.
Thomas Barlow, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Benjamin Isaacs, Pittston Ferry, Pa.
Miflin Palmer, Reading, Pa.
Martin Heiner, Union Branch, Pa.
David Moffat, St. Clair, Pa.

Elder Wm. H. Miles, gave the following representation of the New York Branch.

"This Branch numbers several hundreds, nearly 100 of whom are scattered through the surrounding country within a circuit of 30 or 40 miles of the city. We occupy on the Sabbath, a large and commodious Hall, on Broome street, near the Bowery, in a central location; our meetings are well attended in the afternoon and evenings. The Branch is divided into nine districts, with a President over each, and is in good condition, the Saints are united and a good spirit prevails generally; the Presidents of the several districts are united in obeying the instructions, and counsel given them, and we now have weekly prayer meetings in four districts.

"They are doing what has been required in sustaining THE MORMON, and manifest by their conduct, a determination to adhere to the counsel of our beloved Brother, President Taylor.

"I may add also, that nearly the entire Branch has been re-baptized, and several others have been baptized into the Church since last Conference, and not more than three or four have been cut off. The spirit of gathering prevails, and next Spring I think, will find a goodly number of the Saints of this Branch on their way to the Valley of the Mountains."

Elder E. R. Young represented Westport and Norwalk, Conn. The Saints there were not very numerous, but were united in word, spirit and action determined to roll on the Kingdom of God. The greater portion were cheifly old members of the Church, who had never gathered with the Saints in Zion, but felt that necessity more and more and purposed doing so at the earliest opportunity.

Elder Samuel P. Brown, represented Toms River, N. J. The Saints in that district of country were in good standing, faithful in the discharge of the duties and were setting their faces Zionward.

President Taylor said several places had not been represented. Haverstraw was a small Branch of about fifteen members, but their faithfulness and good works placed them in the front rank with those who labored to build up the Kingdom of God. He alluded to another Branch up the Hudson, but as he purposed shortly to hold a Conference in New York a representation of things more particularly connected with that district of country was deferred. After a few remarks he introduced Elder Appleby, who gave a spirited address to the Saints and related his experience with this great work and drew particular attention to THE MORMON, which found an echo in the bosom of all present.

After a Doxology, the meeting was dismissed by Elder J. F. Snediker.

AFTERNOON.

Opened by singing an anthem—prayer by Elder Stenhouse. The congregation sung a hymn. During the administration of the sacrament, President Cannon introduced Elder Stenhouse, who spoke a few moments and was followed by Elders Hofheins, Snediker, Sewell, Miles, Young, Treceder, Smith and Vignell who bore testimony to the work of God and related their experience in the Church, which was listened to with great attention and interest.

Meeting closed by the choir singing an anthem and benediction by Elder Appleby.

EVENING.

Choir sung a hymn, prayer by Elder Sewell. After another hymn was sung President Taylor according to announcement, addressed a large assembly of Saints and strangers, of which the following is an epitome.

"It is customary for persons who preach to give out a text, a particular sentiment, but for my own part I have no special regard for this custom—my text all the time is Truth; wherever that goes, I go. Should that not suit any one, it is not my business. As members of the Church of Christ, we wish to comprehend true principles and live by them. Men's opinions are nothing to me. I have been through a considerable portion of the nations of the earth and am somewhat acquainted with the philosophy of men, whatever of it may be true I respect; but when their philosophy is not based upon facts, I pass it by. I wish to become acquainted with the means by which I can live an honorable life on the earth and keep the commandments of God without any particular anxiety, whether such be popular or not. The road to destruction is popular enough and was always so, while "narrow is the way and straight is the gate that leadeth to eternal life." While I have mingled with men and understood their ideas of things, I have always endeavored to separate the chaff from the wheat and keep the latter for my own use. Did I seek only the comforts necessary and agreeable for the existence of my body, I should be courteous and accommodating to every one, without noticing or interfering with the false philosophy of the world; but having a spirit, an eternal spirit, I adhere to that which is profitable for eternity as well as time, and fulfil the duties devolving upon me, whether it may be agreeable to others or not. Truth, which I seek, is an eternal, enduring principle, which emanates from God—it is the light of Heaven that exposes the error of men. Such being my determination, it matters little to me whether men think I am a fool or not. They no doubt think so and think my brethren are the same, but their thinking so does not make it so.

"I stand upon this footstool of God and ask myself, Who am I? What is the object of my existence? What my destiny? Am I spiritual or temporal, or both? If spiritual, where are my associates, and what relationship subsists between my spiritual and invisible being and others, and what my duties to those more corporeal? What are my duties to man, to my family and to my God? These are important questions, yet they are intimately associated with my being and demand my most sober and earnest attention. I ask you, Why are men in such confusion on politics, on morality, on religion, and the answer comes, Simply because they do not understand correct principles and know not what is best for them. The people at the present time are in as great confusion as the people Paul found worshipping an unknown God. I remember a great little man in Missouri exclaiming, when he looked at the poor deluded Mormons, 'O! that I could invoke the spirit of the Unknown God to rest upon you.' He was but a sample of the people; 'they worship they know not what'—an unknown God, without body, parts and passions, seated on the top of a topless throne. Such ideas are to me foolishness. I belive in a God who has a real and tangible existence—a Being whose eyes are upon the children of men and whose ears are open to their cries—a Being who is ever ready to help those who put their trust in Him—a God who used to speak and declare His mind and will to the people—a God who gives laws and commandments by which the people might live. To find out such a God to-day ought to be our task; to learn the means by which we can approach Him is our duty and interest. Here is a Bible which contains the testimony of those to whom God revealed His will anciently. Does he reveal himself to the christian world now? No! Why? Because they are too smart by far—they know too much—they are too enlightened in this glorious age—they have got beyond God—puffed up, vain in their own conceit. Where, I ask, are the revelations of to-day? Where is the communion of God with men? The Great I Am spoke anciently, men listened, and true principles were established; but to-day, alas! we have the miserable apology for these blessings in seminaries of learning and colleges. Men in different ages have had communion with God, and their communications and revelations were written, and these writings compose this very Bible that christians profess so much to revere. But where again, I ask, have we such men? And yet we profess to be more enlightened than they.

"It is my mission to declare that the heavens have been opened in these last days, that angels have again ministered to men, restored the Gospel of Christ, and commanded men to go forth to the nations and call upon all men, everywhere to repent of their sins and be baptised, and to prepared be receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, the light of Heaven to lead them into all Truth, and to show them things to come. Those who heard Peter anciently preach those doctrines had an opportunity of knowing whether his promise was true or not,—and I call upon all men everywhere to try me likewise; I make the same promise, and call upon rich and poor, learned and unlearned—great and small to hearken to the words of the Lord. I come as a messenger of salvation, and thus saith the Lord to all men: Repent, and be baptised, and turn from your sins. I speak of what I know and testify of things that I comprehend, for God lives and has revealed himself to men in our day. If no one else knows that God lives I do; he has revealed himself to the human family, and I know it. The Scriptures say that God will do nothing but what He will reveal unto his servants the prophets. Let me ask, where are the prophets among the people of the world? Nowhere! There are no prophets among the people to-day, with whom the Lord can speak, to whom He can communicate His purposes; the people won't have them; therefore the Lord is silent.

"Christians speak reproachfully of the Latter Day Saints, and charge them with not believing in the Bible, but there never was a greater mistake. It is the Bible that first led us to become Latter Day Saints, and the fact is, we believe, too much of it for them. The Ancient prophets spoke of an Apostacy from the true faith of Christ, and we believe them, and you can see it as well as I can or the prophets who prophecied of it. Daniel forsaw that the work commenced by Christ should be prevailed against by another power that should persecute and put to death the faithful, and drive the Church into the wilderness for 'a time, times and half a time.' That power has prevailed, and to-day the people have a mongrel bastard religion of men's fixing up to suit their times and circumstances. Paul said there would be a falling away, and professors of religion should take the place of the faithful, 'having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof.' And this is verily true—they have a form of godliness, are always prating about the blessed influences of religion, but restrict its power to the first age of Christianity. Daniel, and many ancient servants of God, likewise perceived that the true principles of the Gospel should be restored in the latter days. John, the banished Apostle to the Isle of Patmos, was comforted with a vision of the restoration of the Gospel in the latter times by the Angel of the Lord, and in our day a young man of a neighboring State comes forth and testifies that that Gospel has been restored to the world through him. He published it to the world, and no man can show that it differs from that taught by Christ. I challenge the world to show that one principle of it is false. If any man can show me that I have embraced a false principle I shall renounce it, and cast it far from me; but such a man I have never met. No man can combat Mormonism with the Bible. It is necessary to first turn infidel to oppose it, and that is why our elders meet with so many infidels among the clergy. They don't believe the very book on which they profess to stake their salvation. The first man who spake to me of Mormonism was uneducated, but I found he was the smartest man on religion I had ever met. I asked who had taught him, and he replied a young unlearned man in the State of New York. I could not combat the principles he advanced, and I never yet met the man who could, and I have met with plenty in this country and in Europe who have been willing enough to do it if they only had been able. In a word, Truth is eternal, and cannot be overturned, and to oppose it is vanity and folly.

"The religions of men are neither scriptural nor philosophical. Paley and Dick, the great christian theologians and philosophers, what have they done? They have labored hard to give evidence of the existence of God, and while they have adhered to their logic in viewing the works of nature, and reasoning thereon, they have done well, and satisfactorily proved enough to establish faith in God and Christ; but when that is accomplished, does it prove that these men are now acquainted with either the Father or the Son? These philosophers were logical and truthful till the moment they linked modern christianity with their argument, and there they made shipwreck, and their philosophy become foolishness.

"What is the gospel? It is a revelation of the mind and will of Heaven. Revelation is a principle by which truth is communicated to men. By that principle Abraham, the prophets, and apostles received the blessings of Heaven, and by which men may always receive blessings for themselves and power to seal blessings upon their posterity that shall never be removed. It is this gospel, then, that is restored and of which we testify. Why cannot your priests overthrow it? Because it is founded on the rock of eternity. Why could not your mobs overthrow it? Because the Almighty was its author. There is now a great cry about "Border Ruffianism" in Kansas—we also have had Border Ruffianism, but few cried about the bleeding Mormons. We bled, but none pitied—there were none to assist; but now it is "Bleeding Kansas!" "Bleeding Kansas!" all over the North, and the nation is in confusion. We prophesied of this—we knew that the nation that suffered us to be robbed, spoiled, and murdered, without interfering, should have its day of mourning; and come it must.

"It is amusing to hear editors and ministers crying out against the poor, deluded Mormons in Utah, while at the same time California and Kansas stare them in the face—pictures of strife, confusion, and death; and in every State of the Union there is division. The only thing that torments these clamoring, rowdy politicians and ministers is that the Mormons are not in as bad a fix as themselves. That is the fact, and the real fact. I am bold to say that there is not a Territory nor State in these United States, nor a nation in the whole world, where there is so much peace and union, so little discord and strife, so much order and obedience to law, and where there is so good and efficient a government as exists in Utah at the present time.

"Let us be faithful to God, keep His commandments, and all things will work together for our good in time and salvation in eternity."

The above is but a meagre report of a discourse that was listened to with great attention: we regret the whole has not been reported.—[Rep.

On motion of Elder Cannon, the Conference adjourned till the 6th of April, 1857.

Choir sung a hymn. Benediction by President Taylor.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

On Saturday evening Senator Wilson, of Massachusetts, in compliance with the question of the "Mechanic's and Workingmen's Central Republican Union of this city, discussed in the Broadway Tabernacle, the subject of "Free Labor." The report we have seen is only remarkable for the unreserved declaration that should Mr. Fremont be elected—slavery shall never be permitted on another inch of American soil. After the close of the meeting a procession was formed, headed by music that had been enlivening the audience inside during the evening, and a goodly number marched up Broadway to Mr. Fremont's residence, a now very common practice.

Gen. Lane, commander of the Free State troops in Kansas, has addressed a lengthy letter to Messrs. A. W. Doniphan and A. G. Boon, as they, among all the "Border Ruffians," are at least entitled to "be recognized as gentlemen." He denies all the attrocities that have been charged to him and his men, tries to make out that they have only acted in self-defence and been gentle and humane, and winds up with a proposition for settling the Kansas difficulty: "I will entertain a proposition like this:—You to select one hundred actual slaveholders, born and raised in slave States, who have already been engaged in this conflict, Atchison & Co., among the number; and I to select one hundred actual non-slaveholding settlers of Kansas, myself included, we being the party invaded and having the right to select time, place, distance, and weapons, who shall fight, in presence of twelve members of the Senate and twelve members of the House of Representatives of the United States, one-half of whom shall be selected by each party, with the mutual agreement that the blood of the parties thus selected shall settle this vexed question, and save Kansas from further outrage."

The General's friends think the above quotation a piece of rich sarcasm; others think some organ grinder had, a short time previously, been singing to him Jeanette and Jeanot with the mouse music accompaniment, and inspired him with the idea that "those who make the battle should be the only men to fight."

The steamer J. P. Smith burst her steam chimney near Haverstraw, Monday morning, and severely scalded two of the firemen (one of whom has since died), and slightly injured the engineer. The accident was caused by a defect in the iron.

"Affairs of honor" are becoming more frequent as the election excitement increases. In our last week's telegraphic we noticed that one of the editors of the Charleston Mercury had fallen on the field. Since then the Charleston papers have been received, with a full account of the circumstances attending the fatal rencontre. On Tuesday last Mr. B. B. Botts and Mr. Pryor of the Richmond Enquirer were to have settled their difficulties with lead; but the police got to know of the affair, and apprehended them on the field. Fine times. Life is cheap and conscience nothing.

The Swiss residents in New York held a meeting on Tuesday evening, for the purpose of sending a congratulatory address to the patriots of Neuchatel, for the firm stand they took in opposition to Prussian intrigues.

The inhabitants of Brooklyn, favorable to the election of Mr. Fillmore, had a grand turnout on Wednesday evening, being their last demonstration before the election.

The constituents of Col. Preston S. Brooks gave him a splendid banquet on the 3d inst.; took all the responsibility of his caning Sumner at Washington; and presented him with a few heirlooms, among others a cane, with the inscription: "Use knock-down arguments. To Mr. Preston S. Brooks."

Our telegraphic column shows that Baltimore takes the lead in the election rows. The end is not yet.

Fire at Black Rock.

Buffalo, Oct. 8, 1856.

The Queen City mills at Black Rock, owned by Messrs. Hiram Smith & Co., Wheatland, Genesee County, with 4,000 bushels of wheat, were destroyed by fire last evening. The Mills were valued at $60,000, and insured for $40,000. The books and papers were saved. The fire is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary.

Foundlings.

We call the attention of our Christian friends to an article on our first page under the above heading. They will do well to think of home when they talk of "the peculiar institution" of Utah. We have no leisure presently to do more than ask attention to the abominations that are damning every christian nation under heaven—and what is no less true, almost unknown in nations on whom the light, or rather darkness, of modern Christianity has never fallen.

Personal.

Mrs. Henry Bunce, of Globe Road, London, requests us to inform her of the whereabouts of her husband, who came Steward by the Emerald Isle. His letters have not reached her since his departure from Liverpool: Mr. B. is earnestly requested to write home immediately. The last report we heard of him he was going West from St. Louis in hopes of reaching Utah: we don't know more.

Correspondence from Utah.

Historian's Office, G. S. L. City, August 30th, 1856.

Editor of the Mormon:

Dear Sir: The eastern mail arrived on the evening of the 28th inst., bringing the Mormon up to the 12th of July. We have considerable news from our Washington delegation and the eastern country.

The weather continues dry and favorable for harvesting; our wheat crops have proved much better than we had anticipated on account of the drouth and the scanty supply of water from the creeks. Potatoes in the city on the higher land are generally a failure; on the lower and farming lands there are moderate crops, having mostly grown to tops. Corn crops in many places look well. We probably shall reap a much larger amount of grain than possibly could have been calculated upon during the dry summer. The wheat has filled remarkably well out in the ear, notwithstanding the stalks were so small that in many instances the farmers have had to pull their grain instead of cutting it.

The health of the people during the past season has been remarkably good.

During this month Elder Parley P. Pratt and a few brethren have been appointed on missions to the States. Thomas Bullock, Bernard Snow and several others to Europe; they expect to start on or about the 10th of September.

On the 16th inst. the first division of Elder P. C. Merrill's company came into the city, and since that time the balance have arrived, being the first company of our emigration this season.

The Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society hold their first annual Fair in this city, commencing on the 1st of October; at which there will be an exhibition of stock, agricultural products, farming and gardening implements, manufactures, ladies' work, machinery and fruit. A plowing match will take place on the Governor's lands, near the city, about conference time. There will also be premiums awarded for the best Essays on Agriculture, Horticulture, Pomology, and Home Manufactures.

A fair on such an extended scale will be a novelty in Utah, and elicit from the genius and enterprise of her citizens such specimens and productions, as no doubt will tend greatly to enhance the cause of agriculture and home manufactures.

In the various wards of the city and throughout the Territory auxiliary societies are being formed to facilitate the accomplishment of the objects of the institution; and to a people so remote and isolated from the commercial world, it does not require much logic to show them the necessity of sustaining themselves by producing and manufacturing what they consume.

Several brethren have left the valley this season; some say they intend to return when the "times" become better.

Bro. S. M. Blair and company start on Monday, first for Ruby Valley, where he expects to meet Bro. Enoch Reese and company, from Carson. The design is to explore a new route to Carson by way of Ruby Valley.

I have sent by this mail to the Linnaan Gardens, New York, for coins of fifty different kinds of fruit, which I have selected from Prince & Co.'s catalogue, with which I intend budding my orchard next season. I have put in four hundred buds this Fall, of various fruits, some of varieties brought from the States, some from California, and others from seedlings which have been proven here, and are commended by our fruit culturists. Many currants have been raised this season, considerable strawberries and peaches, and there will be a few apples, grapes, apricots, plums, &c.

President Young is building a cobble stone wall, averaging 10 feet in height, around his noble orchard and vineyard, enclosing his mansion, offices, and new house. I presume he will gather between twenty and thirty hundred pounds of grapes this season; many of his apple trees are heavily loaded, and he will have a fair crop of peaches.

President Kimball has built a granary of cobble stones laid in Deseret cement, 34 feet by 24, two stories high, with a floor over one foot deep of cobble stones, also laid in cement; the design is to make it vermin proof.

President Grant, in company with Brothers Thurston and Stoker, has opened a new farm in Weber valley; the crops are very promising.

The new Historian's Office is plastered, and we expect to remove there soon, which will be a decided change for the better to the clerks, as well as myself.

Bro. Willes, the Territorial Inspector of Schools, has returned from the North and reports the favorable results consequent upon the co-operation of the authorities in the various settlements; also the establishment of Sabbath schools, and the organization of literary societies.

A company has just returned from Carson Valley; as far as we could learn all of the company who went in the Spring [illegible] peace and safety. We were informed that Murray, who was tried last winter for murder, and ran away, was killed by the Indians; also a man by the name of George Redding.

Yours truly, W. Woodruff.

Correspondence from Ireland.

29 Great George's Street, Belfast, Ireland, Sept. 11, 1856.

Elder John Taylor—Dear Brother: I take the liberty of addressing you a brief sketch of the progress of the Gospel in Ireland. I have been engaged in the Irish mission for about one year; a part of that time I labored in the ministry under the wise direction of our worthy brother, Elder James Ferguson, Pastor of the Irish mission. On the first of February last Elder Ferguson was released from his arduous labors in this land, likewise Elder J. D. T. McAlister; in order to return again to the peaceful valleys of the West. During his indefatigable labors in this beautiful yet benighted land there was great good done, and many brought to a knowledge of the true plan of salvation. When he was released to return home, I was called to take his place, and I can say in truth, and with a thankful heart to the God of Abraham, the truths of Mormonism are spreading in spite of all that the clergy and petty hirelings can do, with propfligate editors, to aid in heralding forth their falsehoods and misrepresentations. It is a little amusing yet disgusting to see the clergy of all sects with their scissor-clipping editors, as lap dogs, barking at their command. Oh! how they chuckle when they get some of the rich productions of some American papers that I could name: papers that everybody knows at home to be sinks of abomination. They have then a feast of fat things congenial to their corrupt tastes. Any thing like the Spaulding story, "Female life in Utah," "Mormonism Unveiled," &c., together with all the fabulous gleanings of the last twenty-five years, of which all the honorable, high-minded American editors have long since been ashamed: all these are sweet morsels to the hirelings here, yea, much better than the Bible. Yet with all this great effort to calumniate, Mormonism is still onward in Erin, and will continue to spread till all the honest sons and daughters of the Emerald Isle are gathered home to the peaceful West.

We have eight branches of the Church organized in Ireland, and they are divided into two Conferences, Elder James McGhie presiding in the North, and Elder T. H. Rutledge in Dublin; they are worthy of a name among the noble sons of God in the last dispensation. We have two travelling Elders, Almerin Grow, late from Utah, and Elder Hamilton Garrick, a native of Scotland: both bid fair to be useful men in the great harvest field of the last dispensation. We have besides seventeen local Elders, who labor through the week and preach when called upon. We emigrated in the last year a goodly number of Saints from the Dublin and Belfast Conferences, and I believe they were as good and as intelligent persons as ever traversed the bosom of the briny deep, and a good representation of many of the true-born, yet down trodden sons and daughters of this, my native isle. They sailed on the S. Curling, buoyant in feelings with faces Zionward. I have been informed by a letter from Elder Wm. Paine, one of that company, now in New York, that they all arrived safe on the shores of America. Had the "well informed Irishman," or "The Irish American," either of them been there on their arrival, they could have seen some true Hibernians; yes, those who would have brought confusion to the face of that pretendedly well informed Irishman. He must be one of these contemptibly ignorant fools who are ever considered wise in their own conceit; indeed, our little school boys know better. When I saw that quotation in your highly valuable paper, the Mormon of August 9th, I felt grieved that such a consummate ignoramus would ever attempt to palm himself on the public as a well informed man of any nation. To say that we "only number seven Mormons in all Ireland," when it is known by everybody here that knows anything, that we number hundreds. We have several thousand tracts in circulation, and that among all classes of society from the highest to the lowest, and we are weekly baptizing those who receive the truths of the everlasting Gospel. You will please pardon me for detaining you with this lengthy scrawl. When I reflect on the many bygone days that we have spent together in prosperity and adversity, it kindled a desire in my heart to drop you a few lines. Ever praying for your prosperity in Zion's cause, I remain your friend and brother in the everlasting covenant, John Scott.

Literary and Musical Festival—Anniversary of July 24.

Essay, "On Diversion," by J. B. Kelly.

Music by the Band.

Song, "Miss Julia," sung by H. Maiben.

Song, "This new land of ours," sung by J. H. Randall.

We need not attempt a criticism on these productions, as everything was of the highest intellectual order, and reflects the greatest credit on the several authors and performers. The spirit of Mormonism characterized and pervaded the whole proceeding.

The Committee were compelled to limit the number of the tickets, that the party might not be uncomfortably crowded, and some were deprived of attendance whose presence would have added to our happiness.

At 6 p. m., supper was announced; and it was past 10 o'clock ere the company, amounting to about 300 persons had all partaken of the good things provided by Messrs. W. Eddington and D. Wilkin.

Dancing was commenced at 6 1-2 and continued till an early hour.

The best of feelings were manifested; old and young, grave and gay seemed to forget their cares, and mingled with one heart and soul in the festivities of the celebration.

Prests. Young, Kimball and Grant seemed to enter into this recreation with uncommon zest.

Not a murmuring breath was stirred; and we may say that we have not at any time enjoyed ourselves better than on this occasion; indeed, none but the Saints of God can innocently and judiciously do so.—[Deseret News, Aug. 20.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

England.—The last English papers that arrived here contain nothing of particular interest; en revanche they are well filled with glowing descriptions of the coronation of the Emperor of Russia. Mr. Wm. Russell, that able Crimean correspondent of the Times, was sent to Moscow to watch and record the proceedings which have been given to the world by his masterly pen—vividly as if the picture rolled before the astonished vision.

Lord Hardinge, late Commander-in-Chief of the Army, is dead. His age was 71 years.

Scotland.—Capt. Penny, commander of the ship Lady Franklin, had returned with her to Aberdeen, from the Arctic regions, and reports that when he was in Hogarth's Sound he was told by the Esquimaux that some of their companions had seen, a long way off, in a northwesterly direction, a circular white tent erected on the ice. The Esquimaux had taken from it, on their first visit, some bright metal; and on their second visit, some moons afterwards, they had seen two white men in the tent. It was reported among the natives that these and other white men had perished from hunger. So far as Capt. Penny can judge he thinks that this may refer to the same party from whom Dr. Rae obtained the silver spoons, &c., which identified the white men with Sir John Franklin and his party.

France.—Some thirty persons members of the Marianne have lately been arrested in Paris on the charge of premeditating and concerting for, the assasination of the Emperor and Empress on their return from Biarritz. The Marianne is a secret society that has its members everywhere in France; but its organization nowhere—at least the police with all their cunning can find no books of enrolment—all they can do is to arrest on suspicion. France has always had its secret societies and their victims, and the police has a peculiar predelection for excitement if for nothing more than the fun of the thing. In the absence of something diverting they have arrested a goodly number of suspicous characters and are as busy as bees in discovering a phantom.

Parties connected with the late robbery of the shares of the Northern Railway, have been apprehended in London and taken back to Paris. The robbery is creating a great stir in monied circles.

The papers from France give an account of a Bull Fight at Bayonne at which Louis and Eugenie "assisted"—that is, looked at the torturing of animals, laughed and cheered their tormentors—beautiful occupation; however, they must do something to kill time.

Naples.—"King Bomba," as Punch has christened the Monarch of fair Naples, famed for cruelty to his subjects, seems in a fair way for having a row with England and France. In another column we publish an article from the London Post, on the "Threatening aspect of affairs in Italy," which shows that the reign of peace has not yet commenced in Europe. The Paris conferences were to do a great deal for the peace of the world; but war is no sooner stopped in one quarter of the globe than it threatens to break out in another.

Turkey.—The Journal de Constantinople says that a serious conflict had taken place at Trebizond. Eight Turkish sailors tore down the Russian flag from a merchant ship. They threw the Russian sailors into the sea. The Russian Consul had demanded the dismissal of the Captain of the Port. The sailors who made the attack were publicly bastinadoed.

Belgium.—An "Independent Free Trade Congress" was opened on the 22d ult. at Brussels. Between 300 and 400 deputies from different parts of the world were present at the opening.

FOR THE MORMON.

Germany.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

CONTINUED.

Innsbruck, the capital of Tyrol, on the river Inn and the former place of residence of the Austrian archdukes; Brixen, the capital of the principality on the Eysach at its junction with the Riente; Saltzburg, the capital of the dutchy of Saltzburg, on the Salza. It was taken by the French in 1800, and again in 1805. Graetz, Luxemburg, Glognitz, Linz and Neustadt in Lower Austria; Oedenburg, near the Neusiedler See are next the most noted towns.

Troppau, the capital of Austria Silesia, on the Oppa. During the wars of 1741 and 1756 between Prussia and Austria, that city was taken, a treaty was however made between the beligerent parties after each capture, so that Troppau was restored to Austria.

The German possessions of Prussia consist of the provinces of Silesia, Pommern, Saxony, Brandenburg, Westphalia, the Lower Rhine, Cleve-Iuelich-Berg, and extend from beyond the right bank of the Oder to the Meuse, running in a south-west direction between the Kingdoms of Hanover and Saxony. The Prussian dominions are scattered within the territories of the other states, so that by their natural position they are divided in the West and East position. The West portion consisting of the provinces Nieder-Rhine or Lower Rhine, Westphalia and Cleve-Iuelich-Berg, is bounded by France, Belgium, Holland, Hanover, Hess-Cassel, Nassau and Bavaria. The East portion containing the provinces of Silesia, Pomerania or Pommern, Brandenburg and Saxony, is bounded by Russia, Posen, Poland, Austria, Saxony, Gotha, Hesse-Cassel, Mecklenburg, Hanover and Sax-Weimar. In consequence of the peculiar geographical position of Prussia, its rulers are always desirous of having friendly relations with the German Confederation, as in case of emergency the Prussian troops have to pass through their lands. The population is 15,000,000. Area 80,600 geographical square miles. The principal rivers are the Elbe, the Oder and the Spree, and the principal towns in Brandenberg are Berlin on the river Spree, Potsdam and Brandenberg on the Havel, Frankfort and Kuestrin on the Oder, and Wurtemberg on the Elbe. The country has a sandy, meagre soil, which requires a great deal of manuring, in order to be productive of some grain. Berlin has, including a garrison of 15,000 soldiers, 400,000 inhabitants; is the first residence of king, the seat of the military, civil and ecclesiastical authorities; the residence of the corps diplomatique. Berlin has the best literary and scientific institutions in Germany. The University is frequented by 1700 students of nearly all nations, where men like Humboldt, Schoenlein, Hufeland, those great stars of science, Dieffenbach, the great surgeon and operator, Schelling, the eminent philosopher, have been lecturing or are still engaged in the discharge of their academical duties, the royal library, which contains about 500,000 volumes and manuscripts pertaining to every branch of human knowledge, the different museums, the academy of sciences, that has men among its members such as Prof. Rauch, the sculptor, Dr. Schulze, the great traveller and Orientalist and others; the royal castle, the observatory the royal opera, where Meyerbeer, and Rossini take the staff in the orchesta; the anatomical theatre and a great many other curiosities afford the greatest variety of attractions and enjoyments both to the native and stranger.

Potsdam on the Havel, the second residence of the king, has about 25,000 inhabitants, is 17 miles from Berlin, is noted for the castle of Sans Souci, the favorite retreat of Frederick II., where all the apartments are kept in the same condition as they were during the lifetime of that great monarch. Among the curiosities of that place are the three royal castles of the present king, the Weisenhaus (an asylum for orphans,) a splendid building, where the girls and boys of soldiers are educated by the government. On their leaving the asylum, the boys get situations either in the army, or in the civil department or in any of the mechanical branches according to their capacities and and conduct, and the girls are often taken into the first families as domestics or governesses, and receive on the day of their wedding a certain sum of money as a dowery from the king. Potsdam has a strong garrison, and is often called the city of barracks. The tomb of Frederick the Great, may be seen in the garrison cathedral. Scharlottenburg, the third residence of the king, is a beautiful little place, 5 miles from Berlin. The castle gardens are much noted for the splendid mausoleum, containing the remains of Frederick William III., king of Prussia and his consort, queen Louisa. Spanau, a well fortified place, 10 miles from the metropolis, has about 4000 inhabitants, and is built as a kind of advanced bulwark for the defence of Berlin, it contains a strong garrison, a cannon foundary, an artillery laboratory, powder-mills and other military institutions and establishments.

In Silesia the principal towns are Breslau, Glogau on the Oder, Liegnitz and Neisse, Silesia is very fertile and productive of every kind of grain of European climate, hence it has to supply Brandenberg and other places with provisions. The province is divided in the three government districts of Breslau, Liegnitz and Oppeln. Breslau, the capital of Silesia, and residence of the king during his sojourn in that province, has including a garrison of 3000 men, about 120,000 inhabitants; it is the seat of the president or governor, of the Catholic archbishop; the seat of the military, civil and ecclesiastical authorities. Among its curiosities rank first the royal castle, an ancient building which has lately received great improvements and adornments; the University, formerly a Jesuit college, is a magnificent building, and was erected by the emperor Leopold of Germany; an observatory; 5 colleges and a great many other learned institutions. Breslau has formerly been well fortitfied, but its ramparts round the city have been more than 30 years ago, transformed into pleasure grounds and walks. It was besieged during the Seven years' war by the Austrian field-marshal Baron von Laudon and well defended by the gallant general Tauenzien, to whose memory a fine monument has been erected; in 1767 it was bombarded by the French. On the 10th of May 1848 the ill-fated city shared the trials of a revolution, as a murderous engagement took place between the citizens, who were mostly lead on by students and other literary men and the government troops; the latter being victorious, the city was put under martial law, and many of the people either banished or imprisoned for many years.

Kosel, Neisse, Glatz, Glogau and Silberberg are all strongly fortified places on the Austrian frontier. Linen cloth of the finest quality is manufactured to a great extent in the districts of Peterswaldau, Langenbielau, Landeshut, Schmiedeberg, etc., where more than 200,000 people are gaining their living by weaving. There are also woolen manufactories and glass houses.

As remarked above, Silesia abounds in the national advantages of a rich, fertile country, having mines of lead, iron and copper, and quarries of various stones. That province is is also much noted for its beautiful mountain scenery, the watering places such as Landeck, Warmbrunn, Salzbrunn, Fuerstenstein, and others are frequented during the summer season by thousands of natives and foreigners. Silesia is full of historical mementoes out of the 30 years' war, when Thilly, Wallenstein, Gustavus Adolphus, king of Sweden was on the stage of action; out of the Seven Years' war, when General Ziethen, Prince Henry of Prussia, were the principal actors; out of the wars of 1807–13, when Macdonald, Vandamme, Prince Blucher, and others, were engaged in the bloody struggle of liberty and tyranny, and, as for instance in Aug. 1813 at the battle of Katzbach, a small river between the towns of Goldberg and Iauer, where the French army was completely routed by the Prussians under Blucher.

The province Pommern or Pomerania is on the shores of the Baltic Sea. The chief towns are Stralsand, Stettin and Kolberg, well fortified places, Anklam, Usedom, Stargard and Wolgast. Stralsund, with 20,000 inhabitants, a strongly fortified seaport town, is noted for Charles XII., king of Sweden, sojourning there after returning from his captivity in Turkey. It was taken by the French in 1814. Stettin, the capital of the province, is a well fortified seaport town with 26,000 inhabitants and is quite a commercial place. Magdeberg, is the capital of the province of Sachsen, a well fortified place on the Elbe. It is noted for its capture during the 30 years' war in 1631 by Tilly, commander of the Austrian army, where the greatest outrages and atrocities were perpetrated, in as much as the whole was reduced to ashes and more than 10,000 Protestants were put to the sword.

The province of Westphalia, contains 25,400 square miles. The principal towns are Minden, on the Weser, Muenster on the Embs, Paderborn on the streamlet Pader, the spring of which is the Cathedral. Muenster has 30,000 inhabitants and is noted for its capture by John Beckold in 1535 a tailor of Leyden, king of the Anabaptists, in consequence of which the city was besieged for 17 months by the German Powers and taken in 1536. In 1648 at the end of the 30 years' war which had been carried on between the Protestants headed by Gustavus Adolphus, king of Sweden who was killed at the battle of Luetzen in 1632 and the Catholics headed by Austria, the treaty of Westphalia was made, there the province of of Cleve-Iulich-Berg is divided by the Rhine and has about 190,000 inhabitants. Dusseldorf, the capital, on the Rhine, is noted for its many learned and scientific institutions, among which ranks first the gallery of paintings, drawings, engravings, etc. It is the residence of many of the first-class artists, especially painters, who are called the Dusseldorf School. It has 30,000 inhabitants. Achen or Aix-la-Chapelle has 40,000 inhabitants, was the residence of Charlemagne, whose tomb is to be seen in the Cathedral of Notre Dame. It is noted for the treaties of peace that were concluded in 1668 and 1748, also for the great Congress of all the European Sovereigns in 1818. Bonn on the Rhine, is noted for its celebrated University. In the province of the Lower Rhine, Coblentz and Cologne on the Rhine, and Trier on the Moselle are the principal towns. Coblentz with 29,000 inhabitants is one of the most important, fortified places in Germany, opposite to the fortress Ehrenbreitstein. It has many churches and chapels and several Colleges. Cologne or Koeln, is noted for its extensive fortifications, the defence of which require 60, 000 men, and for the many churches and chapels amounting to about 80. Rubens, the celebrated painter, was born there in 1577. From that place great quantities of Cologne-water and a variety of other articles are exported. This city like a great many others in Germany is distinguished for historical events, mementoes of which may be seen in many places, as for instance in the church of St. Ursula with the tomb of the Saint and bones belonging to 10,000 virgins that were killed with her. It is also notorious for the expulsion of the Jews in 1485, and of the Protestants in 1618.

The kingdom of Hanover is bounded on the south and south-east by the kingdom of Bavaria and Saxony; on the west by Holland, and by Prussian Westphalia; on the north by the North Sea, and by the Elbe separating it from Holstein, and on the east by the Prussian possessions. Its area is about 14,600 square miles. It is divided in 11 provinces, the principal towns of which are Hanover, Hildesheim, Osnabruck, Gottingen with a University, Goslar and Hamden. Hanover on the Seine is the capital of the kingdom and the residence of the king. The country of that kingdom is flat and plain with gentle undulations. The soil is generally tolerably productive, especially on the banks of the rivers, but in many places there are barren heaths and moors. Metals such as iron, copper and lead are found to a great extent on the mountain range of the Harz. The principal rivers are the Elbe, the Weser, the Oder, and the Embs. The lakes of Steinhude and Dummer are the most noted. Population is about 1,800,000.

In 1692 the elector of Hanover received the electoral dignity. After his marriage with Sophia, a daughter of James I., of England, his son was the nearest Protestant heir to the throne of Great Britain after Queen Anne, to whom he succeeded in 1714. This relationship accounts for Hannover having been governed for longer than a century by Great Britain.

Saxony, which had been previous to 1807 a grand duchy, was made at that time a kingdom by Napoleon I., on account of being a member of the Rhinish confederation and having sent auxiliaries to the French army. By the treaty of Tilsit in 1807, where Alexander I., emperor of Russia, Frederick William III., king of Prussia and Napoleon I., emperor of France met in a conference, on a floating raft on the river Niemen, Prussia had to cede some of her possessions to Saxony.

Southern Mail—Mexican News—The Late Duel.

Baltimore, Oct. 2, 1856.

New Orleans papers of Friday have been received, with Texas dates to the 23d ult. Advices from Northern Mexico state that Vidurri was prepared to resist the Government forces rent against him, and that the flag of the Sierra Madre Republic would be unfurled.

The Charleston Mercury appears in mourning for the death of Mr. Taber. It says the duel took place in consequence of a peremptory challenge to Mr. Taber for alleged offensive matter published in The Mercury, the author of which was not called for.

Destructive Fire near Albany.

Albany, Oct. 2, 1856.

A building occupied as the finishing department of the Britannia works at Kinwood, south of this city, was destroyed by fire this morning. The loss is $30,000 over the insurance.

Dreadful Accident at an Agricultural Fair—Fourteen Persons Killed.

Cleveland, Oct. 2, 1856.

A portable steam engine exploded this afternoon in the Deleware County (Ohio) Fair, killing fourteen persons and wounding several others.

Arrest of Supposed Murderers.

Albany, Oct. 4, 1856.

Kiernan and Kearney, charged with the killing of Mr. Carroll on Arbor hill, in this city, on Sunday last, were brought here this morning by the police, and committed on the warrant of the Coroner.

News from Kansas.

St. Louis, Oct. 3, 1856.

Governor Geary has issued a proclamation for the Sheriffs of the different counties in Kansas to open the polls on Monday, Oct. 6, for the election of a delegate to Congress and members of the Legislature.

St. Louis, Oct. 4, 1856.

A letter to the Republican from Gov. Geary, dated the 26th ult., says that United States troops will be stationed at points where troubles are anticipated during the coming election, and that any interference with the legitimate exercise of suffrage will be punished with the utmost severity. Mr. Whitfield is the pro-slavery candidate for Congress.

A letter to the Democrat, dated the 24th, says that the free State prisoners had been examined before Judge Cato, and committed for trial at the April term of the Court.

Riots in Baltimore.—Fatal Results.

Baltimore, October 5, 1856.

Our city has been disgraced by four riots to-day, all growing out of politics. The most serious originated from reports charging the Democrats with having imported a party of New York "roughs" to do the fighting at the polls on Wednesday next. The head quarters of the Empire Club and subsequently the tavern on Marsh Market Space was mobbed. In both instances the assailants were driven off by the use of firearms. One man was shot and a number of others severely beaten. There was a great number of discharges of fire arms, and immense crowds of people were congregated in the street.

Baltimore City Election—Fighting and Loss of Life.

Baltimore, Oct. 8, 1856.

An election for Mayor and Councilmen was held in this city to-day. During the latter part of the day there was a great deal of disorder and fighting, pistols and guns being freely used. The fighting in the Eighth and Fourteenth Wards was particularly severe. Four men were killed and twenty wounded—among the latter three children. The returns are now coming in. Swan, the "American" candidate, is undoubtedly elected by a heavy majority.

SECOND DISPATCH.

A most serious riot occurred at Lexington Market to-day, between the adherents of the New Market Fire Company, (Democrats,) and the American Club, "Rip Raps." The former were driven from the Twelfth Ward polls and forced into their engine house, where they armed themselves with muskets, when a general fight ensued, lasting half an hour, pistols, clubs and muskets being freely used on both sides. Twenty, more or less, were wounded. Charles Brown and two others named Walters and Sparks, and another, name unknown, were killed. Two or three of the wounded are dangerously so.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the came now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Évangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés!" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection!" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.!" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.!" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et, encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systémes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

FOR THE MORMON.

Zion, the Land of the Blessed.

BY JAMES DWYER.

Oh! Zion for ever;
No power shall sever
My heart from the land of the blest;
'Tis the land of the brave,
Which none can enslave,
'Tis the happiest land in the west.

'Tis the land of the brave,
And the patriot's grave;
And heroes and sages of old
We hallow their dust,
And esteem it a trust,
More precious than jewels and gold.

'Tis the land of the fair,
And beauty is there,
And the gladness that woman bestows;
When the circle is bright,
With the heart-cheering light,
From the eye of affection that flows.

'Tis the land of the wise,
With the glorious prize
Of genius her temples are bound;
And she beams from afar,
Like a bright morning star,
To give light to the nations around.

Hail land of the blest,
Brightest spot in the west;
Shall I leave for other?--No never;
Where'er I may roam,
Still thou art my home,
Oh! Zion my country for ever.

From the Deseret News, of Aug. 6th and 13th, 1856.

Twenty-Fourth of July Celebrations.

SPRINGVILLE.

At half-past four, a. m., a national salute; directed by E. O. Haymond.

At 8, a signal gun for assembling at the Bowery. The Marshal of the day and assistant Marshals formed the procession in the following order:

1. Springville Brass Band, with banner,
2. 24 young gentlemen in black, with banner inscribed, "Israel's Defence."
3. 24 young ladies in white, with wreaths and blue sashes, and banner inscribed "the pride of Israel."
4. 24 old men in homespun.
5. 24 old ladies in black with white bonnets and caps.
6. 24 boys in hickory shirts, blue pants and straw hats.
7. 24 girls in white and pink, with banner inscribed "The Wealth of Zion."
8. Citizens.

The 24 young men and the 24 young ladies, made a mutual presentation of banners, accompanied by an address from their respective leaders.

The procession moved to the residence of Prest. Aaron Johnson, where a beautiful white flag waved over the street, between the houses of Prest. Johnson and Bishop Miller, on which was inscribed, "Union is Strength, Knowledge is Power, Truth is Liberty, and will Prevail."

The guests of the day were received and took order as follows:

Springville Cotillion Band, the 24 young ladies; President and his Counselors; Patriarch and Chaplain; J. M. Stewart, orator of the day; Pioneers of 1847, with emblems and characteristic implements; Mormon Batallion; Bishops of the several wards.

On the returning to the Bowery, the Choir sang a hymn. Prayer by the Chaplain.

J. M. Stewart, Esq., delivered the following

ORATION.

Brethren, Sisters and Friends: It is with feelings of no common order that I undertake to deliver an oration on the present occasion. Many able tongues and pens have been employed during the last nine years, in speaking and writing of the great work accomplished by the "Pioneers" of '47. This day, nine years ago, a small band of our brethren, headed by Prest. Brigham Young, first set their feet and pitched their tents on the site where now stands Great Salt Lake City. We celebrate this day as the independence of the Latter Day Saints, not their independence of our National Government, but independence from mobocracy, with freedom to worship as we please.

After being persecuted and driven from "city to city" and from "synagogue to synagogue," after having suffered the loss of vast amounts of property and endured the martyrdom, in Carthage jail, of our Prophet and Patriarch, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, we left our pleasant and beautiful homes in Nauvoo, and in the summer of 1846, on the banks of the Missouri river, at a point called the Council Bluffs, the main body took up their "Winter Quarters" on the west side of the river, on the Omaha lands, near the present site of Florence.

From this point, early in the following spring, a chosen company, under Prest. B. Young, started across the great western plains, in search of a home for the Saints. After a tedious journey they arrived, on this memorable day, at the banks of city creek, in Great Salt Lake Valley, where they halted and began to sow and plant the seeds which they had brought.

Others followed, and by dint of perseverance and industry, have succeeded, to a considerable extent, in converting the barren wastes of many localities into fruitful fields, and in causing the "wilderness to blossom as the rose." Since then we have increased in numbers until we are sufficiently numerous to entitle us to the privileges of a sovereign State.

Instead of the howling of the wolf and the war-whoop of the savage, we now hear the songs of Zion and the hum of industry.

As a religious body we enjoy, in these secluded vales, the liberty of worshiping our Heavenly Father as to us seems right, reasonable and consistent; while our enemies do not hinder us in the exercise of these precious and constitutional rights.

Many are the privations and difficulties through which we have struggled; we have had to contend with drouth, the effects of which have to be overcome by irrigation. Many streams have been turned from their natural channels and caused to flow over the contiguous farm lands, to enable us to raise subsistence. But experience has proven that the waters of the smaller and more convenient streams are not sufficient to irrigate the vast quantities of land, which we find it necessary to cultivate to sustain ourselves and the incoming population, hence we shall be obliged to construct large canals at great expense, of which the Big Cottonwood and Big Spring creek canals are but a small beginning. But drouth is not all, myriads of insects have infested our fields and eaten our crops, thereby causing us to realize, to a goodly extent, the pinchings of want. But thank Heaven harvest has returned, for which we should indeed be joyful.

Considering the circumstances attending the settlement of these valleys, there is probably no region of our country that has ever been able to compare with this in the increase of its improvements and population.

The future results of the present grand achievements, time alone can determine; but we look forward to a time, not far distant, when we shall have officers of our own choosing, who will execute wholesome laws in righteousness.

The true greatness of any work is determined by the amount of good growing out of it; let us look at the amount of good resulting and to result from the work accomplished by the "Pioneers." A home has been provided where we can live in peace; here we can keep the commandments of the Lord and build up the Kingdom. Here we can build and inhabit, plant, reap, and enjoy all the fruits of our labor. Here, ere long, we shall see a Temple reared to the name of the Most High in which the ordinances pertaining to the Priesthood will be administered, and the Elders of Israel more prepared to deliver the message of salvation to the honest in heart all over the world, and to bring them to Zion, to assist in building up the Kingdom of the last days, that Zion may become the beauty and joy of the whole earth. That the blessing which God is ready to bestow upon the upright may rest upon you and all Saints, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Music by the Brass Band.

Song composed for the occasion;

ORIGINAL PIONEER SONG.

The Men of '76 and the Boys of '47.

BY P. M. WESTWOOD.

TUNE—"Le Petit Tambour."

Let others sing of noble deeds,
Performed in days of yore—
A theme more recent fills my lay,
One nearer to our door:
The men of '76 were brave—
We hold their mem'ry dear;
But not more noble—not more brave
Than the Mormon Pioneer.

CHORUS.

Then hurrah for the boys of '47!
Who trod the deserts drear,
To find for truth a mountain home—
Hurrah for the Pioneer!

Our fathers were a valiant race,
And fought for liberty,
And by their firm undauntedness
They made a nation free:
But their valiant sons of '47
Prepared the arduous way,
To wrest the "kingdom of our God"
From the gentile's iron sway.
Then hurrah, &c.

The men of '76, 'tis true,
Defied the tyrant's power;
They dimmed the glory of his arms
On plain and forted tower:
But the Pioneer fought death itself
And won the battle too, [scarce—
For they liv'd by faith when bread was
And weathered the first year through.
Then hurrah, &c.

The "revolution" heroes slew
Some thousands of the foe,
And shed the base invader's blood
In ignominious flow:
But the Mormon's foes by millions fell—
Both grasshoppers and snakes—
Besides red Utes, and crickets black,
Around these mountain lakes.
Then, hurrah, &c.

True liberty we here enjoy,
And freedom to do right;
Here mobbish violence can't crush
The meek with brutish might,
And truth, long trodden in the streets
Of gentile nations far,
Has here a home—a resting place,
Which villains cannot mar.
Then, hurrah, &c.

They told us that we could not live
Upon these sterile plains,
Where no refreshing showers were seen
To bless the lab'rer's pains:
But the desert vales began to bloom—
The barren spots to smile,
And fruitful seasons still reward
The farmer's patient toil.
Then, hurrah, &c.

Our laws are good, and useful too,
By inspiration given—
They teach us how to live on earth
And how to make our heaven.
The thronging crowds in years to come
Who'll dwell so happy here,
Will always hail the Twenty-Fourth,
And bless the Pioneer!
Then, hurrah, &c.

Music by the band.

Speeches by Prest. Johnson, Counselor Curtis, N. Bulkely and W. J. Earl; interspersed with toasts and songs.

TOASTS.

The young Gentlemen and Ladies of Springville—May they ever be found walking in the line of their duty, and continually striving, through industry and diligence, to obtain and treasure up in store such riches as the whole world, though they may envy, can never tear away—Wisdom and Knowledge. E. Wood.

"The Lion of the Lord"—May he never cease to roar. J. M. Stewart.

"The True Born Sons of Zion"—Possessors of the Eternal Priesthood, defenders of Zion's banners, beloved by the daughters of Zion and protectors of American liberties; may their conduct be such, as shall win the affections of the virtuous of all climes, until their names shall be had in everlasting remembrance, while shouts of Hosannah to God and the Lamb, shall resound to the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills. Noah Packard.

Israel's defence—May you always raise plenty of wheat and corn, pay your tithing, be just unto man and faithful to God. P. A. Johnson.

The Pioneers—First in their hearts, the location of the Kingdom of God, then their wives and children. F. Boggs.

This Day—May it always be commemorated with joy and gladness by all the lovers of liberty. F. Boggs.

A health to our brave Pioneers,
Who did the desert roam,
And by the help of Israel's God,
Have found the Saints a home.

They like the "Pilgrim Fathers" were,
Or Nephi with his rod;
They sought and found our mountain home,
Where saints can worship God.

Success unto the Pioneers,
And may we ne'er forget
To ask the Lord to prosper all
The Saints in Deseret.

Miss C. C. Stanton.

The songs were sung by H. M. Dougall, R. Menzies, A. Wheelock and S. R. Alford.

Two hours intermission.

At 2 1-2 p. m., the people again assembled; dancing commenced and continued until 7, with the exception of one hour, devoted to singing and recitations by R. Menzies, H. M. Dougall, John Wilson, Mrs. Brounall and Miss C. C. Stanton.

Benediction by the Chaplain at 7 o'clock.

Noah T. Guyman, Marshal; O. Crow and A. F. Macdonald, assistant Marshals.

Chaplain, Noah Packard.

PROVO CITY.

At day-break, a discharge of artillery, volleys of musketry, hoisting the National and Territorial flags in various parts of the city, and music by the Martial Band.

At 8, another discharge of artillery and musketry, with music by the bands, invited the large concourse of citizens to assemble at the Bowery.

At 9, the infantry fired a feu-de-joie, a signal to form the procession as follows:

1. Company of infantry, under the command of Lieut. Col. F. G Fellows, for front and side guard.
2. Provo Philharmonic Band, in carriage drawn by four horses.
3. President of the Provo Stake of Zion and suite, in a carriage.
4. Patriarchs and members of the High Council.
5. Provo Choir.
6. Committee of Arangements.
7. Speakers of the day, Reporter and Chaplain.
8. Martial Band with colors.
9. Officers of the Nauvoo Legion, mounted and with their banners.
10. Mormon Battallion of 1846, with colors.
11. Pioneers of 1847, carrying implements of husbandry and mechanism.
12. City officers: Mayor, Aldermen, Councilors, Marshal and Police.
13. 24 young gentlemen dressed in black, with banners.
14. 24 young ladies dressed in white, with banners.
15. Visitors.
16. 19 Bishops and their Counselors, each at the head of the citizens of his ward, and carrying appropriate banners.

The procession, ordered by Messrs. Wm. B. Pace and E. Billingsley, Marshals of the day, paraded the principal streets of the city, and were seated in the Bowery.

Prayer by A. Moore, Chaplain. A. Williams, Esq., Orator of the day, eloquently, contrasted our present condition and prospects with those when the Pioneers of '47 first entered the vales of Deseret, and was followed with speeches by Messrs. Wm. A. Folletto and Thomas Woolsey. A volunteer and enthusiastic round of three cheers for the 24th.

TOASTS.

"The Mormon Battalion."--May they be blest with long lives and many wives. A. M.

The 24 Young Men—Zion's Watchmen—May they learn wisdom and be enabled to bear off the Kingdom, until Zion is redeemed and Satan bound. L. N. S.

The 24 Young Ladies--May their virtue ever shine. L. J. N.

The Constitution of Deseret—Like the sun, moon and stars, ever shining. J. C. S.

Our Delegates to Congress—May they never cease, until Deseret shall become a free, independent and sovereign State. J. C. S.

Prest. J. C. Snow, addressed the assembly, expressing himself pleased with the arrangements proceedings and spirit of the day; urging the citizens to renew their exertions to increase their happiness and prosperity, by every lawful means in their power, by remaining faithful to the privileges we enjoy and perpetuating the remembrance of these throughout succeeding generations.

Benediction by the Chaplain.

In the evening, numerous balls, wisely conducted in the various Halls and some private dwellings of the city ended as happy, peaceful and heart cheering a day as has ever been witnessed by the citizens of Provo.

Music by the string band.

Song composed by Henry Maiben.

Music by Brass Band.

Comic song, by Thomas Pierce.

At 2 p. m., the assembly repaired to a spacious bowery, erected for the purpose, under which were six tables, each 300 feet long bountifully spread with the luxuries and dainties of life, including wine, the product of our mountain home.

At 3, the procession was reformed, escorted the Presidency to their residence, and returned to the Public Square, where the Marshal of the day returned his hearty thanks to the several officers, for their promptitude in carrying out the order of the day, and dismissed the procession into the hands of the commanders of the various sections.

At 4, the citizens assembled in the Bowery for dancing and other recreations.

At 7, the Ogden City Dramatic Association, under direction of W. Poulter, presented, "Luke the Laborer," followed by comic and sentimental songs, and hornpipe dancing, and concluded with the mirth provoking farce, "Raising the Wind."

Our celebration passed off in a manner characteristic of Mormon festivals. Peace, order and a most perfect union of feeling prevailed, and not a note of discord in the vast multitude. M. D. Maeiuck, Reporter.

LAKE CITY.

Capt. Bourne's company of infantry announced the dawn of day by a volley of musketry, and the city flag was raised upon the Council House.

The rear was brought up by a detachment of infantry, under the command of Lieut. Stoker.

They proceeded to the residence of Bishop L. E. Harrington, received him and his counsel between the martial music and the committee, in a carriage drawn by 4 horses, and marched around the city, firing a salute at each corner. Three cheers were given for the Pioneers of '47, three for the Mormon Battalion, three for the marshal of day.

The procession was dismissed for half an hour, to meet at a bowery made for the occasion.

At 10 a. m., a volley of musketry was fired for the people to assemble.

Prayer by John McNeal, chaplain of the day.

Song by the choir.

Bishop Harrington addressed the people, comparing the object of our celebration to that of the different nations of the earth, and the privilege we have of celebrating the day the leaders of this mighty people found an asylum from mobocracy and oppression.

Wm. Kelley related the deliverance the God of Israel wrought out for the battalion, according to the words of the servants of God.

Music.

Thomas Wrigley, orator of the day, addressed the people on the rise of the kingdom of God, and showed how soon it would fill the whole earth.

Music.

Song by Thomas J. Filcher and daughter.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, OCT. 18, 1856.

Napoleon, Palmerston, Alexander and Bomba.

THE papers from Europe for the last few weeks have indicated that trouble was likely to spring up between the two first-named gentlemen on the one side, and Bomba, king of the two Sicilies, on the other. By the arrival of the Persia, on Tuesday, we learn of the newly crowned and anointed Alexander II. of Russia putting his finger in the pie also.

Though the successful Coup d'Etat of December, 1851, disarmed revolutionists in France, gagged the press, and struck with despair the prostrate nations that looked to the polite nation as the pioneer of liberty, the spirit of discontent throughout Europe has been nevertheless unsubdued. While France has lain prostrate at the feet of her master, Italy has been in motion—partly from hope, partly from the excitement of additional chains to the already overwhelming burden that has ground to the dust the fairest and best of her inhabitants. Priestcraft, soldiercraft and kingcraft have blighted, ruined and despoiled the "Garden of the World," and smothered in the bosom that gave it birth every noble and generous sentiment. Since Pius IX. returned to the city of the seven hills, under the protection of Louis Napoleon's bayonets, the slavery of mind, a thousand times more poignant than that of the body, to which the Italians have been subjected, has been of the most revolting and debasing character. "The powers that be" throughout the Italian peninsula have employed the most shrewd and devoted of spies, of every rank and of both sexes, to report of everybody and everything, till, in reality, no man can there say "his soul is his own." The sanctum—home—has lost its sacredness. The prying confessors have too often found those of a man's own household to betray him for the warmth of his devotion to his God in the family prayer circle. For no more than such devotion, when unlicensed by the stamp of catholic authority, have men and women of unblemished character and of the highest reputation for human virtues been consigned to the dungeon, loaded with galling chains, and denied the slightest intercourse with relatives without. Thus, to the agonies of the body have been added the anguish and anxiety of mind, under which many an ornament to society has succumbed and died, uncared for and unwept. Starvation in filthy, pestiferous prisons has closed the eyes of men of rank and talent of the busy city, as well as those of the humble peasants of the lonely cottage, who have dared to bow the knee to their God and consider his laws superior to the prescribed enactments of their rulers; and in this infernal work Bomba has played a conspicuous part, and heaped upon his head black and bloody sins which vengeance one day will repay to him or his heirs after him. Through the constant residence of zealous Protestants among the British aristocracy on the continent, aided by the vigilant watching of Genevese and French Protestant ministers, independent in purse, roaming in Italy for the benefit of their health, and now and again through the disclosures of a liberated victim of another nation, reluctantly delivered up by Bomba, has the world been made acquainted with the awful cruelties to which Neapolitan subjects have been forced to submit.

England's Protestant sympathies, ever glad to catch her old Catholic mother at dirty work, have been awakened in behalf of the oppressed victims of bigotry and intolerance, and piles of petitions have been laid at the feet of the English premier for his interference. Palmerston cares as little for the one religion as he does for the other, and would just as soon see them fight it out alone as not; but he knows how to be popular, and he has got on Bomba's track, and exhorts him to gentleness. Napoleon, who sees he has everything to lose and nothing to gain by revolution at home, fears that an example abroad might be catching, and he undertakes to lecture the Neapolitan tyrant likewise. Palmerston and Louis have spoken separately, and that failing, they have unitedly sent their remonstrances; but the old despot, strengthened by the blessings, favors, and councils of Rome, sulks and tells them to look at home, that neither France nor England is without sin, and they had better direct their attention to home before they interfere with his domestic rule. Conscience striken with their own defects, yet dissatisfied with their discomfiture, they have resolved to try and frighten if they dare not, presently, coerce. They have made out their ultimatum, on the rejection of which the ambassadors from the Tuileries and St. James are to quit, and an allied fleet, already waiting sailing orders at Spithead and Toulon, will be sent to protect, if need be, French and English residents in Bomba's dominions. The shuffling, pusillanimous, tyrant, boy Emperor of Austria, has been talking about joining the "Western allies" in this, much as he talked of joining them against Russia, but again backs out, and means to offer only his "good offices" of mediation between his disagreeing friends.

The contemplated naval demonstration in the Bay of Naples gives umbrage to Russia, and before her troops have yet quitted Turkish territory, where they never should have been, she begins to lecture on honesty and honor among kings. Prince Gortschakoff has addressed a circular to the Russian ambassadors at foreign courts on the subject, that the nations may have no misunderstanding of the views and opinions of his august master thereon, in which he accuses France and England with gross inconsistency of conduct. The justification of their hostility to Russia in the late war being based on "respect for the right and independence of governments," he inquires about the continued occupation of Greece by these two powers, and the present pressure on Bomba. Diplomatists are the most cunning of men, and the most cunning of diplomatists is he who can say the most in the fewest words, and those of the obscurest kind, so that those addressed may guess at their interpretation as best they can, leaving him that addresses at liberty to acknowledge the interpretation that best suits his circumstances at the time he is cornered for a plain interpretation. Gortschakoff, therefore, slips out in the manifesto—"As to the employment of our material forces, the Emperor reserves to himself his free judgment." This has brought out a variety of interpretations in the European press; it is, however, generally considered as Russia's intimation of sending ships of war to the Bay of Naples to keep watch on those of France and England. After two years' fruitless coaxing to get the Russian fleet out of Cronstadt and Sebastapol, Europe may well feel frightened at the approaching danger!! Gortschakoff repudiates all interference with the tyrant, "as it is the incontestable rights of sovereignity that the King governs his subjects as he thinks proper." That is very beautiful. The Kings of France thought so till the gullotine preached another power, and everything indicates that a clear stage and no favor in Italy is all that is wanting by Bomba's down-trodden subjects to teach him the same lesson. Whether Italian patriots, who have long watched a chance, will be simple enough to regard the allied fleet as the protector of a clear stage, and accept it as the signal for a general rising is the present interesting question in Europe. For some months back a subscription has been making throughout the Eastern continent, and particularly in Piedmont, to purchase 10,000 muskets, to be presented to the first people that shall demand them for the overthrow of despotism. The Western allies give this no encouragement, and should the Neopolitans confide in them they are certain to be disappointed, for neither Palmerston nor Napoleon will work one hour more for the redemption of down-trodden Italy now than they did for prostrate Poland and Hungary in the late Eastern war, and whoever expects more from them is favored with a robust faith. No one who has ever trodden Italian soil and seen the degradation, squalid misery and superstition of the people, and the iron heel of despotism upon the intelligent and gifted, can wish other than success to the oppressed when the day of reckoning comes; but he is no friend to the cause of Italian redemption that would trust to anything real and tangible to further that end coming from the present head of the English Government—when arm in arm with Napoleon III. and in friendship with the Kaizer of Austria, even on their fairest promises, far less on mere surmisings of what they might do as at present. When a down-trodden people are united and determined to be free—to worship their God untramelled by superstitious creeds—to possess the right of self-government, with the desire to do right, and will trust in the God of battles, and commit their cause to His right arm, as did the fathers of our country—they shall be free. Unfortunately, however, for Italy no such sentiments yet honor the bosoms of the people or their leaders. The same spirit and egotism that split up and rendered Republicanism powerless in France are the curses of Italy. Scepticism and crude notions of socialism, much as it was in France, fill the minds of the fighting portion who pant for freedom and are the rocks on which they have made shipwreck time and again. The only hope for Italy, weak as it may be, is in a vigorous and united cry in favor of Victor Emanuel, King of Sardinia—a cry that is more likely to find favor in the ears of France and England than the "Republic, social and democratic." He has a small, but brave, well-disciplined army, as a neucleus of strength, to begin with, and men around him of the first talent as statesmen and warriors, who desire nothing better than to see Italy, one and undivided, under a constitutional government.

We wish liberty to Europe, but our own personal observations there have convinced us that morally the nations are at present unworthy of it, and had they it to-morrow they would strangle it, as did the French twice before the Napoleons gave it the coup de grace.

Hon. Geo. A. Smith.

By the letter of our colleague in another column, it will be seen that he has had another narrow escape on the railroad. When he came to visit us in the beginning of August, their was a smash up of the very carriage in which he had been travelling, but by which he had been left at a station unintentionally less than an hour previous to the occurrence of the accident and so escaped. Blessed are they that put their trust in the Lord, for they shall not be cut off till they have performed their mission here below.

News From The Plains.

THROUGH the politeness of President Erastus Snow, we are favored with an extract from a letter addressed to him by Capt. A. O. Smoot, dated Platte River, 30 miles above Ash Hollow, Sept. 16th, by which we learn that there are fears entertained at Fort Laramie for the safety of Col. A. W. Babbitt. He states that the Colonel met him a short distance from Fort Kearney, thirteen days previous, since which time he had not been heard of. He says:

"We have no doubt that he is killed, likewise his driver and Bro. Thomas Sutherland. They left my Camp on the 3d instant, at 30 miles above Kearney, and crossed on the North side supposing it to be safer travelling among the emigration. They designed making Laramie in six days; but they have not been seen or heard of since, and it is the opinion of all, that they are cut off by the Cheyennes.

"There have been three Companies destroyed during the present month, including A. W. Babbitts. Among them was Thomas Margetts, from the Valley and a small party of six or eight persons with him, including his wife and children, and another small party from California, in which three were killed and two wounded, property all destroyed."

Though no trace of Col. Babbitt or companions yet justify the abandonment of all hopes, we should not be at all surprised if the surmisings of Elder Smoot and the folks at Fort Laramie are too well founded. The Colonel has hitherto been a successful traveller on the plains, and if we mistake not, has crossed and re-crossed from Salt Lake to the States sixteen times, during which he never was subjected to any particular annoyance from the Indians. When he last passed through this city from Washington, on his way West, he spoke of his unlimited confidence in the honor of the Indians, and said he would sooner trust them before he would pale faces in a similar position. From past friendly relations between him and the Indians, his heart was confiding; and dreaming of no danger, with nonchalance he entered upon a dreary journey of a thousand miles with little or no protection. The cry on the frontiers is loud against the Cheyennes, by whom he is supposed to have fallen, and without doubt the government will soon take some steps to protect the lives of travellers in future.

The Last Hoax.

"MORMONS IN PARIS.—A letter from Paris, under date of Sept. 9th, says: Several Mormons, men and women, numbering, it is said, nearly a hundred, are now in Paris. They profess to have come here to make proselytes, but, wisely doubting their success in this mission, they apply themselves subsidiarily to commercial pursuits, and are buying Parisian knick-knacks against flour, which they propose to ship from their colony."

The above clipping is going the round of the papers furnishing another evidence of the gullibility of our generation. Flour from Utah in exchange for Parisian knickknacks!! There is more than one "John Stewart" in the field. We cut the above extract about flour and knick-knacks from the St. Louis Sunday Herald, and just as we were reading the "proof," that paper of October 8th was brought into our sanctum, in which we find a racy piece about "Mormonism in Denmark"—a nice little story about a "converted Jew," "a little dried-up tailor," and a "jolly fat butcher." We were going to suggest something more creditable for a joke than such humbugging nonsense, but, just as we dipped our pen into the ebony fluid, we remembered it was the St. Louis Sunday Herald—that's enough; as well try to wash a nigger white as preach reformation there.

Celebrations of the Twenty-Fourth of July.

OUR front page is filled with the celebration of the-ever-to-be-remembered Twenty-Fourth of July by the Saints, in different portions of Utah Territory, and next week's front page will be devoted to the same object. While many of our readers will no doubt be pleased to learn of the location and position of former acquaintances, whose names appear in the report—the sentiments and spirit of the people manifested on the occasion rebuke the wholesale slanders of those who are eternally croacking about the opposition of the Mormons to the Constitution and the awful state of misery and discontent in Utah.

To Subscribers.

FROM the commencement of THE MORMON to the present time, we have endeavored to use the same quality of paper, but, as our subscribers undoubtedly have remarked, we have not done so. In a Picayunish age like ours, it is possible that subscribers, unacquainted with us, may have thought that an inferior quality of paper now and again made us dollars richer; in justice, therefore, to our self, we deem it our duty to say, that we pay the price the paper maker demands, and instead of wishing to profit by "screwing" him or supplying an inferior article, we have time and again told the person who supplies us that we would pay a higher price than he asked to be certain of uniformity in quality; but with a slight tinge of crimson on the cheek, we have been as often assured that it was unnecessary and entirely a mistake that should on no account occur again, and thus we have confided to one and another, time and again, and realized that honesty is a rare virtue. Subscribers will henceforth understand.

Coming Emigration.

WE are frequently interrogated about how money can be forwarded to England for the use of persons coming by our emigration. To prevent the needless waste of our time and that of others, we beg to inform all who may hereafter seek information, that money sent to this office, with the full and plainly written address of the sender and that of the person to be assisted in England, will be placed to the credit of the latter on the books of the President of the European Churches residing at Liverpool.

The Work in England.

BY the last number of the Millennial Star we learn that President O. Pratt, has laid before the British Saints, through that paper, a plan by which he proposes to preach the gospel to the whole nation in one year. He purposes revising his former series of pamphlets, to which he is now adding others that may extend the entire series to twenty numbers, and with these in circulation on the plan he sets forth for adoption, the work will be accomplished. The plan is excellent and certain to accomplish great good.

By a recent number of the Star we learn that President Ezra T. Benson and Elder John Kay, were on the 9th ult., to leave Hull by the steamer for Hamburg en route for Copenhagen, Denmark.

Books.

WE expect daily a large stock of Hymn Books from England, when we shall be able to supply the numerous calls that have of late unavoidably not been attended to. Orders previously given should, to secure prompt attention, be renewed. Please send the cash with the order to save disappointment.

California.

BY the arrival of the George Law the news from the golden State are more favorable. In the summary of the city news is the following:

"After the storm has come the inevitable calm. San Francisco is as quiet and harmonious as a country village. The rooms of the Vigilance Committee have been closed, the arms put away, and the sentinels removed. The police find few to arrest, few deaths take place, few are sick, few are out of good-nature, few are marrying, births are numerous, and the weather is warm."

Mr. Herbert, their member from Congress, arrived there on the 8th ult., and was treated with indifference. The following item is cool enough: "Mr. Herbert, a member of Congress, arrived by the last steamer, and is treated as though he were a suspicious stranger. The heavy petitions requesting him to resign, and abandon affection for this State, have been presented to him."

On the 8th, Madame Lola Montes's diamonds were sold at auction. They brought nearly $10,000. She intends devoting this money to the education of Mr. Folland's children in New York. He was her agent, and was drowned while coming from Australia recently. Folland is said to have been the only man that Lola ever sincerely loved, and his accidental death has completely changed her from her ordinary gaiety.

On the 5th, a destructive fire broke out in Marysville, in which some forty buildings, mostly occupied by Mexicans and Chinese, were destroyed. The town of Colusi was entirely destroyed by fire about the same time.

Correspondence from Hon. G. A. Smith.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 7, 1856.

ELDER T. B. H. STENHOUSE:—Dear Brother: Shortly after parting with you on the steamboat, on Thursday evening, I took the cars, and had a cold, uncomfortable ride till I arrived in Buffalo, at 10 o'clock, the following evening. I here took the express train for Chicago, and arrived at the Sherman House about 8 o'clock on Saturday evening, when, not to break the sacredness of the Sabbath by the snorting of the iron horse, we rested till next night. In the morning, feeling refreshed with a good night's rest, which I required much, I went to the Catholic cathedral to learn something more of the religion of that people, whose cross on Independence Rock causes so many folks to talk at the present time. We had excellent music, and an eloquent discourse designed to show the benefits in a moral and religious point of view, resulting from the reverence accorded by devout Catholics to the memory of the Virgin Mary and other Saints, whose likeness adorn Catholic churches.

After having faithfully kept the railroad company's decree against Sabbath travelling, midnight found me en-route for St. Louis. The night was very foggy and exceedingly dark. Near Dwight's station in the open priarie, at 3 o'clock A. M., the Chicago express train came in collision with the St. Louis express train, instantly demolishing both engines, tenders and baggage cars, and otherwise seriously damaging the trains. One brakeman had his jaws broken, both legs broken twice each, and one knee smashed. A Dutch doctor, my fellow passenger, trimmed off the smashed knee, and would probably have pruned still further, had it not been apparent that the poor brakeman would die without further assistance; the amputation of the other limbs was consequently deferrad. Some others were injured, one severely, and the passengers generally were not a little excited, but when the cause and extent of the disaster became known, there was a general feeling of gratitude manifested among the passengers for their preservation. The broken cars furnished abundant fuel, and huge fires soon ighted the prairie to warn all passing cars of their danger. Our patience was taxed ten hours before we were able to resume our journey again. I arrived at Eld. Snow's at 3 o'clock this morning, where I was instantly made welcome, and with a heart full of gratitude, I lay down to rest, having been without sleep almost four nights. At 10 o'clock, I attended a Council meeting of the official members of this Conference. In the afternoon Eld. Snow delivered a discourse to the Danish brethren in their own language. There is a good spirit amongst the brethren in this place. Remember me to Eld. Taylor and the brethren in the office, in which I am joined with brother Snow, who is very much fatigued with the duties of the Conference. My health is improved since I left New York. Yours, &c.,

GEO. A. SMITH.

Kansas.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 13.

We have meagre returns from Kansas, indicating the election of Mr. Whitfield to Congress without opposition. No disturbance took place.

Address by Mrs S. M. Kimball.

THE following short Address was delivered at the Polysophical Society, Great Salt Lake City, a short time since, by the above named lady and forwarded to us last mail. It's publication here may serve other "Gentlemen and Ladies." A hint to the wise is sufficient:

Gentlemen and Ladies:—I have been invited to address you on the subject of Physiology. If I found myself competent to do justice to the subject, I should feel honored, on the principle that we are honorable in proportion to our usefulness, for I consider this one of the most useful sciences that can engage the attention of individuals, or a community.

What mind can contemplate the human organism in its delicate and harmonious arrangement, without rendering homage to the wisdom of that God, who, has so wisely adapted his children for the most exquisite enjoyments, and the most exalted attainments. But alas! my heart bleeds while I contemplate the abuses that the votaries, of the God of ignorance are continually heaping upon this, the noblest work of God. I think it must have been under a similar train of reflection that a wise man exclaimed, "man know thyself!"

The word Physiology conveys to my mind an idea of life, health, and happiness, all of which it appears, to me, to be our Father's good pleasure that at least Saints should enjoy.

We are offered eternal life, "The greatest gift of God," on condition of our compliance with a certain code of laws. Nature seems partial to this arrangement, and in like manner establishes her code. She calls and ordains Physiology with wisdom to teach, and justice to execute said laws. To this Council or Quorum is committed no apology for the sin of ignorance. They are instructed carefully to note every sin or transgression of nature's laws, and strenuously to exact the penalty thereunto affixed. They are also instructed to preserve their reckonings and adjust them down "to the third and fourth generations."

Physiology after having delivered an instructive lecture on the organization of man, exhorts all nature's children to listen to the "words of wisdom." Wisdom says, strong drink is not good for the body. Justice bears testimony to the truth of wisdom's sayings and adds, if thou wilt disregard them, I will diffuse into each draught the seeds of corruption, and thou shalt no longer appear before me in thy former purity, strength, and majesty.

Physiology teaches that the saliva secreted by the glands of the mouth is made "to butter our bread" wisdom teaches that tobacco is not good for the body. Justice says if thou wilt use it, the butter with which nature so kindly provided thee, shall be diluted, the delicate and exquisite taste with which she endowed thee, shall be perverted; and thou shalt cram things that are unwholesome and impure.

Physiology teaches that our constitutions are adapted to the natural elements that surround us. Wisdom says hot drinks are not good. Justice says if thou wilt use them thy nerves shall refuse to perform their proper office, thine intellect shall be clouded, and thou shalt fall another degree in the scale of moral degradation.

Physiology teaches that nature provides for her own. Wisdom says herbs, and fruits, are good in their season. Justice says if thou wilt use them, with prudence, and thanksgiving; thou shalt in nowise loose thy reward.

Physiology teaches that vegetable food makes better blood than animal food, and consequently is better adapted to nourish and sustain the body. Wisdom says animal food is not gook except in times of famine or extreme hunger. Justice says if thou wilt glut thyself on those things that have been denied thee, thou shalt be sorely scourged until thou wilt yield obedience to nature's laws.

Physiology says, finally, if thou wilt obey all my instructions, I will reward the with strength of body, vigor of mind, and long life. Wisdom says, and, I will add unto thee great stores of knowledge, even hidden treasures. And Justice says the destroying angel shall pass thee by, even as he did the children of Israel, and shall not slay thee.

Nature's God listens to the decisions of the council and bows an approbative amen.

In conclusion I would respectfully suggest the following questions, for the consideration of young Ladies in pursuit of companions for life, (remembering that Saints never die).

1st. Is the companion of thy choice a righteous man, a man of integrity before the God and Father of his spirit?

If so, he will abound in faith and good words.

2d. Is he a man true to nature, that is, has he unperverted tastes and habits?

If so he peremptorily discards all superfluities from his toilet, and his table.

3d. Does he know himself?

If so, impulse is held by a steady rein; while the councils of reason, guide, and govern, all his acts.

Young Ladies, when you find such a man you may cheerfully, yea joyfully resign to him your heart, and your hand: He will lead you in flowery paths, and shield you from the sharpest thorns that pierce the human heart.

Gov. Reeder's Challenge Accepted.

EASTON, Pa., Oct. 14, 1856.

The republicans held a large and enthusiastic meeting here last night. Senator Wilson was the principal speaker. Gov Reeder was present, and made a brief speech, stating that his challenge had been accepted by the democrats, and that they had selected one of their ablest champions to meet and discuss the pending political questions of the day with him. The meeting, he said, would take place at National Hall, Philadelphia, on the 16th inst. The Hon. Benjamin F. Hallet is the speaker on the democratic side.

WISDOM requires three things; knowledge to discern, judgement to weigh, and the resolution to determine.

Mahomedanism.

From a Mormon Missionary.

WE have received the following interesting letter from Elder Musser, who arrived last July in the English metropolis from the East Indies, whither he had been for some time on a mission. We are no advocate for letters "a yard long" in general, as they almost always justify the sentiment, "had I time I would write you a shorter letter." To this maxim, however, Elder M.'s letter is certainly an exception; though more than two yards long, it will be read with satisfaction. We invite him to write us again:

SUNDERLAND, Eng., Sept. 17th, 1856.

PRESIDENT TAYLOR.—Dear Brother: My worthy pastor, Henry Lunt, has requested me to write you a letter a yard long, I presume as a partial self-exculpation or as a kind of apology for his neglect; in compliance with which injunction I beg to hand you, through this laconic medium, a few items of my experience, &c., since I left Zion, "my own mountain home," in 1852. Since that time I've travelled nearly 40,000 miles, over land and water, by steam and wind, and being quite a pedestrian, I performed considerable of this distance on "shank's mare." Inasmuch as you have been posted up with the leading incidents of our journey and voyage to India, I will give you a few items on the chief characteristics of the people of that far-off land. The proverb, "that one half of the world do not know how the other live," is a true one, and has been literally verified in my last three or four years' experience.

India, or Hindoostan, contains nearly 150,000,000 of inhabitants. The major portion of this grand total are natives. The Mohammedans, forming a chief part, are followers of the Arabian prophet, Mohammed, who was born in the year 570, at Mecca, a city of Arabia. Biographers inform us, that after spending a number of years in trading, at and between Mecca and Damascus, and being of a religious turn of mind, the prophet set to work to found a new ecclesiastical dynasty, and accordingly retired to a cave, and, with the assistance of a Persian Jew and two christians, framed the celebrated Koran, which he afterwards palmed upon the credulous as a divine record, revealed, as he asserted, to him by piece-meals through the angel Gabriel—some portions at Mecca and some at Medina, another Arabian city not a great distance from Mecca. The Koran, originally in manuscript, was, after the prophet's decease, collected and compiled into the present volume. It was and is, to this day, written autographically in the Arabic dialect, which the good Moslems aver is the most primitive and pure language now extant. The fundamental doctrinal inculcation of the Koran is, "There is but one God and Mohammed is his prophet." This sacred volume, though clothed in metaphorical, allegorical and parabolical mysticism, directs the faithful Moslem in his secular as well as spiritual duties, revealing the mind and will of God on the every-day affairs, duties and obligations of life as they transpire between man and man, and man and beast, &c. But, for the commentations of the Mohammedan divines (who, by the way, differ in opinion as to the true meaning of the numerous obscure passages of the Koran as prolificly as our christian doctors do about the true solution of our scriptures,) the Koran would be a sealed book to all who read it. The faithful Mussulman look upon their Koran with peculiar respect and veneration. They never hold it below their waist whilst reading it, neither would they sit upon it for the world. There are several versions of it in Arabic, besides one or two in Latin, one in French, and one very good English translation. The latter I have read. Many traditions regarding the verbal sayings and doings of the prophet have been handed down, the counterpart of which the doctors endeavor to reconcile with the contents of the Koran, and thus unveil some of the mysteries in which that book was originally enveloped. Mahommet died in his sixty-third year. About three years before his death, a young woman administered a dose of poison to him, by inserting it into a leg of mutton, on which he freely regaled himself, and which it is authentically asserted assisted in bringing him to a premature grave. She replied, when asked relative to the object she had in doing as she did, "I thought it a good mode of testing the divine authenticity of his mission and calling." He died at Medina, where he was buried, and an urn, enclosed in the holy chapel, constitutes his sepulchre, which is surrounded with iron trellis-work, and is accessible to no one. Religiously and socially the Mohammedans of India are truly a peculiar race of beings. They observe one stereotyped manner of worship, which consists chiefly in repeating the same monotonous prayers at stated hours five times daily, and as much oftener as desirable, observing to turn their faces towards their sacred Mecca while performing their genuflections. Their worship also consists in part in performing pilgrimages and ablutions, giving alms, observing fasts and feasts, &c. As a general thing, they are kind and clement to one another, ready at all times to relieve the indigent, and more especially so if the solicitous applicants are of their own peculiar caste. Mohammedans, like all other religious orientals, are divided and subdivided into numerous religious castes and factions. Mahomet, through the Koran, informs us that Ishmael, the son of Hagar, was the lad that Abraham offered up and God demanded in sacrifice; and to this day they keep up an annual ede or goat festival in commemmoration of that event. He looks upon Adam, Noah, Abraham, and most of the prophets, and Jesus and His apostles, as being of God divinely commissioned to represent and promote the interests of Heaven and the human family during their respective epochs. Jesus, he avers, was a great prophet, but not the Son of God. They look upon this tenet of the christian religion as extremely blasphemous. Portions of the Ten Commandments they observe, and others they discard. They keep no Sabbath; it is expunged by the Koran. They will neither eat nor touch swine flesh; and if a piece is accidentally or otherwise put into any vessel belonging to them, they will abandon it at once and institute measures for damages against the aggressor. I have heard of cases wherein boats and carriages have been abandoned for no other reason.

The Hindoos form a chief portion of the population of Hindoostan, and, like the Musulmen, are not behind in peculiar characteristics, social, domestic and religious.

Their entire superstructure is based upon a heterogenous mass of discordant elements, clothed in a profound casting of mythological mysticism, which none can fairly and clearly define or expound but the learned Brahman padries or priests. They boast of having an incredible number (which amount to hundreds of thousands) of gods or idols of their respect and veneration. Their religious books written auto—and hypographically principally in the ancient Sanscret language (which is now absolete) number upwards of 150. They contain stories and fables which they assert are of divine origin. Some of these are truly disgusting, others are nonsensical and silly. The Brahmin in his expositions of these divine records, reads with all gravity of times when the brute creation held polemical discussions upon religious and other topics and made mathematical calculations, &c., &c. I've not unfrequently had such stories related to me with profound gravity, and which of course excited sympathy in me. They tell of some of the Herculean feats of their immortal and thrice celestialised gods; when in their own defence they would take up mountains and crush their enemies with them—when they would get astride of one large mountain, and with a minature one in each hand, go forth to meet their Leviathan antagonists.

The Hindoos are very zealous in their religious observances. Many thousands annually throng the roads leading from their native Hamlets to the notorious idol and car of Juggernaut. Many of these miserable beings measure the entire length of the road with their bodies. In doing penance, thousand hire their priests to run cold and hot irons through their tongues, lips, sides, back, ears, &c., and go about for hours and sometimes days with irons thus adjusted dangling as they walk, others mix the excrements and other elements of the sacred cow and her kind with their food. Others again are obliged to go to the sanctified Ganga or Ganges and perform their penetential ablutions, in that hallowed but nevertheless filthy stream. All such tokens of repentance are enjoined, for to us most trifling offences. Should a Hindoo eat of the flesh of the sacred cow or her kind, which is an offence of the greatest magnitude and of an almost unpardonable nature, he is obliged to go to the holy city of Benares, and there go through a thorough rotine of ablutions in the Ganges and observe "dear knows" how many more rites pertaining to the cleansing ordinance, before he can be cleansed and brought to his original purity. They won't even drink of the water that is conveyed in the skins of these hallowed animals. The waters of the Ganges and her tributaries are to the Hindoos, what the waters of the river Jordan are to thousands of christians and chistian potentates who send to that sanctified stream for water to sprinkle their royal offspring with. The ship "Uiobe" on which Elder Leonard and myself went to Bombay from Calcutta in 1854, had in her hold five gallons of Hooghly river (an arm of the Ganges) water, nicely sealed and labelled for some Hindoos in Bombay, who paid one rupee or two shillings per gallon freight on it! Another aggravated offence is to eat food previously prepared for an European or any other caste man; or to drink or eat out of a vessel previously used or touched by a person of any other caste i. e. after such vessel is bought, sanctified and set apart for their especial use. No European or other person of different caste dare enter the private dwelling of an orthodox Hindoo. If you honor them with a visit, they will politely give you a place in the veranda to sit, but will not allow you to enter their sanctuary.

A great many Brahmins believe in the transmigration of the soul i. e. when the soul or spirit leaves this human tabernacle it takes up its abode in the tabernacle of a cow, ass, monkey, &c., according to its merits, of course the highest ambition is to become a cow, which many assert is the mother of the human family.

The Hindoos burn their dead when they are able to procure fuel. In some cases where the relative is too poor to buy sufficient wood he obtains what he can and burns as much of the body as possible, and that which is left unconsumed is thrown into some stream or left for the vulture and jackal to regale upon. The practice of burning the living wife or wives with the dead body of the husband, which is called Suttee, has been abolished some years since. Not a day passes but what one can observe dead bodies of both sexes in a nude state, floating down the Hooghly river opposite Calcutta. I've seen them myself over and over again.

I will now speak briefly of the Parsees—Persian or Zoroastrean fire-worshippers. Their strong hold is in and about Bombay. About 12,000 are still in Persia, ardently desiring their emancipation from under the Persian yoke. The Parsees, unlike the other natives of southern India, are larger in stature with physical and mental faculties more fully developed—are more nobly endowed in many respects. They have greater business and go-a-head-a-tive characteristics than any of the natives, who are as a general thing diminutive, effeminate and drowish. The ways and manners of the Parsees put the beholder much in mind of the Jews, whose prominent pecuniary characteristic they are endowed with, for, as regards secular affairs—in amassing wealth, &c., they are perfect stereotypes. A "John Bull" editor once rightly observed that if the Parsees were endowed with a few more christian vices they would make good European citizens. They have particular veneration for the elements—air, fire and water. In them they think the Eternal power and existence of some all powerful being exists. These elements he uses as instruments to regulate to a certain extent the universe and the laws of nature, &c. Every evening the Mydon or green in Bombay, bordering on the sea shore, is almost covered with Parsees, a place to which they resort to reflect their very prolix and monotonous prayers, and perform other ceremonies in connection with which they use the sea water very freely. They keep a fire constantly burning in their houses, and should it inadvertantly become extinguished, they proclaim a feast, give alms, &c., which removes the divine displeasure their inadvertanlty had incurred. They scarce ever approach a fire, but with reverence, and won't cook over one without first making an obeisance, and they do not smoke because they think in so doing they would make an improper use of the element.

Parsees, like most all orientals, wear one kind of dress which is peculiar to their caste, and no other. Their topee or hat is a most uncouth affair, and is neither useful nor ornamental. In fact its glossy surface, with its unshady characteristic, being without a rim, setting upon the "summit of the cranium" from which the "capillary substance" is always removed like a glazed piece of stove-pipe, renders it, in my estimation, highly obnoxious and injurious, for it certainly must tend to impair the mental faculties, worn, as it is, in one of the most hot and unsalubrious climates in the world. Their cemetry or place for depositing their dead is a very singular affair. In creating such a place, they first dig a hole like unto a well of larger or smaller dimensions, over which is placed a grating, which slopes gradually to the centre like unto a platter. Around this well they build a high wall of masonry. Around the inner surface of the hole are fixed seats of masonry in which the dead are placed, with hands, arms, and legs folded in a peculiar manner, and in a state of primitive nudity, exposed exclusively to the sexton, the feathery tribes, and the elements, and are thus left for the birds to feast upon, and as they decay to run into the well. They have a peculiar way of ascertaining the merits of a deceased person, and his source into the Eternal world. One modus operandi is authentically given as follows:—After death—the clayey tenement is laid out, and a little cream or other delectable substance is daubed over his or her cheeks. A familiar dog is summoned and solicited to remove the same with his tongue. If he complies, the conclusion is the party's at rest, but if he refuses to do so after repeated solicitations, they come to a vice versa conclusion. The Parsees have some very able representatives in India. Sir Jamsetjee Jeejee bhoy, though once a "bottle wallá," a buyer and hawker of empty bottles, is one of the wealthiest men in all Hindoostan. This Oriental "gentleman" after receiving his Knighthood from Her Majesty, my present local Sovereign, sent her a present which could alone be of service in climates like that of India. I've heard it was a Palkee (a kind of letter)—a magnificent one. The Queen, desirous of reciprocating his kindness, sent him a pair of magnificent skates (?) as useless in India as a fifth wheel would be to a wagon. As the old gentleman is well advanced in years, they may be of service to him when he is called to slide from this terra firma into, I trust, a better world.

Well, so much on the manners, customs, and religious ceremonies of the natives of India. Notwithstanding the religious and other differences between the various oriental castes, they unite with their occidental and transatlantic brethren and castes or sects in the profound reverance and worship of that grand and most influential and popular god or idol, whose literal cognomen is mammon. With him they associate another deity, known by the name of Nonentity. At present he is without any functions common to those said to have been "made in his image" several centuries back. This grand personage has been for some time hermetically sealed or confined to a "topless" throne, tutuated in a heaven "beyond the bounds of time and space," but in reality he only exists in the minds of his infatuated wormmy worshippers. Were we to judge "all hands" by their infidel and atheistical acts and sayings, we could with propriety recommend to them the adoption of the following "creed," respectfully dedicated to all "unbelievers:"

"I believe that there is no God, but that matter is God, and God is matter; that it is no matter whether there is any God or not.

"I believe also that the world was not made; that the world made itself; that it had no beginning, that it will last for ever, world without end.

"I believe that man is a beast; that the soul is the body, and that after death there is no body nor soul.

"I believe there is no religion; that natural religion is the only religion; and that all religion is unnatural.

"I believe not in revelation; I believe in tradition and superstition; I believe in the Talmud; I believe in the Koran; I believe not in the Bible; I believe in Socrates; I believe in Epicure, in Confucius, in Mahomet, in Brahma, in Zoroaster, and in the Grand Lama; I believe not in Christ. Lastly, I believe in all unbelief."

A few words on the morals of India and the baneful influence of modern Christianity over the natives. It is a truth authenticated and established by the experience of every impartial local observer, that Christianity or civilization has had a sad influence over the morals of the natives of India. I am fully persuaded, and I speak from actual experience, that those natives, and more particularly native Christians, and those more immediately connected with Europeans under business and other associations, are at this time four fold more sunken in iniquity and degeneracy, than their progenitors were before the insinuation of Europeans into Hindoostan. Go even to this day into any of the towns and hamlets of India inhabited exclusively by natives, and where Christians and Christianity are unknown, and it is seldom you meet a public prostitute, or pass a house of disrepute, or other "gaudy sepulchre of departed virtue." It is also very seldom one meets an inebrious native, notwithstanding they exist in such incredable numbers. On the other hand, what do we see and hear while passing through the towns, cities, and cantonments occupied and governed by Europeans. Why scarce nothing but prostitution, inebriety, profanity and blasphemy, in some places even more prolificly than in places of equal population in Europe and America. Penury drives females, though naturally revolting to them, to sell themselves for a song to their "Christian brethren." And even this mere trifle is to them a source of greater income than the occupation of any other obtainable employment.

According to statistical reports about one-tenth of the European population of Calcutta are prostitutes. In many of the oriental shops and bazaars can be seen in bas relief pictures and wax figures of a most disgusting and revolting nature. These treasures, on which the raised and rising generation glut themselves, are manufactured by the ship loads in christian Europe and America, and shipped to India and elsewhere, it would seem for the express purpose of inducting the "heathen" into some of the mysteries and beastries of modern christianity and civilization. In Bombay prostitution is sustained by law, which obliges the keepers of houses of ill-fame to pay a tax to the Honorable East India Company. Some may think that I am ungenerous in not showing or giving the other side of the picture. But I regret to say that the other side is about as black as the other or opposite surface. When we look for real virtue, piety, and morality, they are not to be found. Pharisaic piety is about the only kind in market. To be sure, one could see and hear ministers, professing to expound the scriptures correctly, ascend their respective pulpits, sacerdotally encased, and with faces as long as that of Pat's "mother of rabbits," in a drawling, sanctified manner, read over their monotonous prayers, and pretend to portray some of the beauties of Holy Writ, but the people go away about as much enlightened and benefitted as when they went.

What a happy contrast exists between this damnable state of affairs and the order, virtue and beauty of Zion! where the adulterer and the accessor is punished with Mosaic severity, and where the laws, ecclesiastical and civil, are administered with divine exactness and impartiality.

To show the antipathy that exists in the minds of the natives towards christianity, I will just mention that in Calcutta the richer natives re-published, for gratuitous distribution, an Indian edition of Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason," and in Bombay the proprietors and actors of Grand Road Theatre caricatured christianity on the stage to a numerous native auditory, who manifested their gratification by eulogistic bursts of applause. The actors offered prayers to the Deity, observed the ordinances of baptism and confirmation, partook of the sacrament, read prayers with sanctified voice, gesture, and emphasis, and last though not least, as is customary, "passed round the hat."

With all the above wicked and irreligious deformity, the priests and officials, who, by their works and doings, actually encouraged, and, in some instances, practically observed almost every vice enumerated in the calander of infamy, were first to place their sanctified feet upon the neck of "Mormonism," by using their influence and laws against us. The farce—"Female Life Among the Mormons"—has long since found its way to India, and is, no doubt, in almost every public and private library. Several oriental editors were honest enough to condemn the thing at once. Such trash never has affected the truly honest, nor never will. It is well known that for a good many years past drafts of this kind have been prolific in the market, drawn and supported by half-saved, pharisaic, paltroonish, satanic emissaries, on public credulity, at the order of the emperor of this world. They are, however, all invalid for want of the stamp of common sense and truth, and have consequently uniformly been dishonored when presented to an honest, thinking man for acceptance. With so many rude negatives, you may readily imagine ours was an up-hill work, and it was not with much reluctance that we withdrew from that dark corner of God's footstool.

For one, I have been peculiarly blessed on my mission. I left home without one cent in my pocket, and have not to my recollection solicited a dollar from any man for my support or passages. I received, through the kindness of Capt. John F. Roundy, of the American ship Lancaster, a free first-class cabin passage from Bombay to Calcutta (49 days out), which would have cost me between £35 and £40 on an English vessel; and on my arrival in Calcutta, Capt. Zenas Winsor, without solicitation, voluntarily offered me a free first-class cabin passage to London, in the noble American clipper ship Viking (130 days out), which would have cost me on an English vessel £70 or £80. Thus hath the Lord dealt with me and opened up my way. Praise, honor, majesty, might, and dominion be ascribed to Him for His great condescending goodness towards His most humble servants and saints, for ever. Amen.

At the Birmingham Council, where I had the exquisite pleasure of meeting with a number of Zion's representatives. President O. Pratt deputed me to labor in the north of England, under my worthy pastor and brother, Henry Lunt; and in mutual co-operation with my brethren, I trust I shall in my weekness and humility be instrumental in the hands of God of doing a good work before returning to Zion, with whose hallowed hosts I desire to be found, both now and for ever more.

Feeling that I have transcended my bounds in being too prolific, I beg to conclude, with prayers and desires for your temporal and spiritual prosperity and happiness, and humble benedictions for all Israel. Amen.

Your brother and humble servant in the harness of truth,

AMOS M. MUSSER.

FOR THE MORMON.

Germany.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

CONTINUED.

As soon, however, as a general peace was re-established, the kingdom was at the Congress of 1815 in Vienna reduced to the territories of Upper-Lusatia, Misnia and Voigtland. Saxony is bounded on the south by Bohemia and Bavaria, on the west by the Russian dominions in Westphalia, on the east by the Marquisate of Lusatia, on the north by the Prussian possessions and the kingdom of Hanover. The principal towns are Dresden on the Elbe, Altenburg and Leipsic on the Pleisse. Dresden, with 90,000 inhabitants, is the capital of the kingdom and residence of the royal family. It is noted for its many literary and scientific institutions, among the many curiosities are the Chancery-house, containing a choice collection of excellent paintings, the Dutch and Japanese Palace, a large square building, the stately domes of which are rising amid groves and thickets, a great many manufactories in mirrors, tapestry, jewellry, porcelain, etc. Leipsic, with 80,000 inhabitants, has a celebrated University, and a great many literary and scientific institutions; it is noted for its very extensive trade, and has two great fairs, one at Easter, and one at Michaelmas, which are visited by more than 3000 merchants of nearly all European nations. There are also found upwards of 300 booksellers' shops, with a large number of printing offices, where books in all Oriental and Occidental languages are published. In 1631, Gustavus Adolphus defeated here the Imperialists under Tilly. Leibnitz was born here in 1646. In October 1813, the famous battle between the Allies and Napoleon I. was faught, in which the former were victorious. Population of Saxony is 3,000,000.

The kingdom of Bavaria is bounded on the north by the kingdom of Saxony, on the east by Bohemia and Austria, on the south by Tyrol, and on the west by the kingdom of Wurtenburg. It is divided in the eight provinces or circles of Ober-Main, Unter-Main, Regen, Rezat, Ober-Donau, Isar, Unter-Donau and Rhein. Area, 32,000 square miles. The principal cities are Munich or Munchen, Baireuth, Augsberg, Ratisbon, Hochstadt, where in 1704, the great battle of Blenheim was fought by the Duke of Marlborough. Nuremberg, Bamberg, Wurtzburg. Munich, on the Isar, is the capital of the kingdom, and residence of the royal family, is one of the finest cities in Germany, has a great many literary and scientific institutions. Lithography was first discovered here. Number of inhabitants, 100,000. Nuremberg or Nurnberg on the Pegnitz, was formerly a free imperial city under the protection of the German emperor, but by the treaty of Tilsit in 1807, it was given to Bavaria. It was once a most flourishing city, where sciences and fine arts were cultivated in the highest degree, but since being a Bavarian town, it is nothing but the shadow of its former self. It is from here that great quantities of toys, known both in England and America as Dutch toys, are exported. The soil is excellent and productive of every kind of European grain, even of Saffron, figs, lemons, oranges, etc. Population of Bavaria, 6,000,000.

The kingdom of Wirtemburg, or Wurtemberg, is bounded on the north by the duchy of Baden and Franconia, on the east by Bavaria, on the south by Lake Constance and the duchy of Baden, and on the west by the duchy of Baden. The principal towns are Stuttgart, on a plain, near the Neckar, capital of the kingdom and residence of the royal family, with 40,000 inhabitants; Ulm, on the Danube, is a fine and strongly fortified city, Hohenburg, Hohenzollern, etc. Wurtemburg, prior to 1805, was a duchy, at which time it was made a kingdom by Napoleon I. It is one of the finest, and most fertile countries in Europe, abounding in a great many natural advantages, it is excellent for raising cattle or every other kind of stock, on account of the beautiful pastures, it yields grain, fruits, and especially wine, of which large quantities are exported. Population 4,000,000. Area 7568 square miles.

The grand duchy of Baden, is bounded on the north by Franconia, in the kingdom of Bavaria, and Hesse-Darmstadt, on the east by Wurtemburg, on the south by Switzerland and Lake Constance, and on the west by the Rhine which separates it from France and Bavaria. The principal towns are Carlsruhe, in the forest of Hartwald, with 20,000 inhabitants, is the capital of the grand duchy and residence of the ducal family; Constance, on Lake Constance, is celebrated for the council of 1514, by which John Huss and Jerome of Prague were to be burnt. Freyburg and Villengen in Brisgau; Heidelberg on the Neckar with a celebrated university. Baden is one of the finest and most fertile countries in the world, and is celebrated for many mineral baths and Roman antiquities. Population 1,500,000. Area 5712 square miles.

The Hessian possessions are divided in those of Hesse-Cassel, Hesse-Darmstadt and Hesse-Homburg. Hesse-Cassel is bounded by Nassau, Hesse-Darmstadt, Bavaria, Hanover and Prussia. Area 4405 square miles. The principal towns are Cassel on the Fulda, with 25,000 inhabitants, is the capital of the state and residence of the Elector; Hanau on the Kintsig, with 16,000 inhabitants, near its junction with the Maine, is noted for the defeat of the Bavarian army in 1813 by Napoleon I., Marburg on the Lahn, and Fulda on the Fulda. Population 700,000. Area 4386 square miles.

Hess-Darmstadt, or the grand duchy of Hesse, situated near the Rhine, is divided into two distinct parts; the area of the north part is about 1930 square miles, the area of the south is 2000 square miles. Giessen, on the Lahn, with 10,000 inhabitants and a university, is the capital of the north part, Darmstadt, on the Darmstadt, with 20,000 inhabitants, is the residence of the grand duke and capital of the south part. The population of the whole territory is about 800,000. Hesse-Homburg, a small electorate, bounded by Nassau and the grand duchy of Hesse-Darmstadt, is governed by a younger branch of Hesse-Darmstadt. The capital is Homburg on the Lahn, 10 miles from Frankfort on the Maine; it is during the summer season the resort of the fashionable world of Germany; it has also a great notoriety for its gambling-houses. Area 154 square miles. Population about 40,000.

The grand duchies of Mecklenberg are bounded on the north by the Baltic, on the east and south by Prussia, and on the west by Holstein and Hannover. They are 135 miles in length and 80 miles in breadth. Up to 1592 Mecklenburg was governed by one prince, but in that year the duchy was, by the death of the sovereign divided between his two sons, of whom the eldest, took possession of the duchy of Mecklenburg Schwerin, and the younger of the duchy of Meckleburg-Strelitz. New Strelitz, with 6000 inhabitants, and Schwerin with 5000 inhabitants, both on beautiful lake, are the capitals of the grand duchies and the residence of the dukes. The area of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, is 4701 spuare miles. Population 550,000. The area of Mecklenburg-Streltz, is 1094. Population 100,000.

The grand ducal and ducal possessions of Saxony, embracing Saxe-Weimar, Saxe-Coburg, Gotha, Saxe-Meininghen and Saxe-Hildburghausen are bounded by Bavaria, Hesse-Cassel, Schwarzberg Sonderhausen, Reuss and the kingdom of Saxony. Area 3564 square miles. Population 830,000. The principal towns are Weimar on the Ilm, Coburg on the Itch, Gotha near the Lin, Meininghen, Hildburghausen, Eisenach on the Nesse at its junction with the Horsel; near by is the castle of Wartburg on a hill, noted for having been during the year 1521, Luther's place of refuge when persecuted by the papists, and there he did translate the Bible.

Braunschweig or Brunswick, a duchy, consists of several detached tracts, and is bounded by Prussia and Hanover. Area 1525 square miles. Population 250,000. The largest rivers are the Ocker, the Weser and Leyne. Braunschweig on the Ocker, is the capital of the duchy and residence of the ducal family, has 40,000 inhabitants. The country having mines and several medicinal springs, abounds in many physical advantages. The principality of Nassau is surrounded by the Prussian and Hessian dominions, has an area of 1736 square miles and a population of 400,000. The greater part of the country is woody and mountainous. Nasseu, on the Lahn is the principal town. The grand duchy of Oldenburg bounded on the north by the North Sea, on the east, south and west by Hanover, and has an area of 2470 square miles and a population of 300,000. It was a county up to 1772, when the emperor of Germany made Oldenburg a duchy. Oldenburg, the capital of the grand duchy, on the Hunte, has 7000 inhabitants. The duchies of Anhalt-Dessau, Anhalt-Bernburg and Anhalt-Koethen are bounded by Prussia, have an area of 989 square miles and a population of 170,000. The rivers are the Mulda and Saale. The principal towns are Dessau on the Mulda, near its junction with the Elbe, Bernburg on the Sale, and Koethen. The principality of Schwarzburg-Sondershausen is bounded by Brunswick, Saxony, Anhalt, Prussia and Saxe-Weimar, has an area of 396 square miles and a population of 60,000. Schwarzburg-Rudolphstadt is bounded by Saxe-Weimar, Meininghen, Reuss, Bavaria and Psussia. Area 366 square miles. Population 10,000. Sondershausen and Rudolphstadt on the Saale are the capitals.

The principalities of Hohenzollern Hechingen and Sigmaringen are bounded on the east by Bavaria and Wurtemburg, and on the south and west by Baden. Area 519 square miles. Population 70,000. Hechingen Sigmaringen and Hohenzollern are the principal towns, the latter is situated on a branch of the Neckar with a castle, the seat of the ancient counts, from whom come the kings of Prussia, the dominions of the Reuss Lobenstein and Greitz between the kingdoms of Saxony and Bavaria, the duchies of Saxe-Weimar Schwartzburg-Rudolphstadt, have an area of 688 square miles and a populatiou of 100,000. Greitz on the Elster, and Lobenstein are the principal towns. Schaumburg-Lippe, a small principality, is bounded on the north by Hanover, on the east and south by Hesse-Cassel. Area 205 square miles. Population 30,000. Buckeburg is the capital. The dominions of Lippe-Detmold are bounded by Prussia, Hanover, and part of Hesse-Cassel. Area 432 square miles. Population 80,000. Detmold on the Werre with 3000 inhabitants is the capital. The boundaries of the principality of Waldeck, are Prussia aad Hesse-Cassel. Area 455 square miles. Population 60,000. Corbach is the capital.

Hamburg, is the most important city of the Hanseatic league, is situated on the north bank of the Elbe, at its junction with the Alster, 78 miles from its mouth. The area of the territory is 149 square miles, population 170,000 of which 140,000 are living in the city. It is one of the wealthiest, finest and most elegant places of Europe. Some parts of the city have a beautiful scenery, especially where the Alster forms the lake before it reaches the city, and the fine basin within it, the Binnen Alster, and the large sheet of water surrounded by magnificent palaces, hotels which although private houses, have the appearance of royal residences. Between a long chain of buildings and the water are fine, gravelled walks, with double rows of trees. The city has a great many literary and scientific institutions, as for instance the town library containing more than 100,000 volumes. The rich burghers of Hamburgh own upwards of 300 vessels trading in all parts of the world. It is the residence of the representatives of foreign powers at the first city of the Hanseatic league. Cuthaven and Rutzebuttel on the entrance of the Elbe are small towns in the territory of Hamburg. The dominions of that fine city are situated between Hanover and the duchy of Holstein.

Bremen, between Hanover and Oldenburg, are divided by the Weser in the old and new towns. Area 67 square miles. Population 60,000. The city carries a considerable trade. As one of the curiosities of that place, I mention the principal church, the vaults under which have the property of preserving dead bodies from decomposition for many years. Lubeck, between Denmark, Mecklenburg and Oldenburg on the Trave, is noted for having been the head of the famous Hanseatic league made here in 1164. It has lost lately very much of its former renown as Germany'y greatest emporium. Area 142 square miles. Population 50,000. Frankfort on the Maine, on the confines of Bavaria, an inland-town, the houses of which are built in an antique style. It is the seat of the German Confederation and is noted for having been the place of election and coronation of the former kings of the Romans. It is one of the most important trading places in Europe, and has two great fairs every year. A great many historical events are connected with the city, out of the wars of 1759 and 1763 between the French and the Germans, and in 1848, it witnessed the bloody murder of Prince Lichnowsky and Gen. Auerswald, the Russian delegates at the German diet by an infuriated mob. The area of the whole territory is 91 square miles, and the population 60,000.

TO BE CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE Black Republicans had Speaker Banks on the Exchange steps of Wall street three weeks ago. The following week, the same day and hour, the Democrats had Ex-Governor Floyd, and of course the "American party" had last Friday afternoon Ex-Governor Washington Hunt. All three spoke well, are princes at the business, and said the best that could be said for each party. The meetings were orderly, no bones broken.

Dr. Kane left by the Baltic on Saturday for Liverpool. It is reported that this gentleman's visit to Europe is for the recovery of his health. Previous to his departure he declined a public dinner offered him by the citizens of Philadelphia. He will certainly be an honored guest in old England. Childs and Peterson of Philadelphia have just published his magnificent work, descriptive of his adventures in the Arctic regions.

On Monday the inhabitants of New York were on the qui vive from early morning till dusk. The Firemen had their third annual parade, which came off in grand style. The procession is estimated to have covered about five miles; it took one hour and a half to pass before the Mayor and the Heads of Departments of the City Council, Common Council, Chief Engineer, &c. The engines were magnificent, and the Firemen a fine set of brave looking fellows. There were several companies from neighboring States.

The Democracy here were jubilant on Wednesday, over the success of the Pennsylvania Buchanan State Ticket. Our neighbor, the Daily News, rejoices in the salvation of the Union. Everything is now all right—Pennsylvania has gone for Buchanan—and the White House is now certain. Well, it is a triumph worth jumping over, after the fears and labors of months.

Movements of President Pierce.

CONCORD, Oct. 8, 1856.

THE President left this city to-day at 10 o'clock, in the train for Portsmouth. It is his intention to sail in the Wabash for Washington to-morrow morning.

Railroad Extension.

BUFFALO, Oct. 10, 1856.

The Buffalo and Lake Huron Railroad is to be opened from Buffalo to Paris on the 30th inst.

Baltimore Riots—More Shooting.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 10, 1856.

It is now ascertained that during the election riots in this city on Wednesday, there were four persons killed, five dangerously injured, and fifty more or less hurt.

Three more shooting cases occurred here this afternoon. John Roach was shot in the thigh, on the corner of Baltimore and South streets, the shot being fired from a party of men in an omnibus. Roach is a member of the Empire Club, and his assailant, who escaped, is supposed to belong to one of the "American" clubs. To-night during a political quarrel at the fish market, between Peter Kelly and Hughes, a watchman, Hughes fired at Kelly three times, the ball on the last discharge penetrating Kelly's brain, causing immediate death. Hughes surrendered himself to the police, alleging that the act was committed in self-defense.

Serious Accident at Paterson, N. J.

PATERSON, Oct. 13, 1856.

An accident about 9 o'clock this evening at the Catholic Orphan Assylum, at which place they were holding a Fair for the benefit of the orphans. The room being crowded to excess the floor gave way, precipitating them into the basement beneath. No lives were lost, but a large number were seriously injured. There were at least twelve hundred in the room at the time. Great excitement prevailed.

Railroad Collision.

BUFFULO, Oct. 13.

The mail trail from Suspension Bridge to Windsor, over the Great Western road, came in collision with a cattle train near London early on Thursday morning. Several of the cars belonging to the cattle train were thrown down an embankment, killing twenty-five valuable cattle. The mail and baggage cars were driven through the forward passenger car attached to the mail train, but fortunately no lives were lost. During the confusion the mail and baggage cars caught fire, and with the mails, baggage and express goods, were entirely consumed.

Hon. C. M. Straub.

POTTSVILLE, Oct. 15.

The Hon. C. M. Straub was dreadfully cut and beaten last night in attempting to eject a party of Republicans from the Democratic rooms.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15, 1856.

The military and a large number of the citizens, with the marine band, gathered at the station to night, to receive the President. As the cars approached a salute was fired amid premature huzzas of welcome. A Committee of arrangements were ready to receive the President, who, however, did not arrive, for the reason, as stated by the Mayor of Washington, that the water was so rough off Annapolis that he could not land from the steamer Wabash. Secretary McCelland has returned to Washington.

Fillmore Demonstration at Boston.

BOSTON, Oct. 15.

The Fillmore torchlight procession this evening was a grand affair. It consisted of a numerous cavalcade; thirty-one illuminated stars, each borne by a female; transparencies, and about four thousand in the ranks, with numerous bands of music and fireworks. Various stores, buildings and offices were illuminated. It was the largest torchlight procession seen in this city for many years. Delegations were present from all the neighboring towns and cities, including a number of firemen in uniform.

Threatening Aspect of Affairs in Italy.

Demonstration of England and France against the King of Naples.

OUR Paris correspondent informed us yesterday, in the letter which appeared in our second edition, that the French government, unless some unforseen event occur, is about to recall M. Brenier and the whole of the Embassy from Naples. To this we may now add that a similar course will, we are enabled to state, be taken by the Queen's government. The whole of our diplomacy will be recalled from the Neapolitan Court. We shall send, as will the French, two line of battle ships and a corresponding force of frigates. These will be the representatives of the Alliance—these will protect the interests of the subjects of both Powers—through these alone will either communicate with the King. It will be seen from these facts that there is no doubt of the correspondent's statement. He goes on to add that the last despatches of the French diplomatist do not now hold out any hopes of an amicable settlement of the Neapolitan difficulties. In this assertion we are quite convinced that both he and the diplomatist are warranted by the truth. It is not likely that the unwise and cunning obstinacy which the King has always hitherto displayed, and in which he is supported by the few evil councillors on whom he leans, should leave him suddenly on the arguments of England and France. It is not likely that the doubtful mediation of Austria would change more than the words of that unhappy monarch, who is cursed with the domination of a country which God has made the fairest, and which his terrible misrule has made the most wretched, on the face of the earth. We believe, therefore, that there is no likelihood of a return to friendship between the Court of Naples and those of France and England. What part these great Allied Powers may be ultimately compelled to take in the settlement of Neapolitan and of Italian affairs remains to be determined.—[London Post, Sept. 20.

Letter Notice.

WE are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be udged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit. "'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là. dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses! Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu!

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence. ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lascivété, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour asquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

HORACE E. DIMICK & CO.'S
GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM,
FOR SHOT GUNS, RIFLES, PISTOLS, BOWIE KNIVES, AND SPORTING APPARATUS of every variety, is at
No. 42 Main Street, St. Louis, Mo., (at the Sign of the Deer in Windows.)
WE are now in receipt of our stock of Goods for the coming season, which enables us to say, that we have now in store, and for sale, the LARGEST and most COMPLETE assortment of Guns, Pistols, Sporting Apparatus, and Goods selected expressly for the arming of wagon trains, for crossing the plains, the markets of Santa Fe, Salt Lake, and Oregon, &c., that can be found in any HOUSE in the WESTERN COUNTRY!
Among the most staple articles now on hand, can be found upwards of 2,000 DOUBLE AND SINGLE SHOT GUNS; 2,500 MUSKETS AND UNITED STATES RIFLES, both new and second-hand, with flint or percussion locks; COLT'S REVOLVERS, of all sizes, ALWAYS on hand, in quantities to satisfy almost any demand, and at EASTERN PRICES. Also, all the most improved patterns of Revolvers and other Pistols now in use.
N. B.—We, the undersigned, being practical men in all matters appertaining to the arming and equipping of Emigrant and Merchant wagon trains for crossing the plains, renders our experience worthy of consultation, to make it the more easy for the emigrant and trader to supply themselves with the necessary articles, viz: FIRE ARMS, FIXED AMUNITION, PROVISIONS AND GROCERIES, of all kinds; Wagons, Tents, Horses, Mules, Oxen; in short, everything necessary for their comfort.
We also beg leave to call the attention of EASTERN HUNTING PARTIES, that wish to spend a few months on the plains, that we have all the necessary arms and equipments, and at prices as low as they can be furnished in any Eastern city.
We keep constantly on hand, (or make to order,) TARGET, HUNTING, and MINNIE RIFLES, which we guarantee to be superior to any in the country.
We also keep constantly on hand the CELEBRATED SHARP'S PATENT RIFLE, which is the safest and most destructive weapon ever invented, for sale at the Manufacturer's prices, for cash.
Please call and examine for yourselves, as it is no trouble for us to answer questions, or show goods.

Poetry.

Never Say Fail.

SELECTED.

Keep pushing—'tis wiser
Than sitting aside,
And dreaming and sighing
And waiting the tide.
In life's earnest battle
They only prevail
Who daily march onward
And never say fail!

With an eye ever open,
A tongue that's not dumb,
And a heart that will never
To sorrow succumb,
You'll battle and conquer,
Though thousands assail;
How strong and how mighty
Who never say fail!

The spirit of angels
Is active I know,
As higher and higher
In glory they go
Methinks on bright pinions
From heaven they sail,
To cheer and encourage
Who never say fail!

Ahead, then, keep pushing;
And elbow your way,
Unheeding the envious
And asses that bray;
All obstacles vanish,
All enemies quail,
In the might of their wisdom
Who never say fail!

In life's rosy morning,
In manhood's fair pride,
Let this be the motto
Your footsteps to guide;
In storm and in sunshine,
Whatever assail,
We'll onward and conquer,
And never say fail!

From the Deseret News, of Aug. 6th and 13th, 1856.

Twenty-Fourth of July Celebrations.

FORT SUPPLY.

The bugle sounded at sunrise, when the national flag was unfurled on the liberty pole. Capt. Cole and his rifle company fired a First Presidency salute, in commemoration of the pioneers entering G. S. L. Valley, July 24, 1847. Capts. Meeks and Sessions' bands discoursed sweet music.

At 8 a. m., the bugle again sounded, and the people convened at the Council House.

Col. George Boyd, marshal of the day, organized the procession as follows:

1. Capt. Wm. Meeks' and Martial band, in uniform, with banner, "Our Mountain Home."
2. Capt. Moroni Cole and his rifle company, with full mountain uniform, with banner.
3. Capt. Barney Ward and 24 young Indians, dressed in buckskin pants, blue shirts and moccassins, with banner, "We shall yet become a white and delightsome people."
4. Capt. Henry Sanderson and 24 young boys, in white shirts, blue pants, red sashes and straw hats, with banner.
5. Capt. John Sessions and serenade band in full uniform, with banner, "The Serenade band is always ready."
6. Capt. John Alger and 24 ladies in white, with blue sashes, wreathes of flowers and parasols, with banner, "We instruct our sisters of the forest."
7. Capt. James Young and 24 little girls in pink dresses, green sashes and straw hats decked with native flowers, with banner, "Let Virtue abound."
8. Chaplain and Committee of Arrangements, with banner, "Hear, Oh Israel."

The procession marched round the fort, called a halt, and were seated in the Council House.

The Marshal called the meeting to order. The assembly joined in singing, "The Spirit of God." Prayer by Myron Crandall, chaplain of the day.

Music by the brass band.

The Marshal called upon several of the brethren for addresses, which was responded to with the usual Mormon promptness and spirit. Capts. Alger and Ward addressed the Indians in their own language, explaining to them the nature of our celebration, the reason we came to the mountains, &c.

When they were through, Beziel, one of the Indians, said he wanted to talk. He arose and said he felt well to see grain growing on the Snake land, for their children could get bread to eat, also butter and milk. Before you came here our children were often hungry, now they can get bread and vegetables when not fortunate in hunting meat.

An Indian named John, said: I like to see wheat, potatoes, beets and peas grow, for it makes my heart feel good to see our children eating the bread you raise on the land. You treat us as friends; when we come to your houses hungry you give us something to eat. I am glad to see the good things you raise round the fort, for they did not grow before you came.

At 1 p. m., the procession again formed, marched to the large dinner tables and were seated. The way the Lamanites dispatched the potatoes, peas, beets, bread, meat, pies, cakes, puddings, custards, chickens, coffee, &c., was a caution. They said that they had never eaten such a good dinner before.

After dinner toasts were called for. Twenty-five gallons of home-made wine were prepared for the occasion by Bros. Lish and Bull.

Baziel and John said they wanted to drink toasts. Baziel said, I want you to live and never die, that you may raise plenty of the good things we have to eat to-day, for they make my heart feel good.

John said he had a toast for the ladies, saying it would make my heart feel good to see our women look like the white women.

At 5, meeting adjourned to 7.

At 7, the meeting was called to order, and cotillions, waltzes, contra dances, interspersed with songs, &c., were announced to be the order of the evening.

There was an intermission, when the assembly did ample justice to a good supper.

Dancing was again resumed, and the Indians joined in one of their native dances, accompanied by their own music.

At 1 a. m., the assembly was dismissed by Bro. John Alger, Pres. pro. tem.

Thus passed a day long to be remembered by the brethren and sisters of Green River.

Committee of Arrangements—William M. Thompson, Wm. Sterrit, Wm. Lish, A. Baker, J. Pulsipher, M. Landrus.

WM. M. THOMPSON, Reporter.

NORTH WILLOW CREEK.

Marshal of the day, H. D. Persons; Assistant, W. L. Gardner; Committee of Arrangements, T. R. Hawkins, M. W. Dalton, E. A. Williams.

At break of day the inhabitants were aroused from their slumbers by the roar of artillery.

At 5 a. m., the large ensign, 24 feet by 8, was unfurled from the top of the liberty pole.

The martial band, in a carriage, paraded through the principal streets, enlivening the morning air with strains of lively music.

At 8 1-2 the people assembled in the Bowery and organized.

At 9, an escort of mounted riflemen and the martial band, in a carriage drawn by 4 horses tastefully decorated, started out to meet the invited guests from Brigham city.

The procession formed on the public square, and marched out to meet the Box Elder company and escort.

After receiving the above named company, the procession marched to Bishop Hubbard's residence and received the authorities of the ward.

ORDER OF PROCESSION.

1. Martial band.
2. 6 young men, as front guard.
3. Authorities of the county.
4. Pioneer flag, entitled, "By union we stand."
5. 6 aged fathers, with banner, motto, "Heroes of '76."
6. 6 aged mothers, with banner, motto, "Mothers in Israel."
7. 6 young men in uniform, banner, motto, "Zion's bulwark."
8. 5 young ladies in white, banner, motto, "Pure love exalteth."
9. 6 small boys, banner, motto, "Hope of Israel."
10. 6 small girls, banner, motto, "Mountain blossoms."
11. String band, playing delightful music.
12. Willow creek choir, with banner, motto, "Zion's minstrels."
13. Two small boys carrying the Deseret Alphabet.
14. Two small boys carrying the Bible, Book of Mormon and Book of Doctrine and Covenants, with banner inscribed, "Truth will prevail."
15. Mormon Battalion, with banner, motto, "Ram in the thicket."
16. Rear guard, 6 riflemen.

After parading through the principal streets, the procession arrived at the Bowery, and were seated.

Singing by the choir.

Prayer by Bishop C. Hubbard.

Anthem by the choir.

Music by the Martial band. Oration, by Prest. L. Snow, on the celebration, union, &c. Music by the string band. Singing by the choir. Benediction by Bishop E. H. Pierce.

The procession re-formed and escorted the Bishop and suite to his residence, and returned to the Bowery and were dismissed.

At 1 1-2 the inhabitants and visitors sat down to dinner in the Bowery. The tables were loaded with luxuries, got up in a style that would have satisfied the palates of epicures. A table was also spread for the Sho-shone Indians, and nearly 50 of them partook of the bounties placed before them, much to their satisfaction and delight.

After dinner, Bishop A. Cordon offered up a thanksgiving prayer.

A number of toasts were read. Singing by the choir. Music by the Martial band.

Dancing commenced in good earnest, and was continued until sunset, interspersed with singing, &c. Intermission for one hour.

Bowery illuminated by lanterns. Dancing continued until a late hour in the night.

Good order was observed by every individual. A spirit of unity and delight filled the bosoms of all. The Bowery was ornamented with the fruits of the season, among which were noted several large mellons and a sheaf of millet.

The following are selected from a large number of toasts:

The Heroes of '76—We sustain the deeds of our fathers and teach them to our children.—S. W.

Settlers wanted in Box Elder county—None need apply but those who can stand the keen blast of a SNOW, the hammer of a SMITH, the dart of the PIERCES, the gauge of the WRIGHT, and the thunder of the Priesthood.

R. HENDERSON, Reporter.

NEPHI.

The inhabitants were aroused at the break of day by a salute from the cannon, under command of Lieut. M. Miller.

At 8 a. m., the escort was formed by James Picton, marshal of the day, and marched to Prest. Jacob G. Bigler's.

At 8 1-2, the President and his counsellors were received by the escort, and the cannon announced the unfurling the stars and stripes to the breeze.

The escort paraded through the principal streets, to a Bowery built for the occasion in the following order:

1. Advance guard, in charge of Lieut. T. S. Hoyt.
2. Military band, " " C. Sperry.
3. Choir, " " D. Webb.
4. 12 young gentlemen, " A. Woolf.
5. Presidency.
6. Patriarch and major of the district.
7. Committee of Arrangements.
8. Indian interpreter and reporter of the day.
9. 12 young ladies, in charge of J. Kienke.
10. 12 young boys, " L. H. Baxter.
11. 12 young ladies, " T. Tranter.
12. Rear guard, "Lieut. G. Spencer.

At 9 1-2, Marshal Picton called the assembly to order.

The choir sung "Salvation to our God."

Prayer by Patriarch W. Cazier.

Music by Sperry's band.

Prest. Bigler made a few cheering and appropriate remarks.

Major T. B. Foote delivered a short oration.

Music from the band.

Bros. Miller and Woolf addressed the Saints on the past and present.

Comic song by W. Kendall.

The marshal gave notice that the meeting would be dismissed to allow the tables to be set, and that at 2 p. m., the cannon, would announce the hour for dinner. Meeting dismissed by Prest. Bigler.

At 2 p. m., the entire population of Nephi sat down together to an excellent dinner.

The choir sung a song composed for the occasion, and Prest. Bigler asked a blessing.

At 3 p. m., the tables were cleared and dancing commenced. During the afternoon songs were sung by Messrs. Kendael and Evans, and toasts were read, among which were the follwing:

Prest. Brigham Young and Counsel—Three leading stars in the firmament—May their light continue to increase, until it spreads its benign influence unto the ends of the earth.—G. Kendall.

Nephi Presidency—God bless them.—S. Pitchforth.

Dancing was continued till a late hour. Peace and good will were the order of the day, all rejoicing in celebrating the blessings of our position.

Committee of Arrangements—John A. Woolf, G. Kendall, I. Hoyt.

TOOELE CITY.

At daylight, volleys of musketry. At sunrise, the Martial band traversed the city, cheering the citizens with lively strains of music.

At 7 1-2, a mamouth National flag was unfurled to the breeze, and saluted by a platoon of musketry, the signal for the people to gather.

At 8 1-2, the procession was formed by Eli Lee, marshal of the day, in the following order:

1. Capt. John Shield's brass and military band.
2. Military escort, commanded by Capt. Thos. Lee.
3. Presidency and invited guests.
4. Orator of the day and other speakers.
5. 12 aged fathers.
6. 12 aged mothers.
7. 12 young men dressed in white pants, red sash, and rosette.
8. 12 young ladies in white, blue sash, wreaths, and rosette.
9. School boys.
10. School girls.
11. Citizens.

Each division had banners with appropriate mottoes.

The procession, after marched through the city, repaired to the School-house.

Singing by the choir.

Prayer by Eld. Thomas Atkin, chaplain of the day.

Oration by Lysander Gee.

Speech by John Rowberry.

Speech by Ormus E. Bates.

Eld. Wm. Hyde, of G. S. L. City, was invited to the stand and addressed the assembly in a spirited manner.

Many toasts appropriate were given. Music at intervals, giving zest to the whole.

Dismissed by Eld. Alfred Lee, until 3 o'clock p. m, when they again assembled to enjoy a social dance, under the management of Messrs. Eli Lee and Richard Warburton. The room was beautifully decorated for the occasion. Happiness reigned in every breast, joy lighted every countenance, and all enjoyed themselves as only Saints can enjoy, and rejoiced that they were once more privileged with the opportunity of celebrating the day on which the Pioneers entered the valleys of the mountains and found a peaceful home for the Saints.

SCHOOL PARTY, HELD IN KAYSVILLE, DAVIS COUNTY, AUGUST 1ST, 1856.

The procession was formed at the school-house under the direction of Charles D. Evans, the schoolmaster, and Capt. Harris, at 2 p. m. and marched to the spacious Bowery, erected for the occasion, in the following order:

2 young men with a splendid flag, representing the bee-hive with an eagle perched on its top, the tiger immediately below, and underneath a scroll bearing the motto, "Ever prepared."

Musicians, under the charge of Major Wm. Pitt, of the Nauvoo Brass band.

Bishop's Counselors, Trustees, and Committee of Arrangements with a splendid banner, bearing the motto, "In Deseret we're free."

2 young men carrying a banner inscribed, "Defenders of right."

14 small boys with a banner bearing the motto, "Intelligence in embryo."

16 young ladies carrying a banner inscribed, "Daughters of Zion."

24 small girls bearing a banner with the inscription, "Our parents' delight in virtue."

Arrived at the Bowery at 3 o'clock.

Meeting was called to order by Eld. Charles D. Evans.

TOASTS.

The First Presidency—Lights shining in a high place that cannot be hid.—C. D. E.

The Committee of Arrangements—their motto is, "Order is Heaven's first law.—James Robins.

The Trustees—May their efforts to promote the cause of education be attended with unbounded success, and their names never be forgotten.—R. Knell.

The schoolmaster, Charles D. Evans—May his pupils ever copy his examples.—Edward Phillips.

Major Pitt—May he always hit on a tune that will fit.—Wm. Paine.

The young men—Champions of peace.—Jos. Hill.

The small boys—Fathers' hope and mothers' pride.—J. Greene.

Young ladies—May they never lack a lord.—H. Harris.

Young girls—Innocence and purity personified.—E. P.

Right education—The basis of moral, intellectual and physical developement.—Charles D. Evans.

Dancing until midnight.

Dismissed by R. N. Allred.

Much credit is due the trustees and Committee of Arrangements, for the tasteful manner in which they decorated the spacious Bowery, and also for the rich supper which they provided on the occasion.

All present seemed to participate freely in the enjoyments of the day and to do ample justice to the luxurious board. It is to be regretted that in consequence of the greatness of the number of songs, recitations, &c., we are prevented from inserting them.

We claim the indulgence of those who were present, for the omission on our part.

The utmost order prevailed throughout, and the company dispersed to their several homes, each declaring the party to be the best ever held in Kaysville.

Yours &c.,

ROBERT KNELL, Reporter.

Checked Perspiration.

Is the fruitful cause of sickness, disease, and death to multitudes every year. Heat is constantly generated within the human body, by the chemical disorganization, the combustion, of the food we eat. There are seven millions of tubes or pores on the surface of the body, which in health are constantly open, conveying from the system, by what is called insensible perspiration, this internal heat, which having answered its purpose, is passed off like the jets of steam, which are thrown from the escape pipes in puffs, of any ordinary steam engine; but this insensible perspiration carries with it, in a dissolved form, very much of the waste matter of the system, to the extent of a pound or two, or more, every twenty-four hours. It must be apparent, then, that if the pores of the skin are closed, if the multitude of valves, which are placed over the whole surface of the human body are shut down, two things take place. First, the internal heat is prevented from passing off; it accumulates every moment; the person expresses himself as burning up, and then large draughts of water are swallowed to quench the internal fire—this we call "Fever." When the warm steam is constantly escaping from the body in health, it keeps the skin moist, and there is a soft, pleasant feeling and warmth about it. But when the pores are closed, the skin feels harsh, and hot, and dry.

But another result follows the closing of the pores of the skin, and more immediately dangerous; a main outlet for the waste of the body is closed; it re-mingles with the blood, which in a few hours becomes impure, and begins to generate disease in every fibre of the system—the whole machinery of the man becomes at once disordered, and he expresses himself as "feeling miserable." The terrible effects of checked perspiration of a dog, who sweats only by his tongue, is evinced only by his becoming "mad." The water runs in streams from a dog's mouth in summer, if exercising freely. If it ceases to run, that is hydrophobia. It has been asserted by a French physician, that if a person suffering under hydrophobia can be only made to perspire freely he is cured at once. It is familiar to the commonest observer, that in all ordinary forms of disease, the patient begins to get better the moment he begins to perspire, simply because the internal heat is passing off, and there is an outlet for the waste of the system. Thus it is that one of the most important means for curing all sickness, is bodily cleanliness, which is simply relieving the mouths of these little pores, of that gum, and dust, and oil, which clogs them up. Thus it is also, that personal cleanliness is one of the main elements of health; thus it is that filth and disease habituate together, the world over.

There are two kinds of perspiration, sensible and insensible. When we see drops of water on the surface of the body as the result of exercise, or subsidence of fever, that is sensible perspiration, perspiration recognised by the sense of sight. But when perspiration is so gentle that it cannot be detected in the shape of water drops, when no moisture can be felt when it is known only by a certain softness of the skin, that is insensible perspiration, and is so gentle, that it may be checked to a very considerable extent without special injury. But to use popular language, which cannot be mistaken, when a man is sweating freely, and it is suddenly checked, and the sweat is not brought out again in a very few moments, sudden and painful sickness is a very certain result. What then checks perspiration? A draft of air while we are at rest, after exercise, or getting our clothing wet, and remaining at rest while it is so. Getting out of a warm bed, and going to an open door or window, has been the death of multitudes.

A lady heard the cry of fire at midnight; it was bitter cold; it was so near, the flames illuminated her chamber. She left the bed, hoisted the window, the cold wind chilled her in a moment. From that hour until her death, a quarter of a century later, she never saw a well day.

A young lady went to an open window in her night-clothes, to look at something in the street, leaning her unprotected arms on the stone window-sill, which was damp and cold. She became an invalid, and will remain so for life.

The great practical lesson which we wish to impress upon the mind of the reader is this:—When you are perspiring freely, keep in motion until you get to a good fire, or to some place where you are perfectly sheltered from any draft of air whatever.—[Hall's Journal of Health.

The New Tunneling Machine.

THE Alta California announces the triumphant completion of Steen's tunneling machine. The machine has cost the inventor $16,000 in bringing it to perfection. It consists of a fifty horse power engine, which works a large force-pump for compressing cold air through an India rubber tube into the tunneling machine, which is kept in motion by no other agent than the air thus conveyed. The cutters are circular pieces of steel, ten inches in diameter and half an inch thick, attached to a bell-crank and wheel, which, slowly revolving, swings the cutters against the rocks and the macine feeds itself into the hill as fast as it cuts away. The tunnel it opens, is six feet in diameter, and being a perfect circle, the arch is very strong; and no matter what its length may be, but little artificial support is needed. It is expected to cut one foot per hour in hard rock, and it is to be at once employed in the mines. The Alta California adds:

It is strictly a California discovery and one of the most remarkable of the age. Besides supplying the desideratum required in quartz mining, it establishes a new principle in science. According to estimates frequently made about $15,000,000 were expended in tunneling during the year 1855; but the results were comparatively unimportant. Steam machines were introduced, but when any distance was reached, the steam condensed so rapidly that it lost all power, and the machinery was thrown aside. But Mr. Steen's invention is entirely different. The steam boiler and engine are stationed above ground, and the tunneling apparatus is influenced by nothing save the inexhaustible stream of cold atmosphere forced upon it. We expect to hear very soon that this wondrous improvement has wrought out millions of treasure from the mountains of the State.

Heinrich Heine's Opinion of London.

I HAVE seen the greatest wonder which the world can show to the astonished spirit; I have seen it—and am still astonished—and still their remains fixed in my memory the stone forest of houses, and amid them the rushing stream of faces of living men with all their motely passions, all their terrible impulses of love, of hunger, and of hatred—I mean London. Send a philosopher to London, but for your life, no poet! Send a philosopher there, and stand him at the corner of Cheapside, where he will learn more than from all the books of the last Leipsic fair; and as the billows of human life roar around him, so will a sea of new thoughts rise before him, and the Eternal Spirit which moves upon the face of the waters will breathe upon him; the most hidden secrets of social harmony will be suddenly revealed to him, he will hear the pulse of the world beat audily, and see it visibly—for, if London is the right hand of the world—its active mighty right hand—then we may regard the route which leads from the Exchange to Downing street as the world's pyloric artery. But never send a poet to London! This downright earnestness of all things, this colossal uniformity, this machine-like movement, this troubled spirit in pleasure itself, this exaggerated London, smothers the imagination and rends the heart. And should you ever send a German poet thither—a dreamer, who stares at everything, even a ragged beggar woman, or the shining wares of a goldsmith's shop—why, then, at least he will find things going right badly with him.—[Pictures of Travel, translated from the German of Heinrich Heine.

The Negro and the Needle.

IT is not generally known that in the early progress of the needle manufacture we are indebted to the negro. The earliest record of needle making in this country is in the year 1545, in the reign of Henry VIII., and it is supposed that this useful branch of industry was introduced by a Moor from Spain. The historian Stowe tells us that needles were sold in Cheapside, and other busy streets in London in the reign of Queen Mary, and were at that time made by a Spanish negro, who refused to discover the secret of his art. Another authority states that the art of making steel needles was lost at the negro's death, but was afterwards revived by a German in 1566. Probably these facts may account for the crest of the needle maker's coat of arms being the head of a negro.—[History of Needle Making.
